> Improvements of rivers and harbors should not be made unless sufficient assurance is given that proper wharf terminals and necessary adjuncts to navigation shall be furnished by municipal and private enterprises, and charges for their use should be reasonable.

I ask whether, in each case, the committee has such assurance?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. In each case the matter has been carefully considered and assurances have been given that that matter is being carefully looked after. We have not, however, regarded it as wise policy to condition every improvement.

Mr. PARSONS. Let me say that I think that condition is most important and should be insisted upon. In New York one of the difficulties with our water front has always been that the railroads gobble up every bit of water-front property that they can get. When a pier is to be leased or any water-front lots are to be leased, some railroad always applies for it.

If in the city of New York the water front was leased to the highest bidder, it would all be leased to the railroads. The policy of the city has been not to lease to the highest bidder, but to distribute the water front as fairly as it could, so that the people in water navigation might have a fairer show than if the leases were left to the highest bidder. I very much fear that if this committee does not get assurances in each case they will find that in a great many cases the railroads will own the property and do away with the great advantages that might come from improvements that the bill contemplates.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I will say that wherever the question has come up and been deemed of importance by the committee the condition has been put in.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I understood, although I do not find it in the report of the Waterways Commission, that the commission thought that in order to make the waterways of real value something would have to be done to regulate the rates of railroad transportation that were in competition with the waterways, and that unless that is done the railroad competition was likely to be such that it would cut rates for a time, so as to make the waterways useless to those who are transporting freight.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. The National Waterways Commission recommended that Congress should pass an act making a minimum rate—the majority did—in order to prevent railroads from ruining river lines.

Mr. PARSONS. Well, unless that is done, does my colleague believe that when this great improvement of the Mississippi is made there will be an amount of commerce on the Mississippi sufficient to warrant the expenditure?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I do, indeed.

Mr. PARSONS. Even if that legislation is not passed?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. And I believe——

Mr. PARSONS. Even if the legislation establishing a minimum rate is not passed, my colleague believes that?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes. It would be a great rate regulator.

Mr. PARSONS. I want to find what the real reason for the appropriation is. Is it as a rate breaker or is it because the commerce is sure to come even if the legislation providing for a minimum rate is not passed?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Speaking for myself, it is because I believe a great commerce is sure to come.

Mr. PARSONS. What precedent has my colleague for that belief?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. None whatever on the Mississippi River, because it never has had a permanent improved channel; and until it does, navigation and commerce can not be carried on to advantage or profit.

Mr. PARSONS. I thought that what the commission found in European waterways was that unless there was some governmental control over the railroad transportation in competition with the waterway transportation, the waterways would not be made use of. Was not that what the commission found?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. No; it did not find anything to that extent.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask my colleague a question. I was interested in his statement about the magnificent depth of water from Jefferson City to Gasconade.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes; a stretch of about 45 miles.

Mr. PAYNE. With a 14-foot channel?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. Do any boats travel on that part of the river?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes; it had a fleet of steamers three years ago. A company is now being organized with $1,000,000 of capital for putting another fleet on simply as freight carriers.

Mr. PAYNE. What became of this fleet of three years ago?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. One boat was sunk by hitting a snag. After payment of losses the company went out of business. Commerce can not thrive until permanent improved channels invite insurance companies to insure freight.

Mr. PAYNE. Then the insurance companies will not come in and insure the freight on this 14-foot channel?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Not on the Missouri. That is a stretch of only 45 miles. It is 391 miles from Kansas City to the mouth.

Mr. PAYNE. They will not do it on the stretch of 45 miles with a 14-foot channel, and what assurance has the gentleman if he extends that up the river that the insurance companies will come in and insure on 14-foot water?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. What the best business men of Kansas City say. If the channel was permanently improved from Kansas City to the mouth of the Missouri, as is that reach from Jefferson City to Gasconade, the insurance companies would insure the freight.

Mr. PAYNE. Of course, these best business men in Kansas City are interested witnesses.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. But nevertheless truthful.

Mr. PAYNE. Why, of course; but their evidence may be colored by their desire, however truthful they may be. Very good men, even Members of Congress, are subject to that weakness of human nature. In my earlier and younger days I was here when the Hennepin Canal bill was passed. I want to inquire of the gentleman if he has ever heard of even a rowboat running over that Hennepin Canal?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I will answer that the Hennepin Canal was commenced many years ago, while Mr. Henderson was in Congress from Illinois as the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. It has recently been finished. I was told that the day it opened freight on coal per bushel fell from 11 cents to 9 cents, and remains at that amount to this day.

Mr. PAYNE. And none has been carried on the canal.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I do not know how much has been carried, but I know that was the fact.

Mr. PAYNE. I know that a man who resides in that locality has stated that none has been carried——

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. But it has been reduced 2 cents per bushel on coal.

Mr. PAYNE. But does the gentleman know anything about how much coal that reduced 2 cents a bushel on? Will the gentleman strike a balance, so we may know whether the people of the United States have got as much out of it as the United States Treasury put into it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is the difference in the price of a ton of coal at 2 cents a bushel?

Mr. PAYNE. Well, 2 cents a bushel makes——

Mr. FITZGERALD. But what would the difference in the cost of a ton of coal be?

Mr. PAYNE. That would be 56 cents a ton.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, if there are no further questions, I will yield to Mr. KÜSTERMANN——

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York a question. I would like to say to the gentleman, while I am in hearty accord with his views in respect to the improvement of the western waterways, I would like to know what reasons the gentleman and his committee have to assign to the commercial interests of Pennsylvania, and the arraignment to which you have been subjected to for many years, for your failure to properly improve the Delaware River so that men-of-war and the commerce of this and other nations will reach the city of Philadelphia?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. As chairman of the subcommittee on surveys in 1909 I was instrumental in having a survey for the Delaware River, giving it a 35-foot depth. Unfortunately, the report has not yet been before the committee. Had it come in in time the Delaware River would have received its deserts.

Mr. FOCHT. Out of these two or three hundred million dollars, why is it the Delaware River, one of the greatest shipping points in the Western Hemisphere, gets less than half a million dollars?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. The reason why is your new project has not yet been reported by the engineers, but the $450,000 you get is for widening and deepening of bends, which is a part of the new project when it comes into the 35-foot depth, and the Delaware River, under the circumstances, is faring just as well as it was possible for the committee to do. You have $100,000 a year for maintenance and $450,000 for deepening and widening the bends.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I intended to ask the gentleman in regard to that when we reached it in the reading of the bill under the five-minute rule.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 15816. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved February 20, 1907.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 1981. An act to amend section 1 of an act approved January 30, 1897, entitled "An act to prohibit the sale of intoxicating drinks to Indians, providing penalties therefor, and for other purposes;"

S. 1105. An act for the relief of the legal representatives of William W. Miller, deceased;

S. 3544. An act to grant right of way over the public domain in the State of Arkansas for oil or gas pipe lines; and

S. 5836. An act to amend section 1, chapter 209, of the United States Statutes at Large, volume 27, entitled "An act providing when plaintiff may sue as a poor person and when counsel shall be assigned by the court," and to provide for the prosecution of writs of error and appeals in forma pauperis.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KÜSTERMANN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida is entitled to the floor——

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. But the time has been taken up so much that I can only yield him fifteen minutes.

Mr. KÜSTERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I will ask right now that I be given thirty minutes, that my time be extended. I am going to give you something of great value. [Laughter.] That is true. I ask that I be given at least twenty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time is in the control of the gentleman from Florida, and the gentleman has twenty-five minutes remaining.

Mr. SPARKMAN. We have only two hours of general debate, and I understand I have twenty-five minutes remaining, and I have two or three gentlemen on this side who desire to speak for a few minutes, and I think probably each could get through in five minutes; perhaps that can be done, and I would like, if it is in order, that the time for general debate be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order, as the time for general debate was fixed in the House.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I would like to retain at least ten minutes of time, and the balance to go to the gentleman from Wisconsin, so far as I am concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida yields fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KÜSTERMANN].

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution and bills of the following titles:

H. J. Res. 78. Joint resolution changing the title of the sealer of weights and measures of the District of Columbia to superintendent of weights, measures, and markets;

H. R. 16328. An act for the extension of Franklin street NE. from its present eastern terminus east of Twenty-fourth street to the Bladensburg road;

H. R. 16329. An act to provide for the extension of Newton place NW. from New Hampshire avenue to Georgia avenue, and to connect Newton place in Gass subdivision with Newton place in Whitney Close subdivision;

H. R. 16336. An act authorizing certain changes in the plan for the permanent system of highways for that portion of the District of Columbia lying west of Rock Creek Park, north of Klingle road, east of Connecticut avenue, and south of Ellicott street NW;

H. R. 11989. An act to provide for the removal of present grade crossing and construction of a new grade crossing on the line of Q street NW., District of Columbia; and

H. R. 16324. An act to authorize the extension of Park place NW.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. KÜSTERMANN. Mr. Chairman, other engagements prevented me from taking part in the Mississippi trip undertaken by the President and a number of Senators and Congressmen, but I am as deeply interested in river navigation as anyone who went along.

Part of my summer vacation was spent in reading and studying the report of over 1,000 pages prepared by the Board of Engineers, and I must say that of the many government reports on various subjects which I read during the few years I have been in Congress, I found none prepared with greater care and thoroughness.

The trend of this report is not to have the Government rush into great expenses without knowing whether the work to be accomplished and the good to be derived therefrom will justify the outlay of millions—yes, ultimately of billions—of dollars.

There are in the United States 295 navigable rivers, of a total length of 26,400 miles.

To improve all of these rivers and make them an equal depth—well, say, 14 feet—would throw this country into a debt that would never be wiped out.

The enthusiasts, however, tell us that the entire work must eventually be done, but at the present time they, being mostly interested in the Mississippi, are satisfied to have this one great river given a depth throughout of 14 feet, the cost of which, from St. Louis to New Orleans, is figured at $128,600,000, and its annual maintenance $6,500,000.

The Board of Engineers is of the opinion that the ends of commerce will be as well served by a 9-foot channel as by one of greater depth, only to be attained and maintained later at an enormous expense.

Even a depth of 9 feet is much greater than many of the navigable European streams, on which millions and millions of tons of freight are carried every year.

The Rhine, with an average depth of 6 feet, is burdened every year with over 20,000,000 tons of freight. On the Elbe, with an average depth of 4½ feet, last year's trafic was 8,500,000 tons.

The Volga, in Russia, with an average depth of 8 feet, served for the transportation of 14,000,000 tons last year.

The people of France, Russia, Austria, Germany, and other countries are making excellent use of their rivers, while most of them might be called shallow as compared with many of the rivers in the United States.

The average depth of the Mississippi from St. Louis to New Orleans is about 9 feet, and the average depth of its entire 2,500 miles is 6 feet, a much greater average than that of the leading streams in Europe.

Over in Europe the boats are made to conform to the existing river channels, while here we want to dig channels to conform to the needs of deep draft ships.

No matter whether you have ships of 6 or 12 feet draft, transshipment from one water carrier to another will be necessary unless you carry out the wild idea of 24-foot channels all through.

It would be less expensive to build a tower high enough to touch the moon than to carry out this gigantic project, as it was, in all earnestness, proposed by one of our former colleagues.

The tendency on European rivers and canals is to seek economy of freight transportation by towed barges rather than by self-propelling boats.

On the Belgian waterways draft barges of from 1,000 to 1,200 tons are mostly in use.

On the Elbe, in Germany, more than 5,000 barges of from 500 to 1,500 tons are found most economical.

On the Rhine the millions of tons of freight every year are mostly carried by barges, in groups of two to five, holding about 3,500 tons each, and being of 460 feet in length and 47 feet in breadth.

These barges, whether of wood or steel, are so built that the cargo hold can be opened wide to the sky, and from or to every part of it swift hoisting machines can lift or drop in their cargo.

The steam towboats which draw these barges are generally of two types—stern and side wheelers.

The stern-wheelers are long, low, steel vessels, having at the stern two low, broad wheels, one at either side, sheltered under a curving deck. The wheels are of steel, mounted with feathering blades, so that they drive without pounding, and are turned at a very high speed by triple-expansion engines of the most modern type.

The side-wheelers also are low and of steel, having amidship feathering wheels broader than the whole width of the hull.

These towboats—stern and side wheelers—are of about 1,400 horsepower and go upstream at a fair speed with 5,000 tons of cargo dragging behind them.

On European rivers no attempt is made to combine passenger and freight traffic, while on the Mississippi the old-style combination boats, with neither the desired carrying capacity for freight nor the necessary comfort for passengers, are still in vogue. Their overtowering upper decks prevent the introduction of freight into the hold, except by rolling or carrying it over the gang plank—a very expensive way of handling freight and causing long delays and discomfort for the passengers.

On the upper Danube freight is carried in barges of 650-ton capacity at six-tenths of a cent per ton-mile, which is considered a low rate on European rivers. That with proper equipment for river navigation we can do as well and better in the United States is evident from the fact that coal is shipped from Pittsburg to New Orleans in barges of 8 feet draft at three hundred and seventy-six one-thousandths of a cent per ton-mile—a little over one-third of a cent per ton-mile. The average ocean freight in ships of 21-foot draft is thirty-five one-hundredths of a cent per ton-mile—just a trifle less than that shipped on barges on the Mississippi.

Now, what enables the coal companies to ship coal on the Ohio and Mississippi rivers at such a low rate? Simply the fact that they have proper terminals and proper machinery to load and unload their coal at a minimum cost.

I doubt whether the cost of transportation would be lessened the least part of a cent if the 14-foot project were carried out and barges of 12-foot draft, instead of 8 feet, be used. Certainly not a sufficient deduction in transportation would result to warrant the great expenditure of a 14-foot channel.

The low rate on coal from Pittsburg to New Orleans because of proper carriers and efficient way of handling shows that not a deeper waterway is needed but that the right kind of barges and tugs are needed, as also suitable havens, docks or quays, warehouses, connections with railroads, and proper equipment for loading and unloading ships, for placing freight in storerooms or transporting it to or from railroads.

All of this equipment, the same as in European cities bordering on navigable rivers, should be owned by the cities, the same charging a sufficient fee per ton for handling, to cover the interest on the investment, and a small surplus every year to pay toward the original cost.

While many years may pass until the debt so contracted is wiped out, the time will come when all the bonds issued for this purpose, and easily marketable, are taken up.

The shippers, shipowners, and the cities of Europe are greatly benefited by these terminals, and while the first cost has been great it is eventually paid back without asking a single taxpayer to contribute.

A late article on this subject, which appeared in one of our magazines, speaks of the many river ports in Germany as follows:

> The haven consists of a dredged basin, surrounded by a dike to protect it against floods, and within the dike and upon a vertical quay wall that extends along one side is a warehouse for the safe storage of freight—a public warehouse. Through a gateway in the dike enters a line of railroad track, which runs along the quay between the water and the freight house, and in front of this are mounted two cranes, a hand-crank hoist and a large steam or electric crane, all of which belong to the public.
> When there is a boat to unload the cover of the hold is stripped off and the crane from above catches up in turn each bale or bundle, hoists it to the quay, and swinging, lowers it either into a railway van or upon a tram car, which bears it into the warehouse.
> As a contrast to this easy mode of handling freight, the writer refers to the port of Montgomery, on the Alabama River, which is as deep as any river in Germany and flows as gently to the ocean. What little freight was brought to Montgomery was carried by sweating negroes over a gang plank and dumped in the mud at the foot of a 60-foot bank, from which point the boxes were teamed up the steep hill, a costly and inefficient method.
> Later on a warehouse was built at the top of the bank with a sliding carriage or elevator, on which ordinary freight was conveyed up into the warehouse.
> This was an improvement over the old method, but how much better it would have been to follow the example set by cities in Europe located on navigable rivers. There, instead of the sliding railway, they would have built out from the top of the bank a steel framework, well grounded below, on which one or more electric cranes would have awaited cargo to be swiftly swung into the wagon, warehouse, or freight car.
> The most remarkable thing is that these electric hoisting machines seen in every European river port are of American make, manufactured in the United States, and but seldom made use of along our own rivers.

How much time and money is saved by the installation of proper machinery for handling freight to and from the river is best seen in Duisburg on the Rhine, a great shipping point for coal. In the old days coal came in railway cars, was shoveled by hand into carts, wheeled to the quays and tipped into boats. With this method it cost $200 to load a barge with 1,000 tons. They then tried grab buckets, and managed to reduce the cost to $150 for 1,000 tons. To meet the keen competition at other ports, an American hoisting apparatus was next installed, which picks up a coal car and turns it bottom up over the open hatch. With this machine it costs but $25 to load 1,000 tons, a great saving in spite of the large investment. At this one port there are now handled more than 15,000,000 tons a year, more than the entire traffic of the Ohio and Mississippi, if we except the transfer ferries in the St. Louis harbor.

If the city of St. Louis, instead of always begging more water of the Government, would have proper means for handling its present river traffic, it would soon be made the distributing point for millions and millions of tons of freight coming from the West, going to New Orleans and the Gulf and the outer world, and from New Orleans to be sent out all over the West.

Instead of having facilities for ready transfer of freight from and to railroads, the merchandise to be sent out by water is teamed by mules down to the river and is dumped upon the levee, from where it is carried by hand or on trucks aboard the wharf boat or upon the deck of a steamboat. Freight that comes by water must be laboriously dragged up the levee and distributed by wagon.

New Orleans is luckier than St. Louis in owning its own water front, the quays and the railway along them, also some warehouses for ocean freight; but it owns not a single piece of modern transshipping machinery nor any facilities to keep from exposure to the weather the barrels of sugar, the bales of cotton, and other merchandise waiting to be shipped on river boats.

"More water" is the cry of both St. Louis and New Orleans, while already they have too much water for the proper handling of what is shipped in and out.

The St. Louis river traffic in 1890 was 600,000 tons and only 89,000 tons in 1906. No wonder that, with the antiquated facilities for transferring and handling freight, the traffic has dwindled down to almost nothing.

Let all the cities from the Lakes to the Gulf understand that terminal facilities, docks, warehouses, and so forth, form the key to the practical availability of free waterways, and upon the control of these terminals depends the possibility of effective competition.

The communities or municipalities must own public docks and terminals, and the fees should only yield enough to pay the expense of maintenance and a small annual surplus above the interest on the investment.

Excessive dockage charges by private individuals along the Ohio, the most important commercial river in the United States, have frequently caused steamboats not to land at small towns, thus depriving them of the advantage of water competition.

The cities in the United States have so far been very neglectful in providing and owning wharfs and equipments for handling and transferring freight.

They have allowed the best and the most suitable dock properties to get into the hands of private parties and railroad companies, who by excessive charges impede the free use of waterways or stand in the way of water competition.

Chicago owns no public landing place, and all its water fronts, if not controlled by railroad interests, are private property. The lake front in Chicago, opposite the business section, is entirely owned by the Illinois Central Railroad.

The same condition as in Chicago exists in Buffalo, Cleveland, Norfolk, Mobile, Oakland, Pittsburg, St. Louis, Vicksburg, and many other places in the United States bordering on water, thus precluding all water shipments unless sanctioned by the private or corporate owners of the terminals.

At Chesapeake Bay the Pennsylvania Railroad Company absolutely controls the steamboat traffic. In other places powerful steamboat companies own the dock properties, and it is impossible for tramp vessels to obtain landing privileges. Even in New York the number of open piers is entirely inadequate to the demand, and the long-term dock leases make it impossible to increase the number of these piers.

The use of canals has steadily been decreasing.

Up to 1855 the traffic in New York canals was more than twice that of railroads; in 1872 about one-third, and now only 3 per cent of the railroad traffic. The total canal traffic declined from 16,000,000 tons in 1880 to 6,000,000 tons in 1906.

Right here it might be of interest to know that, in all, 4,500 miles of canals have been constructed in the United States, of which 2,444 miles, costing over $80,000,000, have been abandoned, which ought to teach us the lesson that it is unwise to rush into a similar enterprise without fully weighing results and without comprehensive plans.

Several of the remaining canals, instead of being maintained in the interest of all that wish to make use of them, are now entirely under the control of railroads.

It is officially stated that waterway improvements undertaken by a number of States increased the debts of these States from $13,000,000 to $100,000,000. Extravagant hopes led some of these States to undertake works beyond their resources and too expensive to yield expected returns.

This, too, ought to be a lesson to the Representatives of the United States.

Let us not be carried away by enthusiasts, who are perfectly willing to throw our good country into a debt that it could never extricate itself from—who do not consider that even to pay the annual interest on a billion or more dollars would greatly embarrass our country—who have but vague ideas of the benefits to be derived, but who think foremost of the money that will come to their localities when thousands upon thousands of workmen will be sent into the now sparsely settled country along the Mississippi and other rivers.

Along the Mississippi between St. Louis and New Orleans there is only one city of more than 15,000 inhabitants and but six over 5,000. Of manufacturing establishments, there are but few; there are no mineral deposits on its banks, and but few agricultural products raised.

Just think what a boost it would give to the merchants of that territory, and especially to the landowners, if an army of workmen were thrown into their territory, to remain there for years, and to spend the untold millions coming from the United States Treasury.

I fully understand the feelings in this matter of those who will be directly benefited, but I am not ready to give my consent to throwing the United States into an expense greater than the cost of all the wars we ever fought, even adding to it the millions of pensions we part with to our brave soldiers; I am not willing to sanction an expense to which, in course of time, my own State will have to contribute many millions.

I am not prepared to support a measure contemplating a 14-foot channel from the Lakes to the Gulf when our government engineers, upon a most thorough and exhaustive study of the subject, requiring several years of ardent work, tell us in their final report that the present depth, or a 9-foot depth throughout, with proper revetments, will answer all present and future requirements of commerce.

The Board of Engineers, in their report, conclude by saying:

> The board is of the opinion that the development of the waterways of the Mississippi Valley into a harmonious system will be of great value to the country, but the Ohio Valley has been, and probably will continue to be, the line of greatest commerce; and the probable demands of the commerce, present and prospective, can be adequately met by a channel of 9 feet in depth between Chicago and Cairo, of dimensions similar to those proposed for the Ohio River, a project which requires no violent change in existing methods of improvement and which will not necessitate the diversion from the Great Lakes of a water supply which will injuriously affect the channels through which its immense commerce passes.

I am ready and willing to support a measure having for its purpose the carrying into effect the conclusions of the Board of Engineers, also approved of by Gen. W. L. Marshall, the efficient Chief of Engineers.

However, before an appropriation for even this purpose is made available, the cities along this water route, at least those of 5,000 or more inhabitants, should agree to build and maintain public landing places and an equipment necessary to load and unload the boats, and to make the transfer from water to railroad or vice versa.

What is the use of our beautiful rivers if to make use of them or even to approach them you can only do so by the grace of private parties or railroad corporations, whose interest it is to prevent goods being shipped by water if such means competition with their railroad lines?

No real competition in the rates of rail and water transportation will ever be seen until you make the two interests entirely independent of each other, which can only be done, as is done in European cities, by the public owning the connections between rail and water.

I am thoroughly convinced that there will be no real and honest competition between transportation by rail and water until the connecting link, the key to the situation, is in the hands of the people and not owned by several interests.

This being the case, the United States Government should not hereafter appropriate any moneys for the building and improvement of harbors and waterways until the cities directly interested in such improvements agree to provide and maintain public piers and proper terminal facilities.

To show you that I am ready to live up to my preachings, I will say that, before asking for an appropriation for a certain harbor in my district, I induced the city council to agree to provide for a dock, warehouse, equipment for loading and unloading, good wagon roads to the harbor, and railroad tracks. The appropriation asked for is contingent upon the city carrying out its promise to own and maintain proper terminals.

If this had been done with all appropriations made by the Government for river and harbor improvements, amounting in all to $250,000,000 up to date, we would now have real and live competition in rail and water transportation instead of sham competition, as we have it now.

Let me say that I am not at all troubled over the resolution adopted at the convention held at New Orleans, which reads:

> We hereby pledge ourselves to support no candidate for public office who will not unqualifiedly indorse and maintain our policy—a 14-foot channel through the valley.

Nothing will be accomplished through such threats, and no one influenced by it should ever hold a seat in the United States Congress.

We all know the importance of utilizing our waterways, but when we have it on the best authority that with the proper kind of vessels and up-to-date methods and by spending a reasonable sum for revetments and minor improvements, the rivers can be made strong rivals of our railroads, the demand for deep waterways, costing billions of dollars, should cease.

The policy of issuing bonds, except in cases of great emergency, is wrong in principle. If we adopt the policy of paying for public improvements by issuing bonds, instead of paying for them as we go with the proceeds from taxation, all restraint will be gone. It will mean a perpetual public debt and an interest charge that will consume the larger part of the revenue of the Government.

Do not weaken our national credit, which is of the greatest benefit to us in the time of peace and of war, by creating a debt that we and many future generations can not expect to wipe out.

Let us follow the example set by European countries that are making good use of their rivers, though on an average not as deep as ours. Let us solve the question of river transportation in a practical manner, not by having them dredged to a greater depth than there is any need of, but by providing a uniform depth of 8 to 9 feet and insisting that the cities along the rivers thus improved own and maintain the necessary docks and suitable equipment for loading and transferring freight.

In this connection let me say that I was much pleased to see in our present river and harbor bill an appropriation of $500,000 for carrying out the very practical suggestion made by the Wisconsin commissioner of waterways, Ray S. Reid, viz: To have the Government carry on experiments with types of shallow-draft boats suitable for the natural depth of our rivers. As is stated in the report accompanying the river and harbor bill, a large saving to the country and decreased cost of transportation may be the result of such experiments. [Applause.]

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULDEN].

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am in accord with the bill and report of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and congratulate the chairman, my colleague from New York, on his able and interesting explanation of this measure. While the various projects in my district did not receive such appropriations as their importance demanded, or as I wished, still, with an annual appropriation as provided in this bill, which I hope will become a law, they will be taken care of and speedily completed.

This will be a wise and businesslike departure from the slipshod, desultory methods of the past twenty-eight years.

The Board of Engineers recommended that $150,000 only could be spent yearly on the improvement of the Harlem River and Ship Canal, thus requiring about eight years to fully complete this great work. To show the magnitude of this stream, it carried last year a tonnage of 43,000,000, valued at over $200,000,000.

The removal of the sand bar at the mouth of Westchester Creek, a tidal stream of nearly 3 miles in length, with a commerce of 400,000 tons, valued at more than $2,000,000, but growing by leaps and bounds, only $10,000 was given in the bill. More is promised next year. At least a beginning can be made.

The Bronx River received $6,485, finishing the work according to present survey, and making a total of $85,985 expended the last ten years. After the survey by the Board of Engineers is made for the further improvement, additional appropriations will be made. The tonnage in 1909 was over 400,000 tons, valued at more than $2,000,000.

In both of these sections, the Bronx, the finest and most desirable borough in the city of New York, is developing rapidly and the population increasing by leaps and bounds. The population in 1900 was 200,525 and now not less than 425,000.

The Eastchester Creek was favored with an appropriation of $35,515, which will enable the engineers to make a good start on deepening the channel to 12 feet at low tide through to Mount Vernon. This will help Williams Bridge, Wakefield, and Eastchester, in the Bronx.

The item of $500,000 for the East River at Hell Gate and to deepen the channel to 26 feet between North and South Brother islands is satisfactory, and perhaps all that can be expended in one year.

My complaint was registered in the committee, and again here, against the failure to appropriate a reasonable sum for the work of deepening and widening the famous Bronx Kills. On account of the limited sum allowed this year my request was denied, but with the understanding that it should be cared for in the bill of next year. I was forced reluctantly to yield, as the amount necessary for a 22-foot channel is $2,500,000. This improvement has been favorably recommended by the board of engineers, first by General Newton more than twenty years ago, and by the New York Association of Waterways and the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association.

When the Erie Barge Canal, on which the State is expending $108,000,000, is completed in 1913, this channel, less than one mile in length, will be an imperative necessity to enable the commerce of the Hudson and the Lakes to safely reach Long Island Sound and the ports of New England. By improving these kills, now navigable only for row boats, 2 miles will be saved and the dangers to commerce through Hell Gate avoided. It is therefore a most important work and not merely of local interest. With the Harlem River and Ship Canal it is a link in the chain of the inland waterway from Boston to Florida. The sum allowed the waterways of the Bronx—$701,000—while large in the aggregate, should have been $1,000,000 if the interests at stake were properly conserved.

With the adoption of the bill under consideration the beginning of a new and satisfactory era will be started and, I am sure, continued until all deserving and meritorious projects are completed.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LEE].

Mr. LEE. Mr. Chairman, the claims of the Coosa River to consideration by the Government are strengthened by the fact that there is a greater difference in the principal products of the section through which it runs than can be found in an equal distance anywhere else in the United States.

I think it is absolutely safe to say that there is not an important product of the soil, of the mine, of the quarry, of the forest, of the loom, of the foundry, that the basin of the Mississippi River furnishes that is not duplicated in the basin of the Coosa, the Alabama, and the Mobile—one river under different names. Here in a small area are found the same inducements for exchange that are found in the basin of the Mississippi with its 1,800,000 square miles. Near the mouth of this river sugar and rice and semitropical fruits can be produced as well as in Louisiana. Higher up a cotton belt extends as productive as that of Mississippi or Arkansas. Skirting the Coosa, the name of the upper part of the stream, is a coal and iron region as rich as that of Pennsylvania, as plentifully supplied as Indiana with rock for building or paving material, abounding in clays for pottery as good as can be found in Ohio, with water power unsurpassed.

On the upper reaches of the river is found the grain country producing crops similar to those of the upper Mississippi. I do not refer simply to the natural resources of the Coosa Valley. I refer to resources that are being utilized—the factories, the foundries, the quarries that are already established. A glance at the normal-weather map, showing the average temperature for the year, will give an idea of the diversity of climate and therefore the diversity of products of this valley. The isothermal line entering the country near the Virginia-North Carolina boundary as it passes westward dips to the south, going below Rome, and soon after leaving the Coosa Valley turns northward again, crossing the Mississippi but little below the mouth of the Ohio.

All this shows the immense value of the stream to commerce if its upper and lower navigable portions were connected. The upper river is navigable from Lock 4 to Rome, a distance of 200 miles, and above Rome the same river—preserving the habit of changing its name and known as "Oostanaula" and the "Coosawattee"—is navigable 108 miles farther. The upper navigable reach of the river, then, is 308 miles long, and the lower, extending from Wetumpka to Mobile Bay, is a stretch of navigable water 440 miles long, but the two are separated by 116 miles of unnavigable water between Wetumpka and Lock No. 4. If this 116 miles were made navigable, a continuous stretch of navigable river would be opened up extending from Mobile 864 miles northward, through Alabama and Georgia almost to the Tennessee line.

The cost of connecting the two navigable portions of this waterway will seem large only to one who has a very incorrect idea of its commercial possibilities.

Major Flagler, after a careful survey, estimated the cost of the needed work at $6,000,000. Captain Cavanaugh made an estimate of about $11,000,000 as the cost of securing a channel 6 feet deep extending from Gadsden, which is about 60 miles above the unnavigable portion of the river, to Mobile Bay, of which about $10,000,000 would be the cost of such a channel from Gadsden to Wetumpka through the series of shoals that now obstruct the river. But this cost may be greatly reduced—probably 30 per cent—by the sale of power privileges.

In estimating the cost of any work, however, the cost of maintenance as well as the initial cost should be considered.

In answer to the question whether the channel was one that could be easily maintained when once secured, Major Flagler, in a statement before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, replied:

> Yes; it is by far the best I have seen on any river in the country in this respect. It is a very permanent river, and below Rome is very free from snags and logs that we generally have in most of the southern rivers.

Ordinarily, when improvements are made on a stream, its navigability is extended a distance only equal to the length of the channel improved. In this case it should be remembered that the opening up of 116 miles would give an outlet to 308 miles already navigable, making a gain of 424 miles. This project then would add 424 miles to the 440 miles and give a navigable stream 864 miles long. The expenditure should not be regarded as made for the 116 miles, but for the entire length.

In 1907 the upper Coosa, from Rome to Lock No. 4, carried a commerce of $3,500,000; by this time it probably amounts to $4,000,000, but it is only local, like the commerce of an inland lake with no navigable connection with the sea. It is a commerce either originating and ending in the towns on the banks of the river or originating at points that have no railroad outlet, and shipped to railroad crossings, where it is carried by rail to the outside markets, paying railroad freight rates; so, except as to the traffic originating and ending in the towns on the banks of this stretch of navigable water, the river has given no advantage in freight rates. By the Mississippi, Memphis is about as far above New Orleans as Rome is above Mobile by the Coosa; but, while the freight on a bale of cotton from Memphis to New Orleans is only $1, it is $2.25 from Rome to Mobile or Savannah, and $3 to New Orleans. A similar difference will be found in rates on all classes of goods going into or out of the two cities.

The opening of the Coosa River to the Gulf would cut in half the freight charges paid by the people of its valley, and the cheaper rates would develop new industries and add vastly to production.

The combined commerce of the Coosa and Alabama rivers is now about $13,000,000 a year. By connecting the navigable waters of the two it is safe to say that it would be doubled inside of three years, and the cost of living and the cost of production in the Coosa Valley would be reduced by fully half the amount now paid out in freight charges, for the railroads would have to meet the river rate.

In the Coosa Valley in Georgia and Alabama are 15 counties, with a population of 380,000 and a wealth that has increased 38 per cent during the last five years. This statement refers to that part of the river known as the "Coosa," and having no navigable outlet to the sea. On the lower part of the stream, known as the "Alabama" and the "Mobile," are 9 counties having a slightly larger combined population. In the counties actually bordering on this river there are more than three-quarters of a million people.

Referring only to the counties bordering on the Coosa, and not to those bordering on the Alabama, the following figures will give a glimpse of the extent and diversity of the industry of the region:

Manufacturing, capital invested		$35,937,000
Manufacturing, value of products		$47,865,000
Iron-ore furnaces, capital invested		$9,354,000
Iron-ore furnaces, value of products		$13,500,000
Cotton mills, capital invested		$13,813,000
Cotton mills, value of products		$20,014,000
Cotton consumed	bales	224,200
Cotton produced	do	178,500
Value of grain crop		$8,625,000
Iron ore mined	tons	1,750,000
Other ore mined	do	50,000
Limestone and lime	do	700,000
Marble quarried	cubic feet	100,000
Coal mined	tons	820,000
Value of mineral products		$5,000,000
Coal consumed	tons	550,000
Coke consumed	do	740,000
Value of timber cut		$1,976,000
Cement made	barrels	1,040,000
Brick (capacity of plant)	tons	200,000
Fertilizer manufactured	do	55,600

The above statistics refer to the year 1908.

An increase of 20 per cent would probably represent the figures for the present year.

It will be observed that the cotton mills in this section, with a capacity of 651,000 spindles, consumed nearly a quarter of a million bales, about 50,000 more than the section produces.

With the opening of the river the lower counties, producing more cotton than the others and manufacturing practically none, could for a time nearly supply the demand. Just now the two combined could far more than supply the demand, but the cotton manufacturing industry is expanding at such a rapid rate that before the river could be opened even by the most expeditious work the cotton mills of the Coosa will be consuming more cotton than is grown on the Coosa and Alabama rivers combined.

The array of industries given above is sufficient to show the traffic that would go down this river. Nothing further need be said of this except as to the extent of the resources that are as yet scarcely touched because of the lack of cheap transportation. The total workable iron ore tributary to the Coosa is estimated at 1,075,000,000 tons. The total workable coal is estimated at 600,000,000 tons. The marble deposits along the river contain almost inexhaustible deposits of white marble, comparable to the Italian, with three times as much blue marble.

This river is not in the class with the smaller streams whose claims are urged on Congress, and should not be so considered. It is by far the longest river that flows into the ocean or Gulf between the mouth of the Mississippi and the mouth of the St. Lawrence. This river already has two navigable stretches, each exceeding the navigable length of any river that flows into the Atlantic in the United States or any, except one, that flows into the Gulf east of the Mississippi; and each of these navigable stretches is about as long as that of the one that they do not surpass flowing into the Gulf.

I quote from the "Memorial of the Coosa River improvement convention:"

In order to give a more correct idea of the magnitude of the river and its possibilities, we quote from the report of Charles Frith, United States assistant engineer, in his report of November 24, 1888, in which he says:

"Velocity observations taken at Lock 4 show a discharge of 3,921 cubic feet, with a velocity of 1.33 feet per second at a stage of 1.8 feet above low water. Similar observations at Wetumpka at low water show a discharge of 5,796 cubic feet, with a velocity of 0.9 foot per second."

In the annual report of the Chief of Engineers for 1879, page 1203, the low-water discharge of the Mississippi River at St. Paul is given at 5,800 cubic feet per second. In the report for 1880, page 482, the low-water discharge of the Hudson River between Troy and Albany is given as about 2,000 cubic feet per second; and in the report for 1881, page 1929, the low-water discharge of the Ohio River at Pittsburg is given as 1,666 cubic feet at zero of the gauge, and as 5,810 cubic feet per second at 9 inches of the gauge.

Comparing these discharges with that of the Coosa at Wetumpka, it appears that the volume of water flowing in the Coosa at low water is about equal to that of the Mississippi at St. Paul; about 2.8 times greater than that in the Hudson at Albany, and about 3.5 times greater than that in the Ohio at Pittsburg.

With the assistance of a canal, the Delaware River is navigable 160 miles; the Connecticut, the Hudson, and the Potomac about 150 miles each; the Kennebec and Penobscot 60 miles each. The total of these is 730 miles, not quite as great a distance of navigation as this one river will afford when its upper and lower reaches are joined.

Take another group: The Rappahannock, the James, the Roanoke, the Neuse, the Cape Fear, and the Pedee are navigable for about 125 miles each; all combined make a navigable distance of 720 miles, which is not equal to the present navigable length of this river counting the upper and lower portions.

The combined navigation of the Savannah, the Santee, and the Altamaha is not as great as that of the Alabama and Coosa, nor is the combined navigation of the St. Johns, Apalachicola, and Chattahoochee. This river belongs in a class with the Ohio, which is only about 200 miles longer. The watershed of the Ohio is much larger and the population along its course vastly greater, but the river does not run through a territory as well adapted as that of the Coosa and Alabama to an interchange of products, for the agricultural products of the country bordering on the Ohio are pretty much the same throughout its entire length, while the agricultural products of the territory of the Coosa are different from those of the Alabama.

The Ohio River furnishes an outlet for a rich coal and iron region, and the Coosa, when its upper and lower navigable reaches are connected, will furnish a shorter outlet for a coal and iron region as rich as that of Pennsylvania, if not richer. The Coosa Valley furnishes a larger variety of products for exchange than is furnished by the Ohio.

Mr. Chairman, in this shorter haul we find a feature in which the United States as a nation is interested, and we can say to you what can be said in reference to few waterway improvements for which Congress is asked to provide; throw away its local backing and consider it from a purely national standpoint; forget about Alabama and Georgia and think only of the United States.

South of us are about 70,000,000 Americans. We want their trade and we get less of it than we should have. The way to get it is to cut the prices of our products delivered at their doors. To win their trade we must sell as cheaply as possible; to sell as cheaply as possible we must cut the cost of transportation as low as possible. We must offer products from which transportation has taken the minimum toll.

Products shipped from the Pennsylvania coal and iron belt must go more than 2,000 miles down the Ohio and Mississippi to reach the Gulf. From the Alabama and Georgia coal and iron fields the Gulf would be only 600 miles distant. With the Coosa River navigable Cuba would only be two-thirds as far from the coal and iron fields of Alabama as New Orleans is from those of Pennsylvania. Veracruz would be 400 miles nearer to the coal and iron fields of Georgia than New Orleans is to those of Pennsylvania. The ports of Guatemala and Honduras would be nearer and the ports of Nicaragua about as near to the Alabama fields as New Orleans is to the Pennsylvania fields, and the Panama Canal would be by water only about 600 miles farther from the Alabama fields than Pittsburg is from New Orleans.

Going eastward along the coast of South America coal could be delivered at the ports of Colombia and Venezuela over a line of water transportation very little longer than that which the products of the Pennsylvania fields would take to get to the borders of the United States, and only about half as long as these products would take to reach those countries.

Water transportation to the Georgia and Alabama coal and iron fields is a matter of national importance. The reduction in freight to the people of this section would be a matter of local concern, but the advantage to its industries is a matter of national concern.

As to what this reduction would be, an idea may be formed from the fact that coal can be delivered in New Orleans from Pittsburg as cheaply as in Birmingham, though Pittsburg is about five times as far from New Orleans by river as Birmingham is by rail. A few years ago Major Flagler, of the engineers, stated before the Rivers and Harbors Committee that with the Coosa River open to navigation it would cost only 22 cents to transport a ton of coal from Gadsden to Mobile, and that the least the railroads had ever charged was $1.50 a ton. There is a flat rate on all classes of goods shipped from Rome to Gadsden over this river of 10 cents per hundred. The rate on first-class shipments to Gadsden and from points of equal distance from Rome by rail is 48 cents, nearly five times as much as by water.

It is safe to say that two-thirds of the transportation charges would be saved on products brought into Georgia or carried out; and thus we see that where the Pennsylvania region might not be able to underbid foreign competitors and sell its products to South America, the Georgia and Alabama region might succeed, thereby extending American commerce and benefiting American industries. The gain will be for the United States of America. It will not be a gain for Georgia at the expense of Pennsylvania, for in furnishing an outlet for Georgia products southward they would come less in competition with the products of Pennsylvania in the natural trade territory of that State.

The growth of the commerce of the United States depends largely on the value of its products at the Gulf ports. Besides coal and iron, the deepening of the Coosa River would make possible the delivery of cotton goods at these ports at a moderate cost. The people of South America buy the class of cotton goods which the South sells, but they buy it almost entirely in Europe. There is no stream in the United States whose improvement would give such a variety of products to commerce as would the improvement of the Coosa River. The United States Government would profit greatly by cheap coal at the Gulf ports. The battle ships use vast quantities of it, and I do not think it an exaggeration to say that the opening of this river would cut one-fourth from the annual coal bill of the navy. This would be a great saving, but it would be as nothing compared with the benefits to be derived from the extension of trade.

The frontiers of commerce are changing. The Panama Canal will make of the Gulf ports outposts for trade with a larger population than now receive our products through the Atlantic ports. The Gulf is the key of the future. The Coosa Valley is the nearest supply depot to the Gulf, and the improvement of this river is a matter of the very highest national importance.

So when we, who represent the people of this valley, speak for their interests we wish you to consider their rights the same as you would consider the rights of American citizens in any other section, but we wish you to remember also that in speaking for the Coosa Valley we are speaking for the United States of America.

Mr. Chairman, coming to a consideration of the probable results of the completion of this project to my own district, I may say that while the navigable part of these streams touches only a part of its territory, it will, in my judgment, have a wonderful vitalizing influence upon every part of it. Five different railroads traversing the district, and representing all the great systems in the State, touch these navigable waters at several points within two hours' ride of any part of my district.

No area of like extent that lies within the influence of these waters is so rich in the variety and abundance of its natural resources and potential wealth. Its agricultural possibilities are just now beginning to be properly realized and appreciated. The wonderful advances that have been made in profitable farming by those who adopt improved methods of culture, fertilization, and seed selection are but the harbingers of a forward movement in all lines of agriculture that will in a few years double the present production of our acreage.

The mineral resources of the district have barely been touched. The profitable mining of heavy ores is so largely dependent upon the cost of the transportation that the cheapening of freights to water rates can not fail to give a healthful impulse to all our mining industries and raise the value of our mineral lands.

Material for the manufacture of lime and cement is in such abundant and easy reach that these industries are already prospering, and will be multiplied many times when the reduced freights are added to their present profits.

The power developed by the dams for locks and storage reservoirs in contemplation, though only a by-product, as it were, in this river improvement, is likely to become one of the greatest wealth producers of the South. Three hundred thousand horsepower, it is estimated by competent engineers, can be developed along the channel of the Coosa alone, and can be profitably used within a radius of 50 miles from the generating point by turning into electricity.

The Etowah, the Oostanaula, the Coosawattee, and the Chattooga rivers present opportunities for the development of power at low cost. Cheap and reliable power has a magical effect in bringing into prosperous existence many industries that are now unknown in our section, and their owners and operatives will create a steady and profitable home market for all the products of the soil.

These diversified industries will stimulate the ambition and enterprise of our young men who go forth from our schools and colleges and turn them from the overcrowded professions and clerkships into more attractive and profitable pursuits.

The possible and even probable good that may come to all our people as the result, directly or indirectly, of the completion of this great work are but dimly perceived and lightly considered, even by the few whose interest has been aroused.

The great mass of the people have yet to be awakened to the splendid future that is the promise of this work when finished.

The few who have labored, who have borne and must continue to bear the heat and burden of the struggle for the consummation of these great designs must be content with an approving conscience for their reward. Pioneers in such work are rarely understood or approved by their contemporaries. Active opposition or a scarcely less deadly indifference are usually meted out to those who would change the existing order of things. But this should not and will not discourage or dishearten the clear-headed, brave-hearted men who are enlisted in the cause. The aid that I have been or may be able to contribute to its successful achievement I regard as a public service faithfully discharged.

Whether the present meed be praise or blame, I am firmly persuaded that the far-reaching results of the completion of this work will more than justify the most sanguine expectations of those who are now active in supporting and promoting it, and will ultimately win the grateful approval of the millions who reap its rewards without participating in its accomplishment.

If I had done or should do nothing else during my service here but give useful and necessary assistance in pressing this great enterprise to a successful completion, I should feel that I had justified the favorable opinion of those who send me here. [Applause.]

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit some remarks on the pending bill and the general subject of waterway improvement, with particular reference to the importance and necessity of making the Cumberland River, which flows for the greater portion of its length in the State from which I have the honor to come, navigable during all seasons of the year. I believe the country is to be congratulated on the fact that the distinguished chairman and members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors have presented a bill which contemplates the certain and definite completion of all the plans which have been heretofore projected for the improvement of our waterways in as speedy a manner as possible; and which will, at no distant date, lead ultimately to the improvement of all of our rivers where the business interests of the country justify the expenditure. The past method of making appropriations at varying intervals with amounts which were not determined by the merit of the work being done, but which shifted frequently as the one project or the other was more or less favored by locality and the influence of those behind it, and with no definite or fixed purpose as to when the project could and would be completed, resulting frequently in the stopping of important and necessary work because of the lack of funds, has brought about a general dissatisfaction on the part of the people of the country. It has caused a universal demand for a change of the system and plan of making appropriations for this great work of government, so that future appropriations and future projects will be undertaken and carried on, influenced not by the "pork-barrel" idea, but by an intelligent and businesslike conception of the needs of the country.

And I repeat that it is a source of congratulation that the distinguished and able members of the Rivers and Harbors Committee have presented a bill which will meet this demand on the part of the general public. I was glad to hear the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. ALEXANDER], the chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, in his very clear and able explanation of the scope and purposes of the pending bill, state that it is framed with the idea that hereafter there will be enacted an annual bill making appropriations for our rivers and harbors, so that Congress may act intelligently and with accurate knowledge each year as to what work has been done during the year that has passed and as to exactly how much money will be needed to carry on the work economically and effectively for the ensuing year. And I have no doubt, Mr. Chairman, but what the recommendations of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in this respect will be approved not only by Congress, but by the country at large.

The question of transportation is to-day attracting universal attention. Probably no other problem which confronts our national and state governments has aroused such tremendous interest and created such a general demand for legislation which will cheapen the cost of transportation and increase the facility with which the products of our farms and the creations of our factories and our workshops may be transported to the best markets.

IMPORTANCE OF GOOD ROADS.

There has been a tremendous revival of public interest in the improvement of highways in nearly every State in the Union. This interest has been manifested by the holding of good-roads conventions in more than 28 States of the Union. The interest manifested and the discussions had at these conventions will doubtless bring about the enactment of better laws for the improvement of the highways in the various States.

The farmer, as does the merchant and manufacturer, recognizes that the cost of transportation is one of the elements which vitally affects the prosperity of the individual as well as of the Nation as a whole. He recognizes, too, that something must be radically wrong with our system, if the figures and estimates furnished by the experts of the Department of Agriculture as to the cost of transportation over our highways is correct. If the figures submitted by these experts be true, it costs, on the average, 25 cents to transport a ton of freight by horse and wagon over the average road of the United States, whereas in England, where the roads are better, it is said to cost only about 5 cents per ton-mile. What we consider the enormous productions of our farms, some idea may be formed of the fabulous amounts wrung each year from the pockets of the farmers of the country on account of this excessive cost of hauling the products of their labor to market. And, in my judgment, it is time Congress was giving some attention and consideration to this question, affecting, as it does, not only the farmers, who are the bone and sinew of the country, but also the consumers of their products. Thus it is that every man, woman, and child is interested in good roads, and, in my opinion, there is no more fruitful field for the labors of national as well as state legislators, if the interests of the people are to be considered. But it is not my purpose, Mr. Chairman, to discuss at this time the subject of highway improvement. I have not the time to do so now. I shall probably at some future day ask the indulgence of the House for the purpose of presenting some remarks on the subject of highway improvement, for I have some decided views as to the duty of the national as well as the state governments toward that most important subject.

CHEAP TRANSPORTATION ESSENTIAL TO COMMERCIAL GREATNESS OF NATION.

No nation which is not commercially great can truly be called great. The arm of a government may be strengthened by powerful armies and a great navy, but the true greatness of its people will be measured, in the judgment of future historians, not by their ability to mobolize troops and man the seas but by their commercial development and supremacy. The chief glory of our Government in the past, its power in the present, and its superiority in the future must depend on the farmer who toils in the fields and the workman who labors in our factories and our workshops, rather than upon the soldier of the army or the battle ships of the navy. The chief aim, the highest purpose of our Government, therefore, should be to multiply the opportunities and increase the advantages of the individual citizen engaged in commercial and industrial pursuits.

No problem of government appeals more forcibly to the producer and consumer alike than the question of transportation. It matters not how fertile our soils may be or how great their productivity, if there is not provided a certain and cheap method of transportation whereby our harvests may be carried to market, then the farmer must either lose a large part of the value of his labor on account of the increased cost and difficulty of transportation or the consumer must bear the burden, and in most cases both must suffer. The products of our factories in this great age of inventive genius and skilled labor may be varied and enormous, but if they are not provided with all the facilities of cheap transportation to the markets of the world, then the increased cost must be borne either by the labor which produces them or by the ultimate consumer. In fact, the cost of transportation is nothing more nor less than a tax, which must be paid either by the producer or by the consumer or by both. It is, therefore, to the interest of both producer and consumer that the cost of transportation be kept as low as possible. The prosperity of every individual citizen demands it, for every man, woman, and child belongs either to the class of producer or consumer.

How, then, is this to be done? Unquestionably, in part, by the improvement of our navigable rivers. It can not be denied that transportation by water is the cheapest of all forms of transportation. If proof were necessary to establish this fact, it could be found in the fact that towns and cities situated on navigable rivers are given lower and better freight rates than those that are not so situated. It is a fact, however, clear and uncontroverted, that there is not a civilized country on the face of the globe which is not bending its energies and contributing largely from its treasury toward building canals and improving its navigable waterways.

The foremost countries of Europe long ago recognized the vast benefits to be derived from cheap methods of transportation by agricultural, industrial, and commercial interests.

The United States National Waterways Commission, in their able and interesting preliminary report, presented to Congress on January 24, 1910, states that waterways in Europe have attained a very high state of development and that—

The general policy of almost all European countries has been toward the development and improvement of their waterways.

Germany has 1,320 miles of canals and 15,760 miles of navigable rivers. I have read the statement that in 1907 her foreign commerce was greater by nearly $400,000,000 than that of the United States. And yet that country has an area of only about one-fifteenth that of the United States, one-third less in population, and not one-half of our accumulated wealth. In addition to this, her climate and her natural resources are vastly inferior to ours. The explanation of this radical difference in commercial achievements and of the enviable position which that country occupies in the world's activities must be found in the fact that she has perfected a great national waterways system and possesses every facility for the cheap transportation of her commerce by land, rail, and water. France, no larger than our great State of Texas, in addition to her natural waterways, has 3,000 miles of canals built at a cost of $750,000,000; and, I might add, that country has spent in addition to this sum, since the year 1814, $600,000,000 on her public highways.

England, Holland, Russia, China, and, in fact, nearly every country on the globe has many miles of canals, built, many of them, centuries ago, a striking evidence of the wise statesmanship of those vested with the power of government in those days. The sum total of the world's canals, including, of course, our own, reaches about 26,000 miles, and cost a sum in excess of $2,000,000,000. Mr. Chairman, our forefathers were not insensible to the importance and value of waterway transportation, for, while the United States is younger in years than any of the countries named, the reported mileage of the canals which have been constructed in the United States is 4,479 miles. There are 2,189.04 miles of canals in actual operation to-day in the United States. There is no country quite so susceptible of the highest form of waterway improvement, thereby securing the fullest advantages of waterway transportation, as is the great country in which we live. Our rivers are not only greater in number, but also greater in size than those of any other country, with the possible exception of South America. They have a mileage of 47,355. They penetrate sections which are unsurpassed for fertility of soil and abundance and richness of natural resources. If properly improved, these rivers are capable of floating upon their broad bosoms cargoes of produce and the finished products and articles of commerce sufficient to satisfy the needs of the people of the whole world.

It is not surprising, Mr. Chairman, that upon the advent of the railroad the people practically ceased to show any interest in waterway improvement. And I want to say just here that the railroads of the country have played a most important and indispensable part in the development of our resources. They are the arteries through which our commerce flows and are essential to its life and future growth. In some ways they possess advantages over waterway transportation. They can transport commerce much more quickly; they climb mountains, cross valleys, and penetrate sections which are not favored with waterways. The time was when it was thought that waterway improvement was contrary to the interests of the railroads.

But if that was ever the case, it is not true now, for, as some one has said, the railroad Sauls are now among our greatest waterway prophets. The true relations of the two methods of transportation, it seems to me, are best expressed in a report made by a French legislative committee in these words: "It is conceded that waterways and railways are destined not to supplant but to supplement each other. Between the two there is a natural division of traffic. To the railroad goes the least burdensome traffic, which demands regularity and quick transit; to the waterways gravitate the heavy freights of small value, which can only be transported where freights are low. Waterways by increasing traffic are rather the auxiliaries than the competitors of railroads. In procuring for manufacturers cheap transportation for coal and raw material, they create freights whose subsequent transportation gives profits to the railroads." Then too, experience has shown that the railroads of the country can not handle our immense volume of traffic at all times with dispatch. We have only to recall the great congestion of traffic in 1906 and 1907, due to the shortage of cars and the inability of the railroads to move our freight promptly, resulting in great loss to the farmers in the South and West, to substantiate this statement. It should be said in all fairness that this failure on the part of the railroads is not due to any fault on the part of the railroad systems. It was but the natural result of the remarkable progress of our country in the development of its resources. For twenty-five years the products of our farms and the output of our factories have been increasing by leaps and bounds, due not alone to the growth of our population, but rather to the wonderful natural wealth and resources with which God in His wisdom has endowed the great country in which we are so fortunate as to live. So rapid has been this increase of traffic that James J. Hill, president of the Great Northern Railway, and one of the greatest railway authorities of the age, has declared that it would require $8,000,000,000 to put the railways of the country in condition to handle the traffic of the country, and even if it were possible to secure the money, materials, and men necessary to make the required improvements, conditions would be as bad in the end as they are now, on account of the continued increase of traffic while the improvements were being made. If this be true, then there can be but one solution of the difficulty, and that is the construction of a national waterway system which will serve as a supplement to our railroad systems.

By this course we will have provided ample and adequate transportation facilities for the commerce of the country, no matter to what extent it may grow, and will have established a most effective method for the regulation of freight rates, insuring cheap transportation of our commodities, thus proving a direct benefit, both to the producer and the consumer, as I have already pointed out. And now, Mr. Chairman, having discussed, in a brief and general way, the importance of the improvement of our waterways, I desire to present some facts showing the necessity of a more systematic and rapid improvement of the Cumberland River, which flows through the district I have the honor to represent. These facts have been presented to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and have resulted in the recommendation for its improvement contained in the pending bill, which I trust and believe will be approved by the House. I may be permitted to say here that the people who live on the Cumberland River are intensely interested in securing a substantial and adequate appropriation which will give some assurance of a speedy completion of the improvements commenced many years ago. To this end a delegation of prominent citizens, composed of Mr. E. W. Foster, president of the Board of Trade of Nashville, and Hons. M. T. Bryan and C. C. Slaughter, of Nashville, Tenn., the largest city on the river, and Mr. John J. Conroy and Hon. Austin Peay, of Clarksville, the second largest city on the river, appeared before the committee some weeks ago for the purpose of presenting the river's claims. The presence of these representative citizens is an evidence of the fact that the large business and manufacturing interests of the entire Cumberland River basin are thoroughly aroused to the importance and necessity of a speedy completion of the system of improvements which were inaugurated by Congress more than twenty-four years ago.

THE CUMBERLAND RIVER.

The Cumberland River, Mr. Chairman, rises on the western slope of the Cumberland Mountains, flowing thence a distance of 688 miles through eastern Kentucky, middle Tennessee, and western Kentucky, discharging into the Ohio River at Smithland, Ky. The head of navigation is at Burnside, Ky., which is 325 miles from Nashville, Tenn., and 518 miles from the mouth of the river; 315 miles of the navigable waters of the river are in the State of Tennessee and 203 miles in the State of Kentucky. It appears that the part of the river above Nashville has been designated as the "upper Cumberland" and the part below Nashville has been designated as the "lower Cumberland" since 1832 under the various government appropriations made for the improvement of the river since that time. I am indebted to the reports of the various district engineers who at various times have had charge of this river, and particularly to the very able and comprehensive report filed July 21, 1909, by the present district engineer, Maj. W. W. Harts, who has a most intimate expert and scientific knowledge of the needs and conditions of the river, for the following facts and history of the appropriations made for this river by Congress at various times since 1832. It appears that legislatures of the States of Tennessee and Kentucky made several appropriations for the river between the years 1830 and 1840, but little, if any, benefit to the river resulted therefrom. The Cumberland Navigation Company was incorporated in 1846 under the laws of Tennessee for the purpose of improving the "navigation of the Cumberland River below the town of Nashville, by means of a system of locks and dams," but this movement fell through. Between the years 1832 and 1838 Congress appropriated at various times sums aggregating $155,000, which were used in improving the worst localities of the river. Congress made no further appropriations for the river until 1871.

Between the years 1871 and 1890, $305,000 was appropriated for the benefit of the lower Cumberland River. The first specific appropriation for the upper Cumberland River was made in 1876, but it was not until the act of 1886 that the present project for the canalization of the upper Cumberland was adopted, based on a survey and examination made by authority of Congress during the years 1882 and 1883. This project contemplates the construction of 22 locks and dams on the upper Cumberland River below Burnside, Ky., and 6 locks and dams above Burnside, so as to afford a channel depth of 6 feet, costing, according to estimate, $8,500,000. Under this project and including the previous appropriations the sum of $2,779,000 has been appropriated and expended on the upper Cumberland for the construction of locks and dams, with necessary cost of maintenance. Locks and Dams Nos. 1 to 7 have been completed, providing a permanent channel from Nashville to Carthage, a distance of 116 miles. Lock No. 21, the only other lock and dam undertaken up to this time under this project, is nearing completion, and will require an additional appropriation of $85,000 to complete it, according to the report and recommendations of Major Harts, the district engineer.

The present project for the improvement of the river below Nashville, or the lower Cumberland, was adopted in 1892 by the river and harbor act passed July 13 of that year. This plan or project originally called for seven locks and dams, commencing at Harpeth Shoals, below Ashland City, Tenn., but under the survey made under the river and harbor act of March 2, 1907, one of these locks has been eliminated. It is estimated that these six locks will give 6-foot navigation from Nashville to the Ohio River. Only one lock and dam on the lower Cumberland has been completed. This is Lock A, at Harpeth Shoals, below Ashland City and 41.4 miles below Nashville.

This lock was commenced as far back as 1892, and for some reason its final completion dragged along over twelve years, or until 1904, when it was finally completed, affording a 6-foot channel all the year around between that point and Nashville. Under this project the sum of $440,745.61 has been appropriated and expended in the construction of Lock A and for maintenance, and it is estimated that it will require the sum of $3,066,122.40 to construct the other five locks. In addition to this, $98,760 will be required for dredging that portion of the river between its mouth and the lower lock. No appropriation for new locks and dams has been made for the lower Cumberland River since the year 1892. This is true, notwithstanding the fact that in a report dated February 26, 1906, the Board of Engineers approved the recommendations of the district engineer that the regulation of the river and the construction of the remaining locks and dams below Nashville were worthy of being undertaken by the National Government. In fact, if my memory serves me aright, Mr. Chairman, every district engineer in charge of the Cumberland River since 1892 has recommended that these locks and dams should be completed. But notwithstanding these recommendations, Congress up to the present time has refused to make the necessary appropriations to begin the work. I am highly gratified that the Rivers and Harbors Committee has recommended in the pending bill the sum of $663,000 to commence Locks B and C and to make all the necessary surveys and purchase sites for Locks D, E, and F, $213,000 of which is to be available at once in cash and the balance in continuing contracts. In the interest of the people I have the honor to represent I trust that this recommendation will be approved by Congress and that this long-delayed but most meritorious undertaking will be commenced and pressed to a speedy conclusion.

Mr. Chairman, I earnestly advocate the improvement of both the upper and lower Cumberland. I do so in the interest of the commerce involved. The great and undeveloped coal fields of the upper Cumberland, its abundant natural resources in timber and minerals, its thriving towns scattered along its banks with their great possibilities in manufacturing and commerce, together with the agricultural interests of the upper and lower basin, render it most important that Congress give speedy and favorable consideration to the plans proposed for giving suitable navigation all the year round on both sections of the river. The total traffic tonnage of commerce on the upper Cumberland for the year 1908 is estimated at 246,260 tons, consisting largely of timber, lumber, farm products, live stock, and merchandise, and valued at $8,745,289. The number of passengers carried was 8,635. This is true, notwithstanding the fact that it is navigable for only four to six months of the year for boats drawing not more than 3 feet. No one familiar with the situation will gainsay the statement that the commerce will be greatly increased if the river is made navigable the year round.

SOME REASONS FOR IMPROVEMENT OF LOWER CUMBERLAND RIVER.

But, Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak particularly in behalf of the lower Cumberland, which, for no good reason, has been so long neglected by Congress. The commerce on the lower Cumberland for the year 1908 was estimated at 259,734 tons, consisting mainly of timber, lumber, farm products, live stock, and general merchandise. This is true, notwithstanding the fact that the river below Nashville is navigable for all boats about six months in the year and for boats drawing not more than 3 feet from six to eight months. There are several months each year during low water when navigation is practically closed.

The importance of improving the lower Cumberland River is indorsed by the division engineer, Board of Engineers, and the Chief of Engineers. The latter says:

> In these reports the district officer recommends the further improvement of the Cumberland River below Nashville by the construction of the necessary locks and dams. This recommendation was concurred in by the division engineer, Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, and the Chief of Engineers. Attention is invited to the recommendation of the district officer in the appendix to this report that the necessary funds for the commencement of the work be appropriated at the earliest date practicable. This recommendation is concurred in.

This recommendation is the deliberate judgment of an able, experienced, and disinterested officer of the Government, who has given a careful study to all the growing demands of commerce on the river, and his conclusions should have the careful and favorable consideration of Congress.

Just a word, Mr. Chairman, as to the resources of the section of country through which this river flows. It has been endowed with nature's most lavish gifts. In agricultural resources and possibilities it is not excelled by the celebrated Valley of the Nile. Cattle upon a thousand hills feed upon vegetation no less luxuriant than the vine-clad hills of Italy. Its agricultural products are as varied as the soils upon which they are produced. Its soils will produce every grain, vegetable, and fruit produced in the Temperate Zone, except the citrus fruits and pineapples. No less than 67 field crops, 54 garden vegetables, and 10 varieties of berries and 12 of fruit are grown in the Cumberland River Valley. The Cumberland River basin and its drainage system embraces 55 counties—24 in Kentucky and 31 in Tennessee. The population in 1900 was 953,558. Its assessed valuation in 1909 was, in round numbers, $240,000,000.

The Twelfth Census shows that there were 110,406 farms in the Cumberland basin, with a total acreage of 10,541,747. The value of farm implements, not including the buildings, was $94,111,420; value of live stock, $29,091,988; value of products not fed to live stock, $39,441,538; value of products and live stock, $63,533,496; value of labor employed in agriculture, $2,558,715. The value of poultry and eggs produced in this basin for the year 1909 was $9,327,793. Enough has been said, Mr. Chairman, to justify the statement that this valley is not exceeded by any other region in its capacity for growing all those products which support mankind. Nor would it fall short of being one of the most attractive and profitable sections of the whole country if proper transportation facilities, which would be secured by slack-water navigation, are given to it. Lying along and near the Cumberland River are great deposits of coal and iron ore, much of it inaccessible to railroads and as yet undeveloped, but which, under the magic of creap and certain transportation facilities, will come forth to increase the Nation's wealth. The Appalachian coal fields on the upper Cumberland River embrace an aggregate of 13,183 square miles, and there are 3,888 square miles in the central coal fields in the basin of the lower Cumberland. The total output of coal mined in the year 1903 in these two coal areas was 5,526,138 tons, valued at $6,095,862. I do not believe there is another stream in the United States which gives access to two distinct coal areas. Why, Mr. Chairman, there is a body of coal in Overton and Fentress counties, in Tennessee, bordering the upper Cumberland River, which has not been touched and which has been seeking an outlet for years by river or by rail, or by both combined. It has been fairly well explored and drilled, so that its existence, extent, and character are known. It underlies a surface of about 90 miles in area and averages 4 feet in thickness. All this foots up a staggering quantity of 300,000,000 tons.

Now, I call your attention to the great benefits which will accrue to the industries of the whole country, particularly in the South and Southwest, if this vast storehouse of fuel is made accessible by an all-the-year navigation of the Cumberland River. The iron ores of the Cumberland River basin are of excellent quality and abundant in several of the counties lying contiguous to the river. The greatest deposits are below Nashville. Forty or fifty years ago there were 30 furnaces in operation, whereas now there are only about one-fourth of that number, with an aggregate output of 650 tons daily. The Cumberland River flows through the center of the county of Stewart in Tennessee. Possessing a strong, fertile soil and rich in iron-ore deposits, it was, prior to the civil war, one of the wealthiest counties in the State. Numerous furnaces were scattered over the county. Now it has only one, and that has a daily capacity of 25 tons of extra strong, tough iron, made from low phosphorous ores. This reduction is due to the fact that the county is not favored with railroad transportation, and other iron-ore localities, favored with railroad transportation, have forced her furnaces to shut down. Mr. Chairman, if this river is improved and slack-water navigation is secured all the year round, I predict that in a few short years, this county, rich in natural wealth, as well in historic interest, and peopled by an enterprising, industrious, and intelligent citizenship, will relight the fires of her furnaces and again resume the proud position she occupied in the commercial and industrial world before the war. I mention this as a striking illustration of what the improvement of this river will do for this one industry alone. The farmers of this county, on account of the want of railroad transportation and the uncertainty of transportation by river, except in certain seasons of the year, are compelled to haul their tobacco and other products of their farms 20 to 30 miles to market.

If the river is made navigable throughout the year, boats will be larger and greater in number, and the farmer will thus be enabled to ship his products easily and cheaply. This can have but one result, and that is larger crops, greater traffic on the river, increased wealth to the citizens of the county, and a corresponding benefit to the consumers of their products. And what is true as to the benefits to be derived by this county from river improvement is true as to all of the other counties on the lower Cumberland River. It is true that the others have the benefit of railway transportation, but the advantages which will be gained by them will consist in increased transportation facilities and lower freight rates. I shall not consume the time of the committee in speaking of the live-stock advantages of this section, nor shall I do more than mention the timber growing in the vicinity of this river, which I have heard has been estimated at $150,000,000, if made available by transportation facilities. About 150,000,000 feet of lumber are handled every year in Nashville, which is situated at the head of the lower Cumberland River, and is the largest city on the river. The value of timber and timber products, not including manufactures of wood, handled in Nashville is not far from $5,000,000 a year, and a large part of this lumber is drawn from the Cumberland basin, brought in by river and rail. Nashville manufactures and ships furniture to 20 different States and to Cuba; its jobbing, manufacturing, and retail trade amounts to about $225,000,000 annually. Through traffic at the Nashville terminals during the last year amounted to $471,000,000, while the Cumberland River traffic in and out of Nashville was about $18,094,600. It has more than 600 manufacturing concerns, with an aggregate capital of more than $25,000,000 and an annual output of over $30,000,000. No city south of the Ohio River equals it as a manufacturer of stoves, the annual output being 145,000 stoves and 115,000 pounds of hollow ware, which are shipped to every Southern State and as far west as California.

The hay, grain, and flour business of Nashville amounts to $30,000,000 annually. It is the natural outlet via the Cumberland River for grain raised in Indiana and Illinois along the Wabash and the Ohio. This grain is brought to Nashville, milled and distributed to all of the Southern and Southwestern States, to Europe and South America. What I have said, Mr. Chairman, is sufficient to indicate the immense volume of business done in this prosperous, enterprising, and growing city, without referring to the numerous other industries carried on within its limits. And I should say here that I am indebted for many of the facts concerning the resources of this entire valley to a very admirable and exhaustive report prepared by the board of trade for the use of the Rivers and Harbors Committee. Farther down the river is the growing town of Ashland City, which has several factories and is rapidly becoming a very important shipping point, both by rail and river. Clarksville, Tenn., is situated farther down on the river. It is in the center of the region which produces the dark tobacco for export, and has long enjoyed the distinction of being one of the largest tobacco markets in the United States. It is the second largest city on the river, and does a considerable business in manufacturing and also in wholesale and retail merchandise.

I have cited these facts at length for the purpose of giving the House some knowledge of the great volume of business now being done in the section of the country through which the Cumberland River flows, and some idea of the immense possibilities in agriculture and commerce, and of the necessity, therefore, of quickly completing the improvements on this river, so as to give transportation by water as well as by rail. There can be no question, Mr. Chairman, that the amount of commerce justifies the appropriation recommended by the district engineer, and that such action will immeasurably increase the traffic on the river.

Mr. John J. Conroy, a prominent merchant of Clarksville, Tenn., and president of the Cumberland River Improvement Association of Kentucky and Tennessee, says on this subject, under date of January 3, 1910:

> The territory served below Nashville is one which is capable of producing a great variety of commodities for transportation.
> In this territory is situated Clarksville, the second largest city on the river, and is the center of a district which produces tobacco largely for foreign consumption. All of the tobacco, as well as other farm products, has to be delivered to railroad points for transportation to foreign markets, and without a certainty of navigation, the raising of all agricultural products is very much hampered.
> Clarksville is a jobbing point of considerable importance, and the merchandise distributed out of Clarksville is of constantly increasing volume.
> The manufacturing of tobacco products is being more largely centralized at Clarksville, and all the other indications point to a general expansion of business interests, which will receive quite an impetus from improvement in transportation facilities.
> There is an abundant supply of timber, which has no other outlet to the market than the river. The territory served by that portion of the river between Cumberland City, Tenn., and Eddyville, Ky., has no other outlet than the river, and so long as the service is uncertain, the country can not be developed. The result of continuous navigation for this particular locality can not be overestimated, for it has such large area and has such wonderful productiveness that it is bound to respond to improved facilities for transportation of its products, such as the building of locks and dams to the mouth of the river would afford. It is the well-defined policy of the Government to make appropriations for rivers which will bring returns for the expenditures in the way of an increased yield from the resources of the country favored, and there is no section which will show a greater increment from money spent than the great Cumberland River Valley. I would say that with this work completed there would be a decided increase in the production of various commodities to which now only indifferent attention is being given.

Mr. Chairman, in a preceding part of this argument, I have referred to our waterways as regulators of freight rates. The improvement of the Cumberland River, incomplete as it is, furnishes a striking evidence of the truth of this assertion. The river is paralleled by the Tennessee Central Railroad from Clarksville to Nashville, a distance of 65 miles, and thence to Carthage, a distance of 116 miles. Major Harts, the district engineer, in his latest report, says:

> It is reported that the Tennessee Central Railroad, which parallels the Cumberland River from Nashville to Clarksville, had rates in force before the completion of Lock and Dam A of from 18 to 26 cents per 100 pounds, and since this lock was put in operation these rates have been reduced above the lock to from 6 to 12 cents per 100 pounds.
> The quantity of grain handled by the local steamboats has increased considerably since the completion of Lock A, and a new line of steamboats, the Tyner Line, has been operating during the boating season.
> It appears from reliable information that the cost of transporting grain by river to Nashville is about 8 cents per 100 pounds from points below Evansville on the Ohio River, while it is 15 cents per 100 pounds by way of river to Henderson or Uniontown, Ky., and thence by rail to Nashville, or a saving of about 7 cents per 100 pounds by all-river transportation. Within the past year freight rates by rail have advanced 12½ to 20 per cent on every class of merchandise going south out of Nashville, while into Nashville it appears that the tariff has not been advanced. There is little doubt that the competition offered by the Cumberland River even in its present condition, is the cause of the favorable rates into Nashville.

I call attention to the following extracts from a letter written recently by Mr. Isaac T. Rhea, a prominent citizen and grain merchant of Nashville and the president of the St. Louis and Tennessee River Packet Company. Mr. Rhea says:

> The one lock that has already been constructed in the lower Cumberland (Lock A) has been a great benefit to the commerce of the river, and it has increased the movement of grain particularly to a large extent. I have brought a number of heavy cargoes of grain from the Ohio River without encountering difficulty at Harpeth Shoals, the location of the lock. Other parties have also had large cargoes. I have brought double the quantity that I was ever able to bring for many years prior to the construction of the lock.
> Nashville for many years, because of its location on the Cumberland and on the Nashville and Chattanooga road, leading to the southeast, has been an important gateway for the corn produced on the Ohio and

Wabash rivers. In the early period of Nashville's history as a grain market, Kansas and Nebraska, as well as Iowa, were unknown, except as the "Far West." There was then no grain market at either Cincinnati, Louisville, or Evansville, those cities being off the line of communication to the Southeast. The Cincinnati Southern Railroad and its connections had not been built. The Louisville and Nashville Railroad operated only from Louisville to Nashville. It had not extended its lines to St. Louis or to Cincinnati. There were no bridges across the Ohio River, and the gauges of the railroads north and south of the Ohio River were different, and these conditions presented obstacles to Louisville, Evansville, and Cincinnati becoming primary grain markets.

Under these circumstances the immense quantity of grain and farm products of the Wabash, Ohio, and Mississippi River valleys naturally moved via the Cumberland River to Nashville, where they could be transferred to the line of the Nashville and Chattanooga Railroad and connections for the Southeast; and later on the river traffic was sent south from Nashville over the Nashville and Decatur and South and North Alabama railroads to Montgomery and New Orleans territory. Nashville thus early became an important primary grain market as the result of being located upon the Cumberland, and many firms were located there engaged in the grain business. The business has increased, and to-day there are in all about 50 firms at Nashville engaged in the grain business.

Grain from the Ohio and Wabash valleys still moves through Nashville. When the Cumberland River is up, this grain can be transported to Nashville at from 7 to 8 cents per 100 pounds; but when the Cumberland is not navigable it costs 15 cents per 100 to get grain from the same river landings to Nashville. I have for forty years been familiar with this grain movement, and have bought more grain on the Ohio River than any two men now living. I pay from 3 to 4 cents per bushel more for corn when I can bring it here by Cumberland River than when I have to use the railroad. To illustrate:

When the Cumberland River is low it costs 5 cents per 100 to transport the grain on an Ohio River boat to a rail crossing; then it costs 10 cents per 100 pounds by rail from such crossing to Nashville. This excess of freight naturally comes out of the producer. This demonstrates that people living along the Ohio, Wabash, and Mississippi rivers are really more vitally interested in the improvement of the Cumberland River than are the inhabitants themselves of the region along the Cumberland.

Similar advantages would accrue to all manufactured products from Pittsburg to the mouth of the Ohio if navigation were reliable.

Capt. T. M. Gallagher, who has been for many years prominently identified with transportation on both the lower and upper Cumberland, and who has an intimate knowledge of the conditions and needs of the river, gained from actual experience as well as intelligent observation, says:

Between Nashville and Clarksville, Tenn., the Cumberland River on its north bank is paralleled by the Tennessee Central Railroad, and the effect of the competition between the railroad and the river has been to establish very low rates. For instance, between Nashville and Ashland City the rate on general merchandise was, prior to the construction of the Tennessee Central Railroad, 10 cents per 100 pounds; but, as a result of the efforts of the railroad to secure the business from the river, the rate has been reduced to 5 cents per 100 pounds. The reduction in rates on traffic moving between Nashville and Clarksville has been in about the same proportion and is attributable to the same cause.

The effect of the competition between the Tennessee Central Railroad and the river for business between Nashville and Carthage has been to reduce the rate on general merchandise from 20 cents to 10 cents per 100 pounds.

With the exception of Hartsville, Carthage, and Burnside, the entire 325 miles of river landings above Nashville are dependent wholly upon river transportation; and, on an average, a haul of from 18 to 30 miles would be required from upper Cumberland landings to get to the nearest railroad, and these hauls would have to be by wagon through a mountainous country.

He also says that—

All of the counties between Nashville and Burnside are large producers of forest products, including lumber, logs, staves, ties, hoop poles, spokes, and handles. The whole country is full of portable sawmills, and the production is simply enormous. The movement of this traffic is absolutely dependent upon river transportation, and the season is scarcely long enough to move the traffic, even though it be moved with the greatest expedition. Not only does the low stage of water prevent the navigation of the river by boats, but it also prevents the rafting of logs. Owing to the tremendous weight of the timber products it would be unprofitable to attempt to haul them through the mountainous country above Nashville to the nearest railroad stations, and consequently their transportation has to await the stage of the river.

Mr. George Doubleday, of Nashville, general manager of the Ryman Line of steamboats, which operates on the lower Cumberland River, says:

Since the construction of Lock A the loading of the boats in the lower Cumberland is determined by the condition of the water between Clarksville and Lock A, the difficulty at Harpeth Shoals having been entirely obviated. Since the construction of Lock A we have been enabled to bring full trips to Nashville, frequently through the month of June. We are still, however, compelled to reduce our tonnage fully one-third toward the middle or latter part of June on account of the conditions below Lock A, and two or three weeks after the first reduction another reduction of one-third follows, until the tonnage becomes so light that the boat can not operate at a profit.

If the two projected locks were constructed at Brush Creek and at Palmyra, as located, we would be able to run ten months in an average year, and in exceptionally favorable years we would be able to run the year round at a profit.

I have quoted from these gentlemen, Mr. Chairman, because the conclusions reached by them are the result of a careful study of navigation conditions on the river, brought about by their long identification with its interests, and because I am satisfied that, for the reasons stated, their views are of such importance as to deserve the careful consideration of Congress. May we not, with all confidence, expect greater results, benefiting a much larger territory and greater number of people, if the remaining five locks on the lower Cumberland River are undertaken and speedily completed and an outlet to the Ohio River secured for every month in the year?

Mr. Chairman, there should be no longer any hesitation on the part of Congress to make the necessary appropriations for the improvement of the lower Cumberland River. The work has been already too long delayed. The great natural resources of that section, its fertile soil and varied crops, the products of its manufactories, and its great commercial advantages justify the comparatively small appropriations, which will be required to make that portion of the river navigable all the year round. It is settled, sir, by an intelligent, loyal, and liberty-loving people. They are the worthy descendants and successors of those brave and daring pioneers, who, more than one hundred years ago, left their peaceful homes and, crossing the Cumberland Mountains, penetrated the rich wilderness of what was then the "Far West," finally planting the standard of civilization on the banks of the Cumberland, where the city of Nashville is now located. Since that time, there has been no call of duty to which they have not quickly responded. During the early years of this Republic, when a powerful foreign foe landed upon her shores, this section of the country furnished the commander in chief and the brave riflemen, who marched more than 1,000 miles, and gave to the world an example of American valor and prowess by administering a crushing defeat to the enemy. No less loyal and useful in peace than in war they have devoted themselves to the upbuilding and development of this section until, as a result of their labor and their energy, it now truly blossoms like the rose. [Applause.]

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAW].

Mr. LAW. Mr. Chairman, I desire to avail myself of the privilege accorded me to insert in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement of the genesis, history, and status of the project to create a harbor in Jamaica Bay, New York, for which the river and harbor bill, now up for consideration in the House, provides an appropriation of $250,500. I wish to dispel, if I can, the erroneous impression that seems to have prevailed on the part of some that the project is not for the immediate future, but for coming generations. I expect to be able to show to the satisfaction of those interested in the matter that if this project receives the support and cooperation of the city of New York to which it is entitled and upon which its success depends, there is no practical reason that can be assigned why work can not be actually commenced in the year 1910.

It is perhaps pertinent at this point to say a few words concerning the physical characteristics of Jamaica Bay and its geographical relation to the city of New York. The bay measures about 6 miles east and west and about 4 miles north and south. It is connected with the ocean by Rockaway Inlet and constitutes a perfectly sheltered harbor. It has a water surface of approximately 25 square miles, with an entrance less than half a mile wide. Its waters are generally shallow, but penetrated by natural channels radiating from the entrance toward various points on the shore. The expense of necessary dredging will be at a minimum, because the material to be dredged will be principally sand and gravel and some clay. The reports of the United States Geological Survey show that no rock is to be encountered. The entrance to the bay is about 7 miles east of the Narrows, and is readily accessible either from the ocean or from New York Bay.

The New York connecting railroad skirts the shores of the bay and will connect with the Pennsylvania Railroad to the west and with the New York, New Haven and Hartford and the New York Central railroads to the north and east. The bay occupies the southeastern portion of Greater New York and comprises more than one-fourth of the combined areas of the boroughs of Brooklyn and Queens. It is surrounded by a vast territory of unimproved land and marsh land, which can be acquired by the city of New York and reclaimed by the dredged material from the channels proposed to be constructed. According to the estimate of Hon. Edward M. Grout, former comptroller of the city of New York, at least 16,000 acres of valuable land can be made by the city of New York, the value of which will be greater than the total cost of the improvement to the city. It is important at this point that we consider the facts and circumstances making necessary further development and extension of the New York water front. An absolute need of increased water front and dockage facilities in and about the shores of New York has arisen, caused by the marvelous growth of that city during the past few years and the tremendous increase in the commerce of its port. According to the reports of the census taken in the year 1890, the present city of New York then had a population of 2,507,414. The census taken in the year 1900 shows a net increase of population during the ten years from 1890 to 1900 of 928,788. In ten years' time this city added to its population more residents than were in the year 1900 to be found in any other city in the United States, save Chicago and Philadelphia. The report of the New York state census taken in 1905, shows a total population for the city of New York in that year of 4,013,781, or a net increase of 576,579 over the population of 1900. Again, in five years this city has added to its population more residents than in the year 1900 were to be found in any other city of the United States, save Chicago and Philadelphia.

The increase in commerce of the port of New York has kept pace with its tremendous strides in population. During the thirty years between 1875 and 1905 the value of the imports and exports entered and cleared at the port of New York practically doubled, while the tonnage in foreign trade alone increased at a still greater rate. The total value of manufactured products in New York and Brooklyn in 1905 showed a net increase since the year 1880 of more than 100 per cent. In his report to the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, Col. John G. D. Knight, who had in charge the government surveys of Jamaica Bay, in discussing the future tonnage at the port of New York reaches his conclusions, after exhaustive study, in the following language:

> We can say that this tonnage will greatly increase and that it is thought that in ten years available water front for wharfage around Manhattan and in upper New York Bay will be exhausted. Provision for additional frontage must be made, which provision should be on New York Bay, if practicable, and Jamaica Bay affords the only site for such addition.

It was only five years ago that this scheme to create a harbor in Jamaica Bay was regarded by the vast majority of people as a mere dream, so far as the present generation is concerned. It was generally believed that if the thing was done, it would be in the far distant future and for the use of future generations, and yet it has happened that during that five years' period of time such practical progress has been made that now the initial appropriation of $250,500 to commence actual work is being made by Congress, and it is confidently believed that the city of New York will shortly make its initial appropriation of $1,000,000 for the same purpose.

I believe that the people of Brooklyn will be interested to know the steps by which this progress has been achieved and the practical ideas that have prevailed in bringing about the result, and the purpose of this statement is mainly to give a concise history of the improvement.

After a most painstaking study and investigation of the subject I became convinced that the primary condition of success rested in a plan of cooperation as between the United States Government and the city of New York. The reason for the necessity of such cooperation will be apparent upon considering the practical situation. It was obvious that the United States would not expend vast sums of money in dredging channels unless the General Government could be assured that the city of New York would construct the docks and other appurtenances necessary to make said channels available for commerce. On the other hand, the city of New York would not, of course, construct such docks and piers without assurance that the United States would dredge the channels necessary to make them available for use. Hence was the absolute necessity of providing for a cooperative plan. Accordingly, in the winter of 1907 there was inserted in the rivers and harbors act of that year a provision directing the Secretary of War to cause a preliminary examination or survey to be made of—

> The waters of Jamaica Bay, including entrance to said bay at Rockaway Inlet and those waters having their outlet in Dead Horse Inlet, with a view to framing a plan for their improvement and recommending the order of such improvement, with the cost thereof, and to recommend the proportion of such cost to be borne by the city of New York; and the Secretary of War is hereby requested to confer and cooperate with the commissioner of docks and ferries of the city of New York, or with any other duly authorized agents, officers, or representatives of the city of New York, and with any commission of engineers appointed, or who shall hereafter be appointed, to survey or examine said bay, and to recommend to the city of New York plans for the improvement of said Jamaica Bay or the lands in and about said bay.

After drafting this provision, and before it was submitted to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives, I submitted a copy of the draft to the members of the Jamaica Bay Improvement Commission, to which I shall make further reference hereafter, and in turn, accompanied by two members of this commission, I called upon Mayor McClellan, of New York, and submitted it to him for his approval. At the close of this interview the mayor heartily approved the provision, but expressed doubt as to the possibility of getting it enacted into law. It was, however, incorporated in the rivers and harbors bill which was passed and approved by the President March 2, 1907.

It is unquestionably true that the genesis of the movement, so far as definite and practical effect is concerned, is found in a communication on the subject addressed to the commissioners of the sinking fund of the city of New York, dated March 17, 1905, by Hon. Edward M. Grout, then comptroller of the city of New York. The plans now under consideration for the improvement of Jamaica Bay follow the general recommendations contained in Mr. Grout's communication to rather a remarkable degree. Mr. Grout's communication closes with the following recommendation:

> I therefore request your consideration of the appointment of a commission to recommend plans for the development of the water front of the city outside of Manhattan Island, and especially of the development of Jamaica Bay.

Following the recommendation of Mr. Grout, the board of estimate and apportionment of the city of New York on March 2, 1906, passed a resolution authorizing the appointment by the mayor of a commission of engineers for the purpose of reporting upon the general improvement and development of Jamaica Bay in the boroughs of Brooklyn and Queens, and also upon the condition of the water front of the city of New York other than that of Manhattan Island. Pursuant to this resolution, on April 26, 1906, the mayor appointed Philip P. Farley, William G. Ford, and John J. McLaughlin to compose the Jamaica Bay improvement commission. On May 31, 1907, the said commission submitted to the board of estimate and apportionment of the city of New York a majority report signed by Mr. Farley and Mr. McLaughlin, and a minority report signed by Mr. Ford. These reports were made prior to any conferences with the Secretary of War, as provided in the said provision of the rivers and harbors act of March 2, 1907. The majority report recommended a plan estimated to cost approximately $14,000,000; the minority report recommended a more elaborate plan, estimated to cost approximately $47,000,000. These reports were based largely upon the assumption that the city of New York would make the improvement without federal aid, and have since been superseded by the reports of the same commission, submitted December 27, 1909. The life of the Jamaica Bay improvement commission expired by limitation on June 1, 1907. Immediately thereafter and under date of June 5, 1907, I addressed the following communication to the mayor of the city of New York:

Hon. GEORGE B. MCCLELLAN,
Mayor of the City of New York, Borough Hall, New York.

MY DEAR MR. MAYOR: You will probably remember that in the month of January I called upon you in company with Mr. William G. Ford, a member of the commission of engineers appointed by you on behalf of the city, to investigate the project for the improvement of Jamaica Bay, and at that time submitted to you a proposed provision to be inserted in the river and harbor bill, providing for a general survey of Jamaica Bay in cooperation with the city's commission of engineers, with a view to framing a plan to be carried out jointly by the city and the Federal Government. That provision was approved by you and was incorporated in the river and harbor bill. I inclose herewith a copy of said bill. Said provision will be found on page 47.

I am informed that the city's commission of engineers has submitted its report to the board of estimate and apportionment, making proper reference therein to said provision of the river and harbor bill.

I am also informed that the life of the city's commission of engineers expired on June 1 and that no provision has been made for the extension of the life of said commission for the purpose of cooperation and conference with the government engineers. If the life of the commission is extended or renewed, I believe there is no doubt that a joint plan can be agreed upon and that the Federal Government will be prepared to bear a considerable portion of the expense. If the city's commission is not continued in existence, and the government engineers are not afforded the opportunity to confer with a commission representing the city, an adverse report on the proposed survey will probably follow, and I believe that will mean a very decided setback to the proposed plans.

I am informed that the proposed report of the city's commission will come up for consideration before the board of estimate and apportionment at its meeting on Friday of the present week, and I believe a statement of the situation should be in your hands prior to that date.

Unfortunately, it is impossible for me to call upon you personally before Friday, but I shall try to do so the early part of next week. I should have called this matter to your attention before, but I was led to believe that the life of the city's commission would be extended to July 1 by act of the board of estimate and apportionment. This appears not to have been done.

Yours, very truly,
CHARLES B. LAW.

The mayor submitted the above communication to the board of estimate and apportionment at its regular meeting on June 7, 1907, and, pursuant to a resolution then passed by the board, the said commission was reappointed, and to its original duties was added that of conferring with the Secretary of War relative to the survey or examination of Jamaica Bay and to recommend plans for the improvement thereof. It fell to Col. John G. D. Knight, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, who was then district engineer in charge at New York, to represent the Secretary of War in the conferences with the Jamaica Bay improvement commission, which began immediately after the reappointment of the commission in June, 1907, and continued up to the early part of the year 1909. In view of the results that have followed, I take a natural pride in the fact that it was my privilege to present the commission to the district engineer, the representative of the Secretary of War, and to inform him that the city of New York had clothed the commission with power to represent it in the conferences that were to follow. The conferences were had mainly with a view to agreeing upon the location of a principal channel, but also relative to distributing secondary channels through the collection of islands lying in the central portion of Jamaica Bay.

When a general plan for the improvement and the location of channels had been tentatively agreed upon, the actual surveys were commenced by the army engineers in the spring of 1908, and were finally completed late in the fall of that year. Under date of January 30, 1909, the district engineer submitted his report, based upon the general agreement between him and the Jamaica Bay Improvement Commission, as a result of the conferences to which I have alluded. The joint plan embraced an entrance channel at Rockaway Inlet with a first depth of 18 feet and width of 500 feet, and a main interior channel extending from the southeast corner of Barren Island northerly and easterly, skirting the westerly and northerly shores of Jamaica Bay, to Cornells Creek, in Queens County, with a first depth and width to be the same as that of the entrance channel. As the needs of commerce may require, both the entrance and interior main channels are to be deepened to 30 feet. The entrance channel is to have an ultimate width of 1,500 feet and the interior channel 1,000 feet.

The joint plan of improvement contemplates the use of the material dredged from the main interior channel to fill in behind the city's bulkhead, the purpose being to make valuable land for the city of New York and to save the enormous expense that would be involved in taking the dredged material out to sea. In this connection arises one of the most striking and ingenious features of the report of Colonel Knight to the War Department recommending that the dredging of the main channel be required of the city of New York, and that the city be reimbursed therefor at the rate of 10 cents per cubic yard, which is the cost of dredging the main channel as estimated by the majority of the Jamaica Bay Improvement Commission. The purpose of this recommendation was to avoid complications on the part of the city of New York with government contractors, as such complications would be sure to arise if an attempt were made to coordinate areas of dredging with areas of fill at varying distances each class from the other, the areas of dredging to be indicated by the Government and the areas of fill to depend upon the construction of embankments or bulkheads by the city.

The report of Colonel Knight, submitted to the Chief of Engineers on January 30, 1909, was forthwith transmitted to the board of engineers for rivers and harbors at Washington. It contemplated an expenditure of $8,610,050 by the Government. It was considered at length and in detail at two sessions of the said board. On February 16, or thereabouts, I learned that the board contemplated reducing the allowance to the city of New York for the dredging of the main interior channel to 5 cents per cubic yard. This would have meant a loss to the city of New York of approximately $3,000,000. I also learned that in accordance with the custom of the board not to make substantial changes in a report of a district engineer without giving parties interested an opportunity to be heard, the secretary of the board had been instructed to communicate with the mayor of the city of New York, notifying him that a hearing would be given on March 2, 1909. This would have made it impossible to secure any legislation at that session of Congress, which would adjourn on March 4, or only two days later. Fortunately the letter had not been mailed, and I succeeded in having the date of the hearing changed to February 23. Having secured this change of date, I immediately went to New York and conferred with city officials.

The result was that at the hearing on February 23 the mayor was officially represented by Mr. Nelson P. Lewis, chief engineer of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment, and the Jamaica Bay Improvement Commission was represented by Mr. William G. Ford. The result of the very effective arguments offered by Mr. Lewis and Mr. Ford was that a compromise at 8 cents per cubic yard was reached and a saving to the city of New York of $1,770,000 was effected. As modified by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors the report of the War Department recommends that the Federal Government shall ultimately expend upon the project $7,430,050.

The rivers and harbors bill of that session of Congress (1907) had already passed the House, and the last meeting of the Committee on Commerce of the Senate for the consideration of the bill was held February 24. The report of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors was not available for inspection until the morning of that day. However, after inspection of the report, I was fortunate enough to secure a hearing before the Senate committee, and succeeded in persuading them to adopt the following amendment, which was inserted in the rivers and harbors bill of that year:

> The Secretary of War is hereby directed to report, as soon as he is satisfied that the city of New York is prepared to undertake the work to be done by it preliminary to or contemporaneous with any dredging to be done by the United States Government, as recommended in the report and plan of the Secretary of War transmitted under date of February 25, 1909, for the improvement of Jamaica Bay, New York, and its entrance at Rockaway Inlet and Dead Horse Inlet.

The present appropriation of $250,500 is based upon the following recommendation contained in the report of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors:

> The board further recommends that the 18-foot entrance channel should not be dredged until the Secretary of War is satisfied that the city of New York is prepared to undertake its part of the general plan of improvement outlined above. The estimated cost of this channel for first development of 18 feet is $250,500, and this is the amount of the first appropriation necessary under the conditions cited.

Immediately after the passage of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1909, the field of activity shifted to the state capitol at Albany. From time immemorial there had existed a sharp dispute between the State and the city of New York as to the ownership of lands under water in Jamaica Bay. Obviously the city of New York could not safely proceed with the dredging of the main interior channel and with the expenditure of millions of dollars in the improvement until it had absolute and undisputed title to the lands under water in Jamaica Bay. The settlement of this title had been under consideration for a dozen years by the corporation counsel, and litigation in one form or another had been in progress for at least five years. It was conceded that the question of the title could not, or would not, be settled through litigation in the courts for many years yet to come. This meant the indefinite postponement of the improvement. Accordingly, Mr. William G. Ford, of the Jamaica Bay Improvement Commission, drafted a measure to be introduced in the state legislature, by which all the right, title, and interest of the State in and to lands under water in Jamaica Bay would be ceded to the city of New York. I went to Albany with Mr. Ford, and together we succeeded in putting the measure in such shape as to satisfy the state land office and the attorney-general. In its final shape it ceded the said lands under water to the city of New York for the purpose of creating a harbor, but further provided that the grant should become operative upon the Government making its first appropriation for the creation of the new harbor, or upon the city of New York appropriating and setting aside a sum not less than $1,000,000 for the same purpose. The bill was introduced in the assembly by Assemblyman Isaac Sargent, whose name it bears, and in the senate by Senator Charles Alt. The bill was passed with comparative ease in the assembly, but in the senate great difficulty was experienced because of the constant interference of private interests owning upland about Jamaica Bay and who wanted to get grants of land under water in front of their upland property. Amendments were twice injected into the bill in this manner. These amendments were not of themselves serious in their character, as they constituted only slight exceptions to the operation of the bill, but they were serious in obstructing the passage of the bill.

The last amendment was thus injected into the bill on Tuesday of the last week of the session. As the legislature adjourned on Friday and the reprinted bill had to lie on the desks three legislative days before passage, unless the governor interfered with an emergency message, it seemed at that time unlikely that the bill would succeed. However, on the following day we appealed to Governor Hughes for his assistance. An emergency message from Governor Hughes certifying to the public importance of the bill and to the necessity of its immediate consideration by the legislature resulted in its passage that day by the senate and the adoption of the senate amendments by the assembly. The bill was thereafter returned to Governor Hughes by Mayor McClellan with his approval. It was for a time contended that the bill had not been returned by the mayor within the constitutional limit of time. This view was, however, overruled by the attorney-general, and on May 28, 1909, the governor summoned all parties interested in the bill to a public hearing on the afternoon of that day. A considerable number of private concerns owning upland about Jamaica Bay appeared by attorneys and otherwise in opposition to the bill, on the ground that they had not made application to the land office for grants of land under water in front of their upland property and that the bill would prevent their securing such grants. Those of us who had been responsible for the introduction and passage of the bill conceded that the effect of it would be to prevent such grants to private interests, and that one of the main purposes of the bill was to prevent exactly that sort of thing and to save to the city of New York the enormous expense that would be involved in regaining title to such lands for general commercial purposes. We contended that the rights of the upland owners to access by water was subject and subordinate to the general purposes of commerce. This view prevailed, and on the following day, May 29, 1909, Governor Hughes approved the bill with the following memorandum:

STATE OF NEW YORK,
EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Albany, May 29, 1909.

Memorandum filed with assembly bill No. 2354 (senate reprint, No. 1633) entitled "An act to grant to the city of New York certain lands under water in Jamaica Bay and vicinity."

Approved.

This bill bears the indorsement of the clerk of the assembly that it was transmitted to the mayor of the city of New York on May 1, 1909. It was received by me, on its return, on May 17, 1909. I am informed by the mayor that the bill was actually delivered to him on May 3, 1909. Under the opinion of the attorney-general that the time for its return is to be computed from the date of such delivery, I have acted upon the bill. The certificate attached to the bill does not show the assent of two-thirds of the members elected to each branch of the legislature. But I am advised that such assent was, in fact, given and is shown by the record of both houses.

This bill is designed to enable the city of New York to cooperate with the Federal Government in the creation of a new harbor in and about Jamaica Bay, including the making of channels, basins, slips, and other necessary adjuncts, and, as the bill recites, to secure "the advancement of the commercial interests of the city, State, and Nation." For this purpose the grant is made to the city of New York of such right, title, and interest as the State of New York may have in and to the land under water in Jamaica Bay and Rockaway Inlet and the tributaries thereto, as stated. The bill provides that the grant "shall become operative upon the United States Government making its first appropriation for the creation of the new harbor mentioned in this act or upon the city of New York appropriating and setting aside a sum of not less than $1,000,000 for the same purpose."

It is of manifest importance that provision be made for the proper protection of the public interest in and about the waters of New York, and that the necessary and important developments of the future should not be retarded or made more expensive to the community by failure at this time to take suitable steps to safeguard the public right. It may be regretted that the bill contains any exception to its operation. But this is not a reason for its disapproval, for further delay will permit still more numerous exceptions and detract from the public opportunity which should be provided.

CHARLES E. HUGHES.

Mr. Ford and I had spent about three weeks at Albany in securing passage of this measure, and its final approval by the governor of the State removed one of the most serious obstacles in the way of prosecuting the project. I believe few have realized the importance of this measure and the strenuous character of the fight that was waged for its enactment.

The report of the War Department, heretofore referred to in detail, was submitted to Congress on February 26, 1909. This report was based upon a general agreement or understanding between Colonel Knight, the district engineer, and the Jamaica Bay Improvement Commission as a result of the long-continued conferences to which I have heretofore alluded. The substance of this understanding was that the Federal Government should dredge the entrance channel and should reimburse the city to the extent of 8 cents per cubic yard for the dredging of the main interior channel.

It will thus be seen that the General Government exercises no jurisdiction in connection with this improvement inside the bulkhead line, as determined tentatively by the United States district engineer and the Jamaica Bay Improvement Commission. What should be done inside and from this bulkhead line in the way of construction of docks and piers and auxiliary basins or the reclamation of land was left to the city of New York, subject only to the recommendation that the 18-foot entrance channel should not be dredged until the Secretary of War was satisfied that the city of New York was prepared to undertake its part of the joint plan of improvement. It will thus be seen that the report of the Government's district engineer, approved by the Secretary of War and submitted to Congress on February 26, 1909, subject to the changes I have indicated as to the amount to be allowed for the dredging of the main interior channel, was a report concerning the part of the joint plan of the improvement to be undertaken by the General Government outside the bulkhead line, leaving the Jamaica Bay Improvement Commission to report to the city of New York what it should do inside and from the bulkhead line in the way of carrying out the joint plan of the improvement.

The report of the district engineer and the Secretary of War as to the part of the improvement to be undertaken by the General Government having been made as a result of the aforesaid conferences, it was then plainly in order, in pursuance of said general arrangement, for the Jamaica Bay Improvement Commission to report to the city of New York recommending plans for improvement inside and from the bulkhead line, and the cost thereof.

Accordingly, during the early part of the summer of 1909 the Jamaica Bay Improvement Commission recommended that the city of New York should appropriate $75,000, to be used for expenses of the commission, including the prosecution of field work in Jamaica Bay necessary to determine with precision the location of the harbor lines agreed upon tentatively between the city of New York and the United States Government, theretofore shown graphically only, the determination of quantities involved in the excavation, the filling in of the lands, building of bulkheads, and in acquiring the other necessary data upon which to base a more definite report. The appropriation was promptly made by the board of estimate and apportionment and confirmed by the board of aldermen. The work went steadily on during the summer and fall of 1909, and on December 27, 1909, the commission again submitted a majority report signed by Mr. Farley and Mr. McLaughlin and a minority report signed by Mr. Ford. Both reports are favorable to the plan of cooperation with the United States Government, but differ materially as to scope and detail. I think the main points of difference in the reports can be best stated in parallel form, as follows:

Recommendations as to procedure for the near future:

FORD REPORT.	FARLEY-M'LAUGHLIN REPORT.
1. Creating preliminary 18-foot main channel throughout entire length, giving the Borough of Queens access to the sea as well as the Borough of Brooklyn.	1. Creating preliminary 18-foot main channel only part of the way, to the exclusion of the Borough of Queens.
2. Disapproves the selection in advance and consequent advertisement of one spot in the bay, to the exclusion of all others, for high-class development at the expense of the city prior to the purchase of the adjacent lands at a fair but not exorbitant price.	2. Select at this time for future high development at the expense of the city one particular spot in the bay to the exclusion of all others, no part of which is owned by the city.
3. The connection of the 18-foot main channel with the entire adjacent shore front after having developed for commercial enterprises some spot or spots to be selected hereafter.	3. Silent as to this.

The difference in cost to the city for dredging the 4 miles of the preliminary 18-foot channel beyond where Messrs. Farley and McLaughlin would stop it would amount to about $150,000 and would give Queens Borough an outlet.

While it may be regarded as my duty to confine my official activity mainly to the federal end of this enterprise, nevertheless, as a citizen of Brooklyn, I certainly am entitled to take an interest in the city's plans in meeting the Federal Government, the same as I took an active part and interest as a citizen in the Sargent bill at Albany, and I do not hesitate to say that while both reports are commendable in character, I believe it would be a serious error to select in advance any one locality in the bay for high-class development until the city has acquired the lowlands about the bay which will be required for the purposes of the improvement. I think that the selection of such locality or localities for special development before the city has acquired such lands would result in unnecessary expense to the city. I am also of the opinion that Queens County should not be left out of account, and that the 18-foot main interior channel should be carried around to Cornells Creek in Queens County. The city is dealing with a big project, and while proceeding with caution and due regard for reasonable economy, it should remember that the money devoted to this project is an investment for the city rather than an expenditure. I am very much gratified to learn that the board of estimate and apportionment of the city of New York is now unanimous in favor of appropriating a large sum of money to start this splendid work of public improvement.

Thus it appears that after five years of persistent effort the success of the plan to create a harbor in Jamaica Bay is assured by the certainty of large appropriations by the Federal Government and the city of New York, respectively, to carry out a cooperative plan.

As I look back upon the history of the unusual events that have culminated in the practical success that is now assured, I am disposed to think that while obstacles have been encountered at almost every step of the way, the greatest difficulties of all were encountered in getting the thing started. When I first took my seat in Congress in December, 1905, I found that few, if any, of the members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House had ever heard the name of Jamaica Bay. At the very start I had numerous talks with the distinguished chairman of that committee, and tried by all conceivable means to get him interested in the matter. I finally decided that the only way in which I could impress the Rivers and Harbors Committee was to secure a hearing for a delegation of public-spirited citizens from Brooklyn, who were blessed with enough of the spirit of optimism to believe the thing to be a possibility. The hearing was arranged during the winter, and Brooklyn responded in a manner I shall never forget. To the men who took part in these early efforts at Washington the greatest credit is due. Among them were such men as Henry A. Meyer, Adolph Kiendl, John R. Corbin, John B. Creighton, Terrence F. Curley, John O'Connor, Elwin S. Piper, and a number of others whose names I do not now recall. The committee had limited us in advance to one-half hour's time. So earnest, however, were the pleas of the men who came down from Brooklyn and so impressive were their arguments that nearly two hours' time was readily conceded and consumed. Although there was no regular river and harbor bill at that session, the result of these hearings was the passage of a special bill providing for a survey with a view to estimating the cost of dredging the Coney Island channel to a depth of 20 feet and a width of 600 feet, and with a view to estimating the cost of an entrance channel into Jamaica Bay with the same depth and width. This was only one of two bills reported out of the Rivers and Harbors Committee that year.

The result of the survey thus authorized was the subsequent appropriation of $188,300 for the Coney Island channel. The report on the survey for the entrance channel to Jamaica Bay was adverse in its character, mainly on the ground that the cost was found to be excessive when disconnected with any plan for the improvement of the interior of the bay. The subsequent survey for both entrance and interior channels provided for in the river and harbor act of 1907 overcame the setback that was experienced with reference to the 1906 survey for the entrance channel. There is no doubt whatever now that success was dependent upon uniting the plan for the improvement of the entrance channel with the plan for the improvement of the interior of the bay.

It may also here be remarked that the one important result of the hearings before the Rivers and Harbors Committee during the winter of 1905 to 1906 was that the chairman of the committee, Hon. THEODORE E. BURTON, now United States Senator from the State of Ohio, became sufficiently interested in the claims made, so that in the summer of 1906, upon my invitation and the invitation of the men I have above referred to, he came to Brooklyn and made a thorough personal inspection of Jamaica Bay. I believe that Mr. BURTON'S personal inspection of the bay was a matter of the greatest importance in subsequent events.

It may perhaps, in conclusion, be pertinent to say that next to the matter of making the start the greatest difficulty that has been encountered has been the spirit of pessimism, or, at least, the lack of optimism, that was for so long a time so widely prevalent. The optimists are now in the vast majority, but during most of the past five years they have been in a strange minority. In this connection, I desire to emphasize the fact that if we people of Brooklyn desire to see the ultimate achievement of this project, that means so much to her future and to the coming greatness of our borough, as well as of our city, we must have an abiding faith and confidence in the possibilities that are plainly in sight and an abiding faith and confidence in our ability to achieve success. [Applause.]

Mr. SPARKMAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

[Mr. BURNETT addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

[Mr. SMALL addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. GOEBEL. Mr. Chairman, while I have at all times advocated the improvement of our rivers and harbors, I am particularly concerned in the improvement of the Ohio River. The district which I represent borders on that river. In part I represent the great Ohio Valley, directly affected by the permanent improvement of the Ohio River. It is with great pleasure and satisfaction that I welcome this bill to the House. I am inclined to believe that the fond hopes of that magnificent organization, the Ohio Valley Improvement Association, and of all the people of the Ohio Valley will be realized. Congress is to enter upon a new policy regarding our waterways. Unbusinesslike methods and wasteful expenditures are to be disregarded and avoided. Projects which have the approval of the engineers are to be provided for until their final completion, and we are to return to the old custom of making annual river and harbor appropriations, so that projects entered upon may not be delayed for want of an appropriation. Work is to be pushed to a final completion within a given time. At last the committee has realized that biennial and triennial appropriation bills are not conducive to good legislation, but wasteful of the public funds.

Mr. Chairman, there prevails to-day in our broad land a very strong, healthy sentiment in favor of improving our national waterways. This has been crystallized more and more by conditions that have arisen which make it absolutely essential that Congress take up this great problem and provide the means. It is strange to relate now that in the early history of the country it was seriously contended that Congress did not have the power to appropriate for improvements of rivers and harbors. But that question has long been settled. Yet opposition prevailed up to 1882, when many Members of Congress went down to defeat at the following election for their support of a river and harbor bill. This opposition was still manifest in 1896, when President Cleveland returned a river and harbor bill. It was notice to the Congress that such bills were not favored by the administration nor supported by public sentiment, and they came into the House with less frequency. Of necessity the amounts carried were large, and far in excess of what might have been fairly and justly appropriated for in an annual bill. Many worthy projects were omitted for lack of funds. Uncompleted works entailed a larger expense, not alone in their preservation, but at the final completion.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the time will never come again when the present sentiment of our people shall be the reverse and Congress drift into that unbusinesslike and wasteful habit, but that we will go on in an orderly manner under a well-considered policy that will assure the conservation of our inland waterways. In regard to the latter, President Taft in no uncertain words has undertaken to speak to the Congress. On January 14 last, in his message, he said:

> I come now to the improvement of the inland waterways. He would be blind, indeed, who did not realize that the people of the entire West, and especially those of the Mississippi Valley, have been aroused to the need there is for the improvement of our inland waterways. The Mississippi River, with the Missouri on the one hand and the Ohio on the other, would seem to offer a great natural means of interstate transportation and traffic. How far, if properly improved, they would relieve the railroads or supplement them in respect to the bulkier and cheaper commodities is a matter of conjecture. No enterprise ought to be undertaken the cost of which is not definitely ascertained and the benefit and advantage of which are not known and assured by competent engineers and other authority. When, however, a project of a definite character for the improvement of a waterway has been developed so that the plans have been drawn, the cost definitely estimated, and the traffic which will be accommodated is reasonably probable, I think it is the duty of Congress to undertake the project and make provision therefor in the proper appropriation bill.
> One of the projects which answers the description I have given is that of introducing dams into the Ohio River from Pittsburg to Cairo, so as to maintain at all seasons of the year, by slack water, a depth of 9 feet. Upward of 7 of these dams have already been constructed and 6 are under construction, while the total required is 54. The remaining cost is known to be $63,000,000.
> It seems to me that in the development of our inland waterways it would be wise to begin with this particular project and carry it through as rapidly as may be. I assume from reliable information that it can be constructed economically in twelve years.
> What has been said of the Ohio River is true in a less complete way of the improvement of the upper Mississippi from St. Paul to St. Louis, to a constant depth of 6 feet, and of the Missouri, from Kansas City to St. Louis, to a constant depth of 6 feet, and from St. Louis to Cairo to a depth of 8 feet. These projects have been pronounced practical by competent boards of army engineers, their cost has been estimated, and there is business which would follow the improvement.
> I recommend, therefore, that the present Congress, in the river and harbor bill, make provision for continuing contracts to complete these improvements.

Mr. Chairman, recurring now to the improvement of the Ohio River, it appears from the report of the engineers that to maintain a 9-foot stage of water 54 locks and dams are necessary. Dams 1 and 6 have been completed, except in minor particulars. At present there are under construction 7 other dams, namely, No. 8, near East Liverpool, Ohio; No. 11, at Wellsburg, W. Va.; No. 13, below Wheeling; No. 18, below Marietta; No. 19, below the mouth of the Little Kanawha; No. 26, below the mouth of the Great Kanawha; and No. 37, just below Cincinnati. It is expected that Nos. 8, 11, 13, 18, and 37 will be completed during the present year. A detailed survey of the site for Lock No. 7 has been completed, the property purchased, and the plans practically completed. In addition to those at present completed or under construction, there will still be required 41 locks and dams, and it is estimated that the amount necessary to complete the 41 dams will reach $57,566,800, and that in order to complete the locks and dams now under construction there will be required $3,213,800. So that the total expenditure for locks and dams for the Ohio and for a 9-foot stage of water, in addition to the amounts theretofore authorized, will make a total of $60,780,600. In accordance with a provision in the river and harbor act of 1909, detailed surveys of sites for the 16 locks and dams to and including No. 29 have been made during the past season and the plans for their construction are now in progress, although their construction has not yet been authorized.

I find in this bill that the committee has provided for the beginning of construction of Locks and Dams Nos. 7, 9, 10, and 12, which will complete the canalization of that portion of the river between Pittsburg and Wheeling; and provision is also made for the purchase of sites for Dams Nos. 14 to 29 and for the construction of Locks and Dams Nos. 29 and 48.

The amount carried in this bill of $1,000,000 is to be applied to the purchase of sites for 18 locks and dams and toward the construction of Locks and Dams Nos. 7, 9, 10, 12, 19, 20, 29, 41, and 48, with an authorization that the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for materials and work as may be necessary to prosecute the work, not to exceed in the aggregate $2,500,000, exclusive of the amounts contained in the bill and heretofore appropriated. In addition, the bill carries for continuing improvements and maintenance of the Ohio River $550,000, and for the completion of Locks and Dams Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, 8, and 11 $125,000, and there will be available without further action by Congress during the next fiscal year $100,675,000, an amount sufficient to carry on the work, with an assurance by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors that hereafter there will be an annual appropriation approximately of $5,000,000, which will insure the completion of the entire improvement within a period of twelve years.

Mr. Chairman, permit me to express the appreciation of the people I represent and my own appreciation of the magnanimous treatment which we have received from the committee in this bill. Let us hope that no backward step will be hereafter taken by the Congress, and that the time may not be far away when our people shall realize the fruits of their efforts and this river shall bear its commerce to the markets of the world, affording cheaper transportation and increased transportation facilities.

Mr. GODWIN. Mr. Chairman, the chief seaport city of North Carolina is in my congressional district. I have the honor to represent in Congress what is known as the "Cape Fear district." I am in favor of river and harbor improvement because I am in favor of lower freight rates. We need a reduction in freight rates, and to have this we must have the improvement of the waterways of the country.

The Cape Fear River, formed by the junction, in Chatham County, N. C., of the Haw and Deep rivers, which rise in the hilly country near the Blue Ridge Mountains in the northern part of the State, flows in a southerly direction into the Atlantic Ocean below Wilmington at Cape Fear, near the southern extremity of the State.

Its total length, including the above tributaries, is about 420 miles, draining an area of more than 7,500 square miles, of which 5,620 are above the mouth of the Black River, one of its largest tributaries. Above Smileys Falls, near Duke, about 27 miles above Fayetteville, the slope is very great, the river having a fall of 27 feet in 3½ miles at these falls. The total fall from the junction of the two rivers to just below Smileys Falls is 100 feet. Above Averasboro the river flows through an alluvial country with banks generally low, and a width of from 400 to 600 feet. Floods here do not generally exceed 20 feet. Below Averasboro the slope is gentle, averaging less than 3 inches per mile, but from there to about 45 miles below Fayetteville the banks are high and the stream narrow, causing a very great freshet rise, amounting occasionally to 60 or 70 feet at Fayetteville.

It is claimed that the mineral resources of the upper part of the country traversed by the river are very great, yet they are undeveloped, and navigation does not at present extend above Fayetteville.

About one hundred years ago an attempt was begun to render the river navigable above Fayetteville, and a series of locks and dams was constructed up to the confluence of the Deep and Haw rivers and for some distance up the Deep River. These were never successful financially, and were finally abandoned.

The principal products of the region along the river are lumber, timber, logs, corn, cotton, tobacco, peanuts, potatoes, and various vegetables and fruits. In 1870 the population per square mile was 22.7. Most of the river between Fayetteville and Wilmington lies in Cumberland and Bladen counties, in my congressional district. The average population of all counties adjacent to the river from Fayetteville to Wilmington is 42.5 per square mile.

Below Fayetteville the river flows generally through a flat, sandy belt thickly timbered with pine and intersected with cypress swamps. Its banks are firm and stable in the upper reaches, and are from 15 to 50 feet or more in height down to about 50 miles above Wilmington, but are overflowed in high freshets. In the 50 miles above Wilmington, except for occasional sand bluffs and shell marls, they are low and swampy, suitable in many places for the cultivation of rice. Its bed is gravel in the upper reaches, and is sand and mud in the lower part, except some clay near Fayetteville. This sand, under the influence of the sudden and frequent freshets to which the river is subject, causes many shoals. Gravel is sometimes found 5 to 7 feet below the bed, and a stiff, blue clay is generally found at depths of 15 to 20 feet.

At Point Peter, where the Northeast River is a tributary, it is 340 feet wide; 12 miles higher it is 760 feet wide; 14.5 miles above Wilmington the Black River is a tributary; 25 miles above Wilmington it is 120 feet wide. At Elizabethtown, 73 miles above Wilmington, it is 270 feet wide, and at Fayetteville, 115 miles above Wilmington, it is 200 to 250 feet wide, generally ranging from 175 to 275 in width.

The tidal range at the mouth of the river, 27 miles below Wilmington, is 4.5 feet; at Wilmington it is 2.5 feet. Tides are perceptible up to White Hall, 54 miles above Wilmington, and at extreme low stages several miles farther up.

The present available depths in the river above Wilmington are: Eight feet to Kings Bluff, 38 miles above Wilmington; 4 feet to Walkers Bluff, 60 miles above Wilmington; 2½ feet to Elizabethtown, 73 miles above Wilmington; and 2 feet to Fayetteville, 115 miles above Wilmington.

The project that the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House has so kindly adopted in this bill now pending for immediate passage provides for a uniform depth of 8 feet from Wilmington to Fayetteville the year round for continuous navigation. This bill authorizes the construction of two locks and dams, costing $615,000. This is the first time the House of Representatives has ever recognized the upper Cape Fear improvement.

Mr. Chairman, I have given a comprehensive history and description of the Cape Fear River. The river extends through my district, a distance of over 200 miles, and is the chief river in the State of North Carolina. Therefore I am deeply interested in its improvement. But before discussing further the upper Cape Fear project I desire to have something to say in behalf of the lower Cape Fear at and below Wilmington, and what is widely known as the 30-foot project.

Early in June, 1907, I was requested, as the Member of Congress from the Cape Fear district, to meet a committee appointed by the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Wilmington to discuss the matter of deepening the harbor of the Cape Fear and making a 30-foot channel from Wilmington to the sea, thus to strengthen Wilmington's claim for recognition as a gateway port. Several years prior to that time, or about the year 1895, the railroads were appealed to by the chamber of commerce for rates that would place Wilmington in competition with deep-water ports. This was denied, owing to the fact that the depth of water in the Cape Fear did not justify making Wilmington a gateway port. The Chamber of Commerce of Wilmington could not but admit, to some extent, the force of this argument. The chamber of commerce appointed a committee to confer with me in reference to the 30-foot project. Mr. J. A. Taylor, president of the chamber; Messrs. H. G. Smallbones, H. W. Malloy, W. E. Worth, R. A. Parsley, and James H. Chadbourn composed the committee, Mr. Chadbourn being named as chairman of the committee.

The 30-foot project was fully discussed, and it was agreed that the matter should be brought to the attention of the people and of Congress. The press of the city of Wilmington and the entire State gave its enthusiastic indorsement by commenting upon the many benefits to be derived. The project was so strongly indorsed it was soon realized that the matter had assumed a greater importance than a mere local scheme.

The 30-foot project committee was active in its labors. As a result of its deliberations it was decided as the deepening of the Cape Fear was of vital interest to the State at large it would be wise to call in the assistance of all those most deeply interested in the project. Therefore a meeting was called, to be held in Wilmington, November 5, 1907, and to this meeting all the towns in North Carolina were invited to send delegates. The meeting was successful beyond our greatest hopes, and the North Carolina Waterways Association was formed to supersede the chamber of commerce committee. This association was organized to foster the local interests of North Carolina, having as its particular charge the deepening of the Cape Fear harbor, thereby benefiting the whole State by giving North Carolina a deep-water port as a gateway.

The meeting was well attended by delegates from the interior cities, also by our Senators and Representatives in Congress, and the association was formed by electing a president, secretary and treasurer, and executive board of 8 members and 10 vice-presidents, one from each congressional district. At the meeting the following resolutions, prepared by Maj. E. J. Hale, of Fayetteville, were adopted:

Resolved:

1. That this meeting highly approves the splendid work of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress; that it take a leaf out of its book and organize a North Carolina branch thereof; and that such branch organization adopt the rules and regulations of the national organization, so far as applicable to the State.

2. That we hail with pleasure the awakening of our people in the business center of our State to the vast importance of concerted action, directed to the improvement of our waterways by the Government, and that we heartily thank the patriotic business men of Wilmington for the notable and efficient contributions which they have made to the movement for a North Carolina gateway by calling together and causing the assembly of such a representative body as this, and the Hon. John A. Fox for the very able work which he has done throughout the State in aid of it.

3. That we pledge ourselves to do all in our power to secure adequate appropriations by the Government for the completion at the earliest moment of the great project of a 30-foot channel from the sea to Wilmington, recognizing the fact impressed upon us by over a hundred years of experience, as well as by the teaching of science, that nature has fixed the gateway of middle and western North Carolina by and through the Cape Fear River.

4. That we heartily indorse the project for securing 8 feet of water at all seasons from Wilmington to Fayetteville, which has thrice been unanimously indorsed by the legislature of North Carolina, approved by act of Congress, and for the beginning of which an appropriation has been made, and that we pledge our best endeavors to secure an appropriation for its immediate completion.

5. That we give our hearty indorsement to the great scheme of an interstate inland waterway for a part of the North Carolina section of which the Government has already made an appropriation, and to the general purpose of improving the navigation of all our rivers and streams further inland as speedily as possible, to the end that we may secure for North Carolina the advantages which such a system has provided for the European nations and for some portions of our own country.

The Wilmington Chamber of Commerce employed an expert on river and harbor work, who made a tour of the State and addressed the people on the subject of deepening the Cape Fear River and making Wilmington a gateway port. He visited many cities of North Carolina and aroused great interest in the 30-foot project. Afterwards Mr. James H. Chadbourn, the president of the association, visited Washington to secure the aid of our two Senators and all my colleagues from North Carolina in the project of deepening the harbor of the Cape Fear, and he was assured of their undivided and active support in the enterprise. In addition to this, the North Carolina Waterways Association has held regular meetings, and at each one of these meetings the support has been active and enthusiastic. It is now conceded throughout the State that the deepening of the Cape Fear harbor is a matter of greatest importance to the business interests of North Carolina.

The present continuing work on the river at and below Wilmington has been well provided for by Congress, and ample provision has been made in this bill for another year. The appropriation of March 2, 1907, was the largest made up to that time, it being $265,000. At this time the Engineer Corps had a balance on hand of $212,939, making $477,939 available for expenditure during that year. The amount available for 1908 was $300,000, and the last session of Congress appropriated $400,000 for this work.

The engineer in charge has expended the money wisely and well. While the depth in 1906 was 20 feet, with a very narrow channel, the depth at low water to-day is 22 feet in its most shallow place, with a very much wider channel. This will admit a vessel passing from the sea to Wilmington, taking into account the rise of the tides, drawing 24 to 25 feet, as there are long stretches of the river between 25 and 30 feet deep. The appropriations by Congress for the Cape Fear River has been of extraordinary profit as a business proposition, since the amount of freight produced by the deepening of the river has been in the ratio of 15 to 1; that is, an increase of water-borne traffic resulting in $15 annually for every $1 expended on the Cape Fear River by the Congress.

I desire here to thank the several newspapers of the State for their most valuable assistance in this great undertaking, as they have taken hold of the matter most heartily, and have indorsed the project as a State-wide enterprise. I wish to say a word of commendation and appreciation of the engineer in charge at this port, Capt. Earl I. Brown. Captain Brown is one of the most efficient engineers in the corps and is a great believer in the possibilities of the Cape Fear River. He has given us great aid and assistance in all of our undertakings.

Mr. James Sprunt, the largest exporter at this port—in fact, one of the largest in the United States and also chairman of the board of navigation and pilotage—in a letter of November 10, 1908, to the president of the chamber of commerce, wisely said:

The superior character of the river and harbor work under the skillful direction of Capt. Earl I. Brown, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, is so remarkable and gratifying that a suitable official recognition by our chamber of commerce would be, in our opinion, appreciated at this stage of our development as a deep-water port. The systematic concentration of the government force at points of emergency or necessity has kept the general work up to a standard of effectiveness never before attained on the Cape Fear River and bar, and I do not recall in the history of this important undertaking a period of more general appreciation by seafaring people than is now apparent with reference to its excellent results.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to thank the committee for so favorably considering the Cape Fear River in the present bill. As I said, ample provision has been made for the continuing work at and below Wilmington.

The item in the bill in reference to the upper Cape Fear project is as follows:

Improving Cape Fear River above Wilmington, N. C.: Continuing improvement with a view to securing a navigable depth of 8 feet up to Fayetteville, including surveys and acquisition of land for sites, for locks and dams, and completion of plans for the same, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 890, Sixtieth Congress, first session, $10,000.

This, in my opinion, fully authorizes and adopts the project for two locks and dams for a depth of 8 feet from Wilmington to Fayetteville the year round. The $10,000 appropriated is to be used in beginning the work, and the balance of the $615,000 will be forthcoming from time to time as the work progresses, the necessary amounts being appropriated in the sundry civil bill. When the bill was first introduced in the House, I showed this item to Capt. Earl I. Brown, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, who is in charge of the river and harbor work for my congressional district, and asked him to state his opinion as to whether the language used in the bill is sufficient to authorize the project. Captain Brown said:

I have seen the copy of the river and harbor bill now pending in Congress, and I find that the project of providing a depth of 8 feet in the Cape Fear River from Wilmington to Fayetteville, N. C., by means of locks and dams is fully authorized therein. The bill provides an appropriation of $10,000 for the beginning of the work, and authorizes the expenditure of $615,000 thereon, the difference to be appropriated from time to time in the sundry civil bill as needed to prosecute the work.

This makes certain the improvement of the upper Cape Fear River as desired by my people. They have waited patiently for quite a while for this much needed improvement, and they will be gratified to know that their hopes will be realized and that their labors have not been in vain. This matter has been agitated for some time. An item providing for the improvement of the Cape Fear River so as to provide a channel 8 feet deep from Wilmington to Fayetteville throughout the year was included in the river and harbor bill reported to Congress in 1901. The whole bill, however, failed in the Senate. The same item was included in the act of June 13, 1902, and $50,000 was appropriated for the purchase of sites for locks and dams. The bill as recommended by the War Department called for the construction of three locks with movable dams, at a cost of $1,350,000.

Since that time the science of river engineering has progressed with such rapidity that it was thought that the purpose of the act of 1902 could be accomplished at less cost and with a less number of locks. And in 1907 a reexamination of the Cape Fear River above Wilmington was made with a view to reporting what modification, if any, should be made in the existing project. The reexamination disclosed that the object of the act of 1902 could be accomplished by the construction of two locks with fixed dams instead of three locks with movable dams, the first to cost $615,000 and the second $1,350,000. This showed a great advantage in favor of the advocates of the upper Cape Fear improvement project. The plan for the two locks and dams was recommended by the Board of Engineers, concurred in by the Chief of Engineers, and transmitted to the Speaker of the House of Representatives in a letter from the Secretary of War April 25, 1908, and is known as "House Document No. 890, Sixtieth Congress, first session." The bill I prepared is drawn in accordance with that recommendation, and this is the project now adopted and approved in the present bill. This project has been strongly advocated by the people of North Carolina, three governors and several sessions of the North Carolina legislature having strongly indorsed it.

The people of Fayetteville and the entire upper Cape Fear section have been unceasing in active support, but there is one distinguished citizen who, in my opinion, deserves more credit for his wise counsel and valuable information and service in supporting this project than anyone else; this gentleman is Maj. E. J. Hale, of Fayetteville, who has given ten years of active work and spent largely of his means in support of this laudable undertaking. I have also had the undivided support and influence of our two Senators and the Members of the House from North Carolina.

The estimate of existing traffic between Fayetteville and Wilmington in 1900 was 115,000 tons, valued at $1,150,000. In 1906 the traffic was reported by the district engineer as 135,991 tons, valued at $3,630,078, so that the case, considered from the standpoint of less than half the cost and more than three times the value of traffic, was then more than six times as strong as when Congress first adopted the project in 1902. The report of the district engineer for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, showed that the tonnage had increased to 137,620 and the value to $3,960,235, making the ratio nearly 8 to 1 in favor of the project as now presented.

The saving in freight charges by river from Wilmington to Fayetteville, as compared with those by rail, is so great that private capitalists, if they had the power to construct this work, as before 1882, could recoup their whole outlay for its construction, as now recommended by the government engineers, in five years' time by a tonnage charge of only 5 cents per 100 pounds, and yet save to the shippers an equal amount as against the railway charges.

But it is not upon the needs of existing traffic, nor in consideration of local conditions in themselves, that the argument for the adoption of this project is founded. The geographical peculiarities of North Carolina cause it to be a matter affecting nearly all of North Carolina and some adjacent parts, containing a population this side of the Alleghenies of 2,000,000 of people.

The jutting coast line of North Carolina renders it impossible for the greater portion of the population mentioned to enjoy freight rates on equal terms with the people of other States, except approach be had through the port of Fayetteville. This peculiarity distinguishes this from all other river propositions offered to the Government. A glance at the map will make this apparent. Fayetteville is the only port between Norfolk and Richmond on the north and Charleston on the south which is on the normal coast line, and therefore it is the only port which lies nearer to the population referred to. A calculation made in accordance with the principle upon which the promoters of the Manchester Ship Canal won their case, viz, that the territory traffically tributary to a port comprises all that it nearer to it than to any other port, shows that 6,000,000 tons of freight would be diverted to Fayetteville. The estimate of the North Carolina corporation commission, the highest authority extant on this subject, is to the same effect. Three legislatures of North Carolina indorsed this project upon the grounds just mentioned, a course which the State has pursued toward no other scheme of river or harbor improvements within its borders.

Before deforestation had interrupted the year-round navigation which formerly existed on this river and the overworking of the railroad idea had increased the effect of this impediment Fayetteville was the market and distributing point for all the vast territory referred to. The proposed improvement, therefore, does not seek to establish novel conditions, as in the canalization of rivers above the head of navigation, but to reestablish trade routes disturbed by an incomplete development of the problem of transportation.

Senator BURTON, the highest authority in these matters, in the course of his speech before the National Rivers and Harbors Congress, December, 1907, when chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, declared that the object of legitimate waterways improvement is to supply equal opportunity to all. It is a matter of common knowledge, admitted now by the railways themselves, that North Carolina is discriminated against in freight rates. The reason assigned is the circumstance that we have in North Carolina no "basing point for freight rates," or "gateway," as it is now called. It is stated that Fayetteville will be made such a "basing point" upon the completion of the work now proposed. Until that is done, over 2,000,000 of our people must continue, in this vital respect, to be deprived of equal opportunity with their neighbors.

Finally, attention is asked particularly to the declaration of the North Carolina corporation commission, already referred to, in these words, viz:

> The Atlantic Coast Line Railroad enters Fayetteville from four different directions, and I inclose you statement showing the tonnage of freights for this road for the State. If the Cape Fear River is made navigable to Fayetteville, this city would be the distributing point for a great majority of this freight.

On page 15 is given the tonnage of freights for this road for the State, in the corporation commission's inclosure referred to by them, which is 3,368,441. Assuming that a "great majority" of this sum would be at least 2,000,000, it will be seen that the saving of $1.80 a ton by the river route would amount to $3,600,000 per annum—or enough to pay the whole cost of the proposed work in two months. All the money that our Government wisely expends in the improving of our waterways will be worth throughout the years to come 100 per cent on the investment. Water transportation costs only one-sixth as much as that by rail. [Applause.]

Mr. MAGUIRE of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, in the consideration of the bill before us to-day I wish to speak to you, first, on the facts and conditions relating to the territory tributary to the Mississippi River. I do this because a wrong impression prevails among many as to the need of improvement on this river and its importance as a part not only of the navigable waterways system, but also as an integral part of the whole transportation machinery of the country. Many who live along the Atlantic seaboard have not considered seriously the geographical proportion of the country nor have they been in a position to realize the contributing forces of the West as a nation builder.

I am glad that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and its chairman have not overlooked the fact that in the working out of a comprehensive waterways system of transportation it can not be done and neglect the Missouri River. I am also pleased to note in the speech of the chairman and in the report of the committee a more favorable attitude toward the country tributary to this river.

I will relate briefly a little of the history of the commerce and development as I find it in the records of the army engineers, who are responsible for what national care was given along the Missouri. For over two hundred years the Missouri has been used as a channel for trade and commerce, and for ninety years it has been navigated by steamboats. The Lewis and Clarke expedition found commerce on the river in 1803, and this expedition did much to stimulate further trade and development in the upper region. From 1820 till after the close of the civil war it was comparatively a busy thoroughfare, and from 1845 to its decline it was the great means of travel, and made possible the early opening of that country to settlement.

Forty-three steamboats cleared from St. Louis for upper-river trade in 1867 with a freight of over 1,600 tons, while the down-river freight consisted of gold, silver, hides, furs, and so forth. Over 1,000 passengers were carried and more than $1,500,000 in fares paid. Twenty-eight clearances, with 10,000 tons, were made from the middle river. There were 612 clearances, with 100,000 tons from St. Louis on the down river. In the year 1877, 25 steamers arrived at Fort Benton with 5,283 tons of freight and 1,500 passengers, and in 1878 there were 46 arrivals and a tonnage of more than 8,000 in merchandise.

Edward H. Schulz, captain, Corps of Engineers, in his report on the Missouri River, made from Kansas City on April 30, 1905, appearing in House Document No. 1120, Sixtieth Congress, second session, inserts a table of comparative mileage of the great rivers of the world as follows:

Missouri proper and Madison	2,780
Missouri, with Mississippi	4,400
St. Lawrence	2,200
Rio Grande	1,800
Amazon	3,600
Orinoco	1,500
La Plata	2,250
Rhine	960
Danube	1,600
Nile	4,000
Niger	2,600
Columbia	1,200
Amoor	2,700
Hoang-ho	2,700
Yangste Kiang	3,200
Volga	2,000

He comments on these figures and the territory bordering the river in this language:

> It is thus seen that the Missouri River may well be called a large river, and with the Mississippi it is the largest in the world. When we further consider the great natural fertility and the enormous production of the territory bordering this river, it is not extravagant to say that the region surpasses any other on the globe, and this is especially true of that portion from Sioux City to the mouth. The production of grain, live stock, and meat products almost staggers the imagination.

His report further sets out a comparison of the mean discharge in cubic feet per second as follows:

Upper Mississippi	105,000
Missouri	120,000
Ohio	158,000
Arkansas	63,000
St. Francis	31,000

If low-water discharges only are considered, the Missouri River surpasses the Ohio, since the fluctuations in discharge are much less on the Missouri, and it maintains a greater and more uniform low-water discharge.

In this report he makes a table of population for 1900, and an estimate for 1908, of the seven bordering river States, also an estimate of the population within the 100-mile belt on each side of the river within these States, as follows:

Missouri	3,106,000	3,886,000
Kansas	1,470,000	1,680,000
Iowa	2,232,000	2,678,000
Nebraska	1,066,000	1,225,000
South Dakota	402,000	490,000
North Dakota	319,000	475,000
Montana	243,000	275,000
Total	8,838,000	10,709,000

The approximate population of this 100-mile belt in 1900 was:

Missouri	1,584,000
Kansas	679,000
Nebraska	738,000
North Dakota	104,000
Montana	85,000
Total	4,129,000

And the population for this same belt is estimated in 1908 at 5,000,000.

Captain Schulz makes the following compilation of crop production and some manufactured products tributary to the river, a great part of which could readily be available as freight for river traffic:

The total grains produced in 1907 for those States was: Corn, 25,000,000 tons; wheat, 7,000,000; oats, 4,300,000; barley, 1,400,000; rye, 122,000; buckwheat, 4,000; flaxseed, 562,000; potatoes, 1,200,000; hay, 15,000,000; being a total of nearly 55,000,000 tons valued at over $1,000,000,000. For the 100-mile belt the totals are 25,000,000 tons and nearly $500,000,000.

The corn production alone of the United States is about 80 per cent of the world, and that of the seven Missouri River States in 1907 was 23 per cent of the whole United States. The export trade of the United States in corn alone was 4,000,000 tons, and in total foodstuff products nearly 7,000,000 tons.

The meat products rank first among all manufactured products in the United States in net production and second in gross production, and are valued at over $800,000,000 per year, estimated to be over 3,200,000 tons, of which about one-quarter is produced in the cities of Sioux City, Omaha, St. Joseph, and Kansas City.

The manufactured products in 1900 of the four States, from Sioux City to the mouth, are as follows:

Nebraska	144,000,000
Missouri	385,000,000
Total	865,618,000

And of the cities:

Sioux City	$15,000,000
Council Bluffs	2,600,000
Omaha	43,000,000
St. Joe	32,000,000
Atchison	2,600,000
Leavenworth	4,700,000
Kansas City, Kans	83,000,000
Kansas City, Mo	36,000,000
Jefferson City	3,600,000
St. Louis	234,000,000
Total	456,500,000

From the 1907–8 bureau of labor report for the State of Nebraska are taken the following statistics of agriculture: The orchard trees in my district, comprising seven counties, are: Apple, 880,718; pear, 32,821; peach, 550,251 for the year 1907. The shipment of live stock for the same year was: Cattle, 84,242; hogs, 333,758; also sheep and horses. Of grain in bushels: Corn, 12,205,000; wheat, 3,644,000; oats, 1,168,000; besides barley, rye, and so forth. Of flour in 1906, 19,397,000 pounds; cream in 1907, 628,000 gallons; butter, 6,837,000 pounds; eggs, 4,356,000 dozen; poultry, 3,465,000 pounds. The total value of crop yields, exclusive of garden truck, for 1907 was $21,132,498.

Captain Schulz in his report, among other observations, says what should be secured by improvement of the river:

It has already been shown that the grain production alone along the Missouri River is over 25,000,000 tons. If only 5,000,000 tons moved down the river between Sioux City and the mouth, a saving of $1 per ton, or 3 cents per bushel, would practically pay for the improvement in ten years, not considering the live stock, meat products, and general upstream merchandise. As a matter of fact, grain should be moved by water for 1 cent per bushel from Kansas City to the mouth, equivalent to 30 cents per ton, or a saving of over $2 per ton, or for 10,000,000 tons $20,000,000.

Based upon present or immediately prospective commerce, no greater expenditure than that required for a 6-foot depth seems warranted; but based upon the latent possibilities and capacity of this stream and the great and growing population on its shores, upon the stupendous output of grain and other products, the improvement is warranted to full 12-foot project.

From careful examination of the stream for several years past he reports the following on sedimentation:

Owing to the great amount of sediment, bars build rapidly when the current is strong. The amount of sediment is very great, and at St. Charles, Mo., for the year 1879 was over five and one-half billion cubic feet, not counting bed movement. The water discharge was about 424 times as great by volume, and 265 times by weight. The total amount per year is estimated at 11,000,000,000 cubic feet, equivalent to 1 square mile 400 feet deep. Actual navigation depths run from 3 to 9 feet. The main difficulties of navigation are due to the small depth on the bar. Wherever certain limits of width are exceeded, there are two narrow pools and between them a bar.

The deposit of course is much greater now than at the date mentioned because of a very much increased area of the land along the river now cultivated. From these facts it is apparent what the ravages of the stream must be and what might be done with the stream if its energies were placed somewhat under control.

Under "Land threatened," the report continues:

Every change in velocity or direction of current means new erosion and subsequent partial deposits, causing untold loss in value of land and products. The bottom land threatened or to be benefited on the upper reach, Sioux City to Kansas City, is 1,141.5 square miles, or 730,560 acres, and on the lower reach, Kansas City to the mouth, 788.8 square miles, or 504,832 acres; total for the two reaches, 1,235,392 acres, which at $100 per acre would be worth nearly $125,000,000. To this amount should be added 24,000 acres of sand bar which would be reclaimed and filled in by improvement, and at $50 per acre would be worth $1,200,000.

A glance at these figures will show the great land loss to that section of the country due to erosion and overflow by the stream and to the delay of the Government in making improvements on the stream.

The people of my district, the First Nebraska, are making extensive improvements in drainage on the smaller tributary streams of the Missouri. Ditches are either under course of construction or preliminary steps are being taken to construct them along the Nemaha, Little Nemaha, Weeping Water, and Salt River. This is being done for the purpose of redeeming thousands of acres of land for agricultural uses. The complete improvement at the foot of these streams will be seriously interfered with because of backwater and overflows, due to the present condition of the Missouri River.

Included in the report from Captain Schulz is a letter of June 18, 1907, from A. Mackenzie, brigadier-general, Chief of Engineers, in which he says:

I recommend that the Secretary of War authorize such a survey as may be necessary to formulate recommendations as to the further improvement of the Missouri River from mouth to Kansas City, and from Kansas City to Sioux City.

D. W. Lockwood, colonel, Corps of Engineers, in a letter of June 10, 1907, also recommends for the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors an allotment of money, with a view of improving the river. Col. W. H. Bixby, Corps of Engineers, western division, in his letter May 18, 1908, transmitting the report said:

I heartily indorse the views and estimates submitted by the district engineer, Captain Schulz.

James B. Quinn, colonel, Corps of Engineers, in a letter on June 4, 1907, and made a part of the Schulz report, recommends the river improvement.

In view of the foregoing facts and conditions relative to the Missouri River and tributary country, taken in connection with the unqualified indorsement of the government engineers in charge of the river work, longer delay can not be had if we are to do justice to the people of that section and to the country at large.

Our whole system of transportation by rail is not keeping pace with our rapid and startling increase of production and consumption. Most of the transportation is over rail, and we have utilized only in a meager way our rivers for that purpose. This is essentially true of our interior waterways. Water traffic, to a large extent, is localized around the Great Lakes, and splendid as are the results, still the benefits have failed to reach the great interior sources of production.

Over the region of the West, in the locality of the Mississippi-Missouri River system, lies a great freight-producing area. From that locality come more products of the soil than from any similar section of the earth's surface. Under the single system of freight carriage the producer fails to reach the markets with a profit, and the consuming world is denied access to these interior fields of production.

In 1890 the total rail traffic of the entire country was seventy-nine billion in tonnage, and in 1906 it was two hundred and sixteen billion, or nearly three times as much, and that of course does not include the low-valued and unprofitable tonnage which the carrier did not move and which the shipper could not afford to move, because of comparatively high rates on low-class products. Under normal increase in 1915 it is estimated that the same class of freight will be three hundred and fifty billion in tonnage. The business of the country in the past ten years has increased more than 110 per cent, while the railroads increased but 20 per cent. Production is increasing five times faster than road mileage.

For several years the roads have failed to move the crops in season, and before long they will be able to move only a portion of the farm products to market. Railroads are now capitalized at about $15,000,000,000, and with but little double trackage. Every road in order to meet the demands of future traffic must be double-tracked. Leaders in railroad transportation recently estimated that the next ten years would require 75,000 miles more of trackage construction to meet the requirements of the normal growth of the country. That the necessary increase of mileage and equipment will be made is quite unlikely.

The Interstate Commerce Commission in 1906 reported that the average cost of moving freight by rail was 7.48 mills per ton per mile. The statistical report of 1906, by Colonel Davis, United States Engineer Corps, gives the cost through Sault Ste. Marie Canal for 1905 as 0.84 of 1 mill per mile, or one-ninth that by rail. The available figures from the Ohio River and other water routes give the cost from one-sixth to one-tenth of the above cost by rail. These figures show our constant loss in not developing and taking advantage of naturally cheaper means of transportation.

The character of freight carried by rail and by water is naturally different. A division and differentiation of freight products could readly be made with advantage to shipper and to both classes of carriers. The automatic classification at first would be made gradually, but products would be accommodated to the dual carrier system when waterways once became established and assured as a permanent part of the traffic system.

Much of the high-class freight now handled by rail is compelled to bear the expense of carrying the comparatively low-valued freight, because it could not be moved if charged with the ordinary rates and still leave a margin of profit to producer and shipper. Railway statistics show that two-thirds of the freight moved by rail is of a character of products valued at less than $2 per ton at the point of production. Could the dual system become generally operative, it would automatically classify products with advantage to the whole freight area of production and consumption. In addition to the classification of the freight now handled, the naturally cheaper water rates would enlarge traffic, a wider market would result, with low-valued but necessary articles of production introduced. Sand, gravel, earthen cements, building materials, fertilizers, low-grade ores from mines, coarse feed and numerous products from the farm, by-products from the factory, farm, and mine, and countless other articles which are now practically useless would be introduced into the field of commerce. The increase would lead to more varied consumption of goods, give the consumer the benefit of the enlarged field of production, and the producer wider and more profitable markets.

The idea is frequently entertained that freight benefits would be local only in the case of water transportation or that they would be along those lines of waterways actually improved, but mature examination will reveal results, though not to such an extent, everywhere over the entire freight area. The expanded markets, both in distance and in intensity, would give general and permanent results.

If the farmer of the agricultural region can get his corn and wheat to market for 10 cents instead of 20 cents per bushel, with a similar saving on live stock and other products, that much is saved as profit; if the ores can be quarried from the mines and transported over cheap freight routes to proper destinations, profits will be had where nothing was realized before; if the consumer can get his lumber, coal, building material, and other articles of consumption at a cheaper freight expense, he has saved that in cost of living.

The general direction of railroad systems is east and west and at right angles to prevailing courses of waterways. Freight, in leaving the wide, productive fields of the West, converges and often becomes congested in large eastern terminals and is delayed, with added cost of expensive trackage and storage in reaching destination, or the surplus in reaching the markets of the world.

Natural trade routes and commercial outlets to world markets in the future are certain to develop in the direction of the Gulf and to Mexico, South and Central America, and through the canal to the Orient. Our Missouri-Mississippi River system is therefore in harmony with approaching development toward world commerce and activities, and we should not here fail in our opportunity. Natural forces, fields of consumption, diversity of products and climate, reciprocal trade arrangements, political and industrial geography all point inevitably in that direction, with expanding markets for our farm products and for the products of American skill and intelligence.

Wisdom and experience point ultimately to a comprehensive programme of interior waterways improvement, instead of much of our inefficient patchwork methods of the past. The waterways of the interior, because of their geographical arrangement and adaptability for improvement, form the basis of a complete and unified plan of transportation. With proper improvement it would be possible to ship freight from a single point to every other point, and the whole system become complete for traffic. Much of the freight through a system of waterways would not even have the disadvantage of cost and delay in breaking bulk on entering the world's highways.

When the inland waterways become improved with safe and permanent channels the public carrier will be able to secure insurance of cargoes; he will then invest capital and enter the field of traffic with some degree of certainty and on a comprehensive scale. The waterways of the interior would then begin to perform their proper functions; they would become the Nation's highways and for use by every carrier and shipper; the freight system would through classification attain to a higher degree of efficiency and the public would receive the benefits.

We can not stop raising corn or wheat or cattle or hogs, or permit the stores of mineral wealth to remain idle beneath the mountains to await a partially developed system of transportation. We produce in each locality more than we need, and we require so much that we can not produce that its distribution becomes not an individual but a national problem. Encouragement of production is irrational if we still neglect the natural internal facilities for distribution.

A well-balanced industrial society is interdependent alike upon the instruments and agencies of production, distribution, and consumption; neglect one and you cripple the economic machinery and stifle the natural growth.

These inland waterways belong to the whole people, and I am in favor of preparing them as means of transportation. Guarantee to the public their perpetual use for the Nation's traffic and we thereby take advantage of the instruments of our civilization to further develop and make possible the fruits of civilization itself.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, in the whole sphere of governmental activities I know of no question which partakes less of a partisan nature than the improvement of the inland waterways. It is a business question, appealing to the sound business sense of the people of the entire country, and especially the great empire west of the Mississippi. There are three subjects upon which the action, or nonaction, of the Government very closely affects the business community—currency, tariff, and transportation. I will not undertake to say which is the most important, but, certainly, the question of transportation is vital to us of the West, and is one upon which the interests of all classes—wholesalers, retailers, manufacturers, producers, and consumers—are more nearly united.

In the Mississippi and its tributaries our country is blessed with the most wonderful system of navigable rivers in the world, and the greatest natural highway of the trans-Mississippi region is the Missouri River. In my judgment we are entering upon the third period in the history of this great stream.

In the period preceding the civil war navigation of the western rivers was carried on to a surprising extent. Hundreds of steamers plied the Mississippi and the Ohio, and many of them came up the Missouri. Missouri was then a frontier State, and the river was the only path for commerce into the wilderness. The difficulties of navigation were as great or greater than they are now, but there was no other method of transportation to compete with the rivers. Railroads had not been extended west of the Mississippi in sufficient numbers to affect the river trade. The old Hannibal and St. Joe ran across the State, depending largely for its traffic upon cooperation with the boats. The Missouri Pacific ran from St. Louis to Jefferson City, and the beginning of the Frisco from St. Louis to Rolla. All beyond was the virgin forest, or prairie, where civilization was just beginning to push its way. The great Southwest must bring its traffic to the nearest river point. For ten years preceding the civil war my father and his partner, who were merchants at Warsaw, in Benton County, ran two small boats upon the Missouri from St. Louis and up the Osage as far as Osceola. From there distribution was made over a territory embracing the entire southern half of the State. It was my father's custom in those days to ride overland to St. Louis in the winter and buy goods to come out on the first boat in the spring. From Westport Landing, where Kansas City now stands, ran the great overland trail to Santa Fe, and from St. Joseph the pony express to the Northwest. The risks, dangers, and losses of the Missouri River traffic were enormous, but the profit was great, and the necessities of the case compelled the continuance of the river traffic.

The second period of the river history began with the era of railroad building. Gradually the river was paralleled by railroads, and not only this, but all the interior country was tapped by railway lines. For twenty years, up to the panic of 1893, we had an extraordinary increase of railway mileage, keeping pace with and in many cases outrunning the development of the country. Small lines, independent lines, competitive lines fought for business, driving the river traffic out by the greater speed, certainty, and safety of their carriage, making joint and through rates with a view to building up the communities and interests along their lines. A railway runs all the year around. It carries in winter as well as in summer; it carries more quickly, with greater safety and certainty than an unimproved river. It reaches the interior points and can deliver to connecting carriers without reloading. This had its natural effect upon river transportation.

When we add to this the shocking system of discrimination which was practiced by the railroads in those days by which the large shippers were given rebates made up by extortion practiced on the small shippers, we see that law had put it into the power of the railroads to stifle water transportation.

After the period of receiverships through which the railroads passed in 1893 to 1896 the small independent lines of roads disappeared; rapid consolidation began. Now we have only a few giant systems, no one of which is content with a terminus at any point except on the Great Lakes or the seaboard. Deep water and deep water alone is the natural outlet for a railroad.

Fortunately we are entering upon the third period of river history—the period of actual development. The Missouri River is navigable. Navigation has existed in the past. Navigation must exist in the future when the conditions require it. What are those conditions? They are the conditions that confront us to-day. In the first place, we can never again have the advantage of competitive freight rates. All of the interior cities are upon great continental lines of railway which do not stop short of the Great Lakes or the seaboard.

We must look the matter squarely in the face. Deep water must be brought as close to every trans-Mississippi commercial center as natural conditions will permit. Transportation begins with competition between communities, but ends by competition between nations.

We all know that when a nation produces a surplus of commodities the value of such surplus must be determined at the seacoast. There is no such thing as a home market price for any commodity of which we produce more than we use. Such surplus has no value until it enters into the commerce of the world, and its value at the point of production must be discounted the exact sum necessary to place it at the seacoast. The foreign price can not be controlled. It depends upon the production of other nations, the conditions of war and peace, famine and crop failure, and many other things. All that can be improved are the conditions of production at home and the cheapness of transportation to the seaboard. We are the greatest producing nation of raw material in the world. There is no country except Russia having such a tremendous expanse of inland region under one government, and Russia is a hundred years behind us in development. Our national prosperity depends upon the productiveness of these vast inland regions and the cheapness and facility of transporting our products to the seacoast, where they may enter into the commerce of the world.

We must build for the future. Heretofore we have depended upon the railroads to develop the country, and their influence in that direction has been tremendous. The rapid growth of the West and the Southwest and their present prosperity would have been impossible without the enterprise of the railroads in building into new and undeveloped country. But we have about reached the point where the railroad facilities are no longer adequate to the growing traffic, and it seems difficult for them to keep pace with the demands of commerce. In the last decade production in the trans-Mississippi territory has increased in amount six times greater than transportation facilities. This must result in a retarding of business unless a new outlet for the traffic is found.

The expense of building additional lines of railroad is increasing yearly. The time has now come in the development of the country to turn to the Missouri River and make it one of the great freight carriers of the world. Such improvement will not only supplement railroad transportation by relieving it of bulky and cheap freight, and thereby enabling the higher class of freight to be transported more quickly and safely, but it will be a regulator of freight rates. The improvement of the Missouri River to a point where navigation will be safe and profitable will provide almost unlimited facilities for the expansion of trade in the West and Southwest. It is correctly estimated that the improved river will cost no more than a single-track railway and will have six hundred times the carrying capacity of such single track. The effect of the reduction and equalization of freight rates will be by no means confined to the river States. As the Missouri River is the basic point for rates, a reduction or equalization of rates will result in a benefit of all the commercial centers of the West and Southwest. More than that, it will affect the price of all commodities and the value of all land within the sphere of its influence. The western farmer gets for his wheat, wherever sold, exactly what it would produce in Liverpool, less the cost of transporting it there. He must live and pay his debts and buy goods on what he has left after selling his wheat at foreign prices and paying the transportation charges. Every penny saved on the cost of transporting the grain to the seacoast is a penny which remains in the farmer's pocket to build up the general prosperity of the country and enter into all the channels of retail trade. There is no division of interest here. We shall all benefit in an equal proportion by these improvements. It has been found that the building of the Sault Ste. Marie Canal in the Great Lakes and the opening of navigation from Duluth to Buffalo has added 12 cents to every bushel of wheat produced in the Northwest. It actually has advanced the price of farm lands up in Canada far to the northward of the American border. Our Canadian friends are getting the benefit of this while we, in the Southwest, are at a relative disadvantage. If the opening of the Missouri River for traffic would add 6 cents a bushel to the price of our wheat and other grains, it would mean $15,000,000 per year to the State of Missouri alone, $15,000,000 to the State of Kansas, $12,000,000 to the State of Oklahoma, and to other Western States in proportion.

Seventy-five per cent, I am told, of the exports of this country, which bring the golden stream of wealth to American shores and turn the balance of trade in our favor, are the products of the western farms, forests, and mines. We must sell these products abroad in competition with the open markets of the world, and the basis of our wealth is what we can sell abroad, less what it costs us to transport it to the foreign markets. Our great problem has always been the problem of transportation, and I pray that the time may never come when it shall cease so to be, for when we are no longer concerned with the problem of transportation, we no longer have a surplus of products to sell abroad. The West is the backbone of this country. I was born on the banks of the Missouri and have lived there all my life. In that time three great panics have broken over the commercial world, and from each of them the West has rallied through her own inexhaustible resources. At last we are on the high road to financial independence. In the past we have been the innocent victims of panics which we did not cause, but the panic of 1907 touched us more lightly than ever before. The reason is that since 1893 there has been a tremendous growth of population and wealth in the great Missouri Valley. Our cities have nearly doubled. Far out to the west of the Missouri River, where in '93 were the dugouts and the little fields of sod corn, there are now handsome farmhouses, huge barns, good fences. The great new State of Oklahoma has sprung into existence. It came into the Union with a greater population and more electoral votes than some of the New England States.

In the great imperial State of Missouri the values of farm lands are rising every year. We need every acre of that fertile soil for the homes of untold millions. For two generations the tide of immigration has swept across the broad bosom of our State and on beyond to fill the free cheap lands of the West. To-day those free cheap lands are gone. Uncle Sam has no more farms to give away, except in the arid region, where the expense of irrigation must precede cultivation.

Westward the star of empire has taken its way, until it stands poised above the promised land. The tide of white civilization has rolled westward until it has dashed itself against the shores of far Cathay. It now returns to the seat of its power—the Mississippi Valley. In the State of Missouri alone there are 600,000 acres of the richest land in the world lying along the river banks rendered useless by overflow and the ravages of an uncontrolled stream. Six hundred thousand acres—larger than the State of Connecticut. What a problem in the conservation of natural resources is here!

The improvement of the Missouri River is not a local project. While such improvement would reclaim a vast area of fertile land along its banks, yet the land would be added to the taxable value and commercial wealth of the great trans-Mississippi empire. It would turn the Missouri River from a liability into an asset. It would check, not wholly, but to a great extent, the disastrous floods that have visited the river cities in recent years. The losses from these floods have not been borne alone by the cities visited. The paralysis of commerce, the loss of freight, the delay, the congestion, and reduction of business have been felt throughout every part of the West.

The advantage of an improved river, both as to rates and traffic, extends to every community, however remote, that can use any portion of the completed waterway as a route to the seaboard. It relieves congestion and furnishes an ever ready potential competition. An improved waterway is a free highway. It can not lend itself to monopoly. It is open to all, under reasonable regulations, who care to use it. The highway itself is free and is maintained without cost to the user. It differs, however, from other highways in the demand it makes for terminal facilities. Such facilities should also be under public control and should be promptly and willingly provided by the shipping centers along the banks in return for the special advantage which they will enjoy. Kansas City has taken the first practical step in this direction by a proposal to issue bonds of the city for $75,000 to provide public wharfage equipped with modern loading and unloading devices. The State of Missouri has created a waterway commission. Other States will fall in line and do their share.

The Missouri River borders seven great States containing a population of 10,700,000. This section is increasing in importance faster than any other section of the country. The center of population is rapidly moving westward. To-day in the Missouri Valley are found the centers of production of all the great commodities upon which is founded our national wealth. Within a belt of 100 miles on each side of the Missouri River, west of the Mississippi, are the centers of production of wheat, oats, corn, cattle, hogs, horses, and mules, and farm products of all kinds. Within the watershed of the Missouri River are found the centers of production of gold, silver, lead, zinc, sheep, and wool, and also the geographical center of the Union. The improved Missouri will bring water transportation nearer the source of supply than any other route. No more national project now engages the attention of the Government than the improvement of the Mississippi and Missouri rivers in connection with the other waterways.

Now, a word as to the progress which has been made in recent years. The skillful engineers who have been in charge of work on the Missouri River have demonstrated by experience that permanent improvement of the river is perfectly feasible and that, once permanently improved, it can be maintained at a moderate cost. In times past the magnitude of the engineering problem involved was not properly appreciated by Congress, and the appropriations spent on the river were not adapted to a general or permanent plan. The present division engineer, Maj. E. H. Schulz, has recently prepared a wonderfully clear, comprehensive, and accurate report upon the river, showing the feasibility of its improvement, with a careful estimate of the cost, and showing also the resources of the country and the tonnage to be expected. This report has been approved by the Board of Engineers of the War Department at Washington and is now before Congress. It is House Document No. 1120, Sixtieth Congress, second session. Briefly, it shows that the cost of improving the river on a permanent basis is about $50,000 per mile, or $20,000,000 from Kansas City to St. Louis; that the land reclaimed along the river by such improvement and the protection from floods and overflows would repay the original cost; that the increased tonnage and reduction of freight rates from the entire Southwest would pay the cost of improvement every two years. It is estimated that navigation would be safe after the second year and the work be completed in ten years. The report points out, however, that the work should be planned as a whole and should be carried out in a continuous, economic, and scientific manner. It is useless to assemble an expensive plant of dredges, etc., to do piecemeal work and to spend some limited appropriation. This only results in an extravagant waste of money. Congress should provide for the entire improvement and appropriate the money therefor as fast as reasonably necessary.

The pending rivers and harbors bill is the first step in the direction of permanent improvement of the Missouri on a sane business plan. This bill carries an appropriation of $1,000,000 to begin the work of securing a permanent channel. With this money the War Department can assemble its plant and organize its force this summer to carry on continuous work. I hope the department will be given a free hand to work out a general plan for the improvement of the entire river, without being fettered by express directions of Congress to spend the money at favored localities. I hope this is the beginning of annual appropriations, that the project may proceed to its completion for the benefit of the present generation.

But it has been said that the amount of money needed for this improvement is beyond the present financial ability of the Government. Personally, I am not in favor of paying for improvements out of the general revenues of the Government. These revenues are needed for other purposes, and it can not be told from one year to another how much the general revenue will be or how much of it will be available for any particular object. If we depend on the general revenues to carry out a large plan extending over a period of years, we may find ourselves suddenly left without funds in the midst of the work. I believe that internal improvements should be regarded as an investment and should be paid for by an issue of bonds similar to those issued for the construction of the Panama Canal. Bonds bearing a low rate of interest can readily be sold, and thus a more businesslike system of financiering and a more economical conduct of the work can be assured. There need be no waste of money at one period or forced economy at another. The bonds could be issued at regular intervals as the work progresses, and I believe that the West and Southwest would take nearly all of these bonds, if necessary, to facilitate the work. We could well afford to do so.

The signs are most hopeful for a realization of this entire project. The sentiment in favor of river improvement all over the country is greater to-day than ever before.

The people of the Nation are coming to realize the justice of our demands. When the improvement of rivers and harbors first was undertaken by the National Government, it was natural that it should begin with the harbors of the coast and the tidal rivers. Millions have been spent on these, to which the whole country has cheerfully contributed. Later, the improvement of the Great Lakes assumed importance, and more millions were spent on this splendid system of water transportation. This money was from the common purse of the taxpayers of the Nation and has resulted in abounding prosperity to the lake cities and the States surrounding them. Now has come the turn of the western rivers.

The West is rising in wealth, population, and commercial importance to its proper relative place with other sections of the country. Every man has his pet insanity, and I have mine. It is a profound and unmistakable belief in the greatness of the Middle West. Nowhere in the known world is there such a large expanse of fertile land as in this great Mississippi Valley. We have the agricultural wealth and the natural fertility, outrivaling in sober fact the far-famed riches of the Valley of the Nile. Missouri has a luxuriance of vegetation which would make the vine-clad hills of Italy look like an arid desert. We have a variety of crops which would put to shame the fairest fields of fertile France. We have the forests and the mines, the cattle upon the thousand hills, the mighty cities, where the smoke from countless factories rolls up like incense upon the altar of industry. With it all we have a restless and indomitable race peopling this vast empire; a race which has planted civilization in the wilderness, which has wrested success from the jaws of defeat, which has conquered the savage, harnessed wild nature, and laughs at time, distance, and difficulties.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that the time for the permanent improvement of the Missouri River has come. Every great river in the world is improved, restrained, and fitted for navigation when the growth of population along its banks makes it necessary. That time has now arrived for the Missouri River. We want to see something else carried down that broad stream besides our fertile farms. I speak not only with the voice of 75 per cent of the Nation's exports, but with the voice of the new West, the financially emancipated West, the commercially important West, the West upon whom the burden of restoring prosperity to the whole country must rest. Let me say that the West, with united voices, demands immediate action toward the improvement of the Missouri River.

[Mr. LANGLEY addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

[Mr. AUSTIN addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House, general debate is now closed and the Clerk will read the bill.

Improving New York Harbor, New York: For maintenance, including Ambrose Channel, $200,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee at what depth it is proposed to maintain the Ambrose Channel at New York.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Forty feet.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the chairman answer another question: That is the greatest depth maintained at any port in the United States, is it not?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes; 5 feet greater than anywhere else.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Can the gentleman tell whether there are any ports in Europe maintained by other governments that have a greater depth than 40 feet?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I am not sure, but I do not think so.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Has the committee ever given consideration to the question of the advisability of limiting the depth of channels in the United States?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes; it has been talked about very seriously. It is possible that a limit must be fixed—in the interest of the Treasury.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman think the Panama Canal would limit the depth of channels of the world?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Oh, I have not considered the Panama Canal in connection with our harbors.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How many vessels that now cross the seas require a 40-foot depth?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. There are quite a number that, until the Ambrose Channel was deepened, could come in fully laden, because they had disposed of so much coal and in that way lightened ship and diminished their depth by the time of their arrival at the port of New York. But going out there were many vessels that could not go with a full cargo until the Ambrose Channel was deepened to its present depth, especially the Cunarders and vessels of one or two other lines.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. They require 40 feet?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Hudson River, New York: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $350,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I move to strike out the last word. Will the chairman of the committee kindly inform the House what portion of the Hudson River is to be improved under this provision:

Improving Hudson River, New York: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $350,000.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. That part from Coxsackie up to Troy.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is the part referred to in the report at page 5?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Under the head of "Hudson River?"

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The report of the committee indicates that the engineer's report may be presented in time for consideration of this committee on the entire project. Is there reason to expect that that report may now be considered by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in time for presentation to the House?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. The report for 12 feet of water at lowest depth is not yet before Congress. It probably will reach Congress in time to be considered by the Senate Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Did that report go to the board of engineers?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. It went to the board of engineers in due form.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Did they have public hearings?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I do not know as to that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This project contemplates a very large expenditure, does it not?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I do not know how much it will be—several million dollars.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. For obtaining a uniform depth of 12 feet?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Twelve feet.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. From Troy to Coxsackie.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes; at the lowest stage of water.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It would probably involve an expenditure of $5,000,000, would it not?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. In the vicinity of that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I wanted to know whether that report could be considered by Congress at this session?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I do not know whether the Committee on Commerce of the Senate will consider it or not. I hope they will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then it rests entirely upon them?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Entirely.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Newtown Creek, New York: For maintenance, $10,000.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question. Are all of these creeks named navigable?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Not only navigable, but they are carrying a vast commerce. Creek is another name for estuary. Years ago they were called creeks, and the name has been continued, but they are estuaries of the sea.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is what I supposed; affected by tide water.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes; and carry enormous commerce.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why did not they call them something besides "creeks?" Out west of the Alleghenies "creek" has a well-defined meaning; it is a very small stream, fit for nothing except from which to catch minnows.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Newtown Creek has a commerce of 4,000,000 tons, valued at $230,000,000.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I only called attention to this to clear up the minds of some gentlemen who have not been here very long and did not know the value of a creek.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Arthur Kill, New York and New Jersey: For maintenance of improvement of Arthur Kill and the waters connecting Raritan Bay with New York Harbor, including channel between Staten Island and the New Jersey shore, New York and New Jersey, $10,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to say that the Arthur Kill is a small channel that separates Staten Island from New York. It is not necessarily a part of the port of New York, but it has a tonnage in one year four times as great as the entire tonnage of the whole Mississippi system, leaving the Ohio out. The total amount of money that has been spent on the improvement of the Arthur Kill since the establishment of the Government is $341,000. The total maintenance charged for this stream, which might have made a portion of a great coastal canal system, has been $5,000 per annum. I mention this not by way of disparaging any other river of the country but to bring to the attention of the people of the environment of the Arthur Kill the importance of their own particular river.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the people in the neighborhood of the Arthur Kill are very much indebted to the gentleman from Philadelphia for awakening to the importance of this waterway and is convinced that this appropriation for maintenance is not excessive. I think anybody familiar with the waters about the harbor of New York know that while they may not have high-sounding names they do carry an amount of tonnage in commerce that more than justifies all the appropriations that have been made for them.

Some years ago I made an estimate of the total appropriations for rivers and harbors in this country, and found at that time that they had an aggregate of $296,000,000, and of that sum about $4,000,000 had been expended in improvements about the harbor of New York. Of all the exports of the United States, 65 per cent, as I recall it now, went out of that harbor, while a much larger percentage of the imports came to that harbor.

So that it is a matter of gratification that the gentlemen from the great city of Philadelphia, who have at times been somewhat critical of the fact that projects have been authorized for the improvement of waterways in the harbor of New York greater in extent than those about the harbor of Philadelphia, have a full realization of the importance to the entire country of these waterways, and are so ready and willing to acquiesce in these very modest appropriations that are made for their continuance.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman from New York yield to me?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will yield to the gentleman, I believe from Illinois. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I merely want to say in reference to the Arthur Kill that I am not as familiar as I might be with the various improvements that are made about New York Harbor. I am familiar in a way with the Delaware River, because I have been down it and recognized the great importance of that river. As the creeks have been referred to as estuaries of the sea, bearing great commerce, and as I believe in the probability that a great commerce will be borne upon the western waters when improved, as they will be in the next twenty or, perhaps, thirty years, I want to say that I was reminded of the bill that was vetoed by President Arthur in 1882. I voted for that bill, and I voted to pass it over the President's veto. A distinguished citizen on the New York delegation ridiculed some of the appropriations. I recollect for one there was an appropriation for Buttermilk Channel, a name that might suggest prohibition. [Laughter.] There was an appropriation for various creeks which I was compelled to familiarize myself with in the ensuing campaign in order to defend my vote to pass that bill over the President's veto. I had a good deal of difficulty in convincing my constituency—and they were convinced—of the propriety of making appropriations to improve the rivers and harbors of the country. About that time the Mississippi River Commission was created, and I took great pleasure in voting for that measure and for the appropriations that have been made from that time to this, in which great progress has been made. [Applause.]

But I recollect that I sometimes was discouraged in that campaign. There was but one metropolitan paper in that great Middle West that did not ridicule that bill, and it was anathema maranatha for every man that voted for it. I then had to meet the opposition of the metropolitan papers of the great city of Chicago in justifying my vote to an agricultural district, not a great way from the Wabash, not directly interested in those improvements; but I thanked God then, as I thank God now, that that constituency, agricultural district as it is to-day, had the breadth and the intelligence, and, I may say, the patriotism, crossed with that breadth and intelligence, to stand by me at the polls. I ought to make one honorable and intelligent exception to the attacks by the metropolitan press, when I was a younger man than I am now, and that was the Globe-Democrat, published at St. Louis. Behold how times have changed and keep on changing!

I have great respect for the newspaper press. They have access to the people, and they are read and ordinarily have great influence. I recognize that fact. Why, I had the pleasure of floating down the Mississippi on a steamboat in the late excursion from St. Louis to the Gulf. There is nothing like kindergarten instruction. While I had voted for these appropriations since the early eighties, I did not really understand as to the nature of the improvements. I did not understand that the strengthening of the banks, the confining of the water to a channel, substantially compelled the water to do the work of giving a deeper channel. I did not understand that in strengthening the banks with the revetment in many instances it probably meant an expense of $50,000 a mile. I did not fully realize, with engineering skill calling the forces of nature to work, exactly how much time it would take and is to take to work out the great problem; but I had enough kindergarten instruction at that time to feel that I was justified in my former vote, and that I am justified in voting for and supporting this bill as one Member of Congress. [Applause.]

We have 90,000,000 of people in this country now. When fully populated and developed we will have 500,000,000 of people. Already we have almost one-half of the railroad mileage of the round earth, carrying one-third of the products of the civilized world back and forth to market. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, long before the 500,000,000 of people are here, if we are to depend upon transportation by rail alone, we will have the railway mileage multiplied by two, multiplied by three, multiplied by four. It is a long work to make these improvements, to add to nature sufficient depth of water to carry the great and constantly increasing commerce. Terminals are to be cared for. If you had a railroad running from New York to Chicago, with no stations, it would carry a great deal of commerce originating on the Lakes, down to the seashore, but no railroad could be successfully maintained unless there were hundreds of stations. These stations will come on the rivers, but all this can not be done in a day.

I do not care about airing grievances touching newspaper and magazine attacks. It is their privilege. Why, Mr. Chairman, I recollect on that trip down the Mississippi that a great enterprising metropolitan paper issued a paper daily, with the aid of the local publishers along the way. When I turned around to come back from New Orleans, from the criticisms that I received and that many others received, not founded upon correct information—I will not say maliciously false—but not founded upon correct information, it made me wonder whether I was afoot or ahorseback; whether I was I or somebody else. [Laughter and applause.]

I am glad, Mr. Chairman, that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors by well-considered items has made what the chairman of that committee says is a good bill, and what I believe to be a good bill. I am not an engineer. In the great mass of business that is covered by 30,000 bills pending before the various committees, no man ever lived who can exhaust all of them. We must follow the committees. No Congress will ever exist that can ever consider all of the 30,000 bills, unless God in His infinite mercy lengthens the hours in the day and the days in a year. It is for us, while we occupy temporarily the places that we do occupy, to preserve the machinery by which a majority can transact the public business, and to preserve it, looking into the faces of the gentlemen on the other side, so that when the wisdom of the American people and the favor of God may give, perchance, in the fullness of years, a majority to them [laughter and applause] they will have the rules and the order of procedure, the product of the experience of one hundred and twenty years, unhampered, and thus may run the business of this House, and glorify—on the consideration of the river and harbor bill and all other bills—for the advantage not of men of their organization alone, but for all of the 90,000,000 of people. And while we seemingly strut and fret, declaim and are interviewed constantly in the public prints—notwithstanding all that, the people of the United States will hold responsible from time to time the party in power for legislative results, and unless that party has the machinery and the procedure to achieve those results, they will not have full power although they may be in the majority.

I expect we will continue to receive all kinds of correct information, and fake information that is fished for, you know, here and there, in order that our great metropolitian journals may continue, some of them, to make their papers from day to day, like the Yankee made his razors—to sell. [Laughter and applause.] But I desire to say to gentlemen on this side of the House, and to gentlemen on that side of the House, that in the last analysis, out of the two great organizations—the minority from time to time putting the majority on its good behavior, seeking to become the majority—will come correct legislation and correct appropriations for the greatest good to the people of the Republic. And if we lose sight of our own importance and of our own position for the time being, there will come in our own places better and wiser men, who will not lose sight of the necessity to provide for an orderly procedure under which a majority can work its will. Where responsibility rests, there must be power with the majority to move on, being responsible. [Applause.]

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, the Speaker said in his remarks that he was not an engineer and could not judge as an engineer, but I desire to say that nearly every item in this bill has had the approval of the engineers.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to welcome to the support of this bill the distinguished Member from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. If it be accepted that he has all the power in this House that has been attributed to him recently, I am quite convinced that this bill will now have easy passage through the House. On behalf of those who are interested in a proper and comprehensive improvement of the waterways of the country it is a pleasure to have recorded the fact that the Speaker is heartily in favor of this bill. In what he said, Mr. Chairman, he referred to a Member from the city of New York who had criticised the bill which was vetoed by President Arthur in 1882. As the Speaker did not name the Member and as somebody might get the impression that, perhaps, I had changed my course since that time [laughter] I wish to announce that I was not the Member, as I did not happen to be a Member of the House in 1882. The Speaker referred to Buttermilk Channel as one of the waterways which he was compelled to justify before his constituents. Buttermilk Channel is the western boundary of the district which I represent. Commencing with what is well known as the Brooklyn Bridge it runs 2¼ miles around the westerly side of the borough of Brooklyn until it reaches the point known as Red Hook Point. Thence the channel proceeds along the westerly bank of the borough of Brooklyn under the names of Red Hook and Bay Ridge channels until it reaches deep water in the sea. In 1880 a project was prepared to deepen Buttermilk Channel to 26 feet at mean low water. Its name is derived from the fact that, separating, as it does, the borough of Brooklyn from Governors Island, because of the prevailing rapid currents the water is considerably churned up and has the appearance of buttermilk. The distance between the shore in Brooklyn and Governors Island is about 900 feet, and the recent lengthening of merchant vessels has, perhaps, rendered that channel less available for large-draft and long-cargoed vessels than it had been within recent years, but along that channel, Mr. Chairman, until within the past six or seven years there was maintained one of the greatest systems of warehouses known in the United States. From that channel to-day proceed most of the vessels which ply between the port of New York and South American, Caribbean, and Mediterranean ports.

In January, 1901, I made a comprehensive statement in this House about Buttermilk Channel. I showed by statistics that in the calendar year 1899 the freight received and shipped from the wharves along this channel amounted to 12,301,292 tons, valued at $373,754,512; 33,143 loaded and unloaded miscellaneous cargoes of grain, coffee, sugar, cotton goods, and other commodities. The commerce has grown greatly during the past ten years.

I make this statement at this time so that it may go in the RECORD with the Speaker's statement, so that it may be well known that this channel is important to the commerce of this country to-day and was so at the time referred to by the Speaker. No appropriation is made in this bill either for its maintenance or its improvement. My recollection is that it has been improved to a depth of 30 feet at mean low water, and probably that depth will be sufficient for the character of vessels that will come to the docks and warehouses built along it. I am happy that the few remarks that I had occasion to offer in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] have been the occasion of having drawn thus early in the consideration of this bill the opinion of the Speaker in the RECORD upon it; and I am sure all of us who have been anxiously awaiting the recommendations of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors are happy to know that this bill seems to have given such universal satisfaction. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. LATTA, one of his secretaries.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Delaware River, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Delaware: Continuing improvement and for maintenance from Fishers Point to Delaware Bay, $550,000: Provided, That of this amount so much as may not be required for maintenance of improvement in accordance with the existing project shall be expended for widening the channel at the bends below the city of Philadelphia with a view to securing, so far as practicable, a channel of equal safety and efficiency in all its parts.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Will the chairman of the committee kindly answer one or two questions? You have made provision here, as I understand it, for a widening of the bends at a depth of 30 feet. For that we have to make our acknowledgments to the committee, but I want to ask the gentleman whether he knows anything about the 35-foot survey, for which provision was made in the bill of 1909?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. The gentleman refers to the survey of the act of 1909?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Providing for a depth of 35 feet.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. That is now being considered by the board, but unfortunately was not before us during our consideration of this bill. I have no advice when it is likely to be reported; probably not—certainly not in time for the action of this committee.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not want the gentleman to misunderstand me. I am making comparison only for the purpose of getting at the point. Was the survey of the Hudson River provided for in the 1909 bill?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And the report of the engineers has so far advanced that the report may be in the Senate in time for consideration by this Congress?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I am so advised. It was made by an engineer. The Hudson River survey was made by Colonel Black, and the Delaware River survey was made by Major Deakyne.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman told me a moment ago that the probable cost of the Hudson River improvement for a depth of 12 feet from Troy to Coxsackie would probably aggregate $5,000,000.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I do not know what will be the amount. I have not even heard it rumored, but I should suppose, from my knowledge of the conditions—it being solid stone from Albany clear to Waterford—it would take at least four or five millions of dollars to excavate the channel that will give water of 12 feet at its lowest stage. That would mean a channel of 15 feet at Albany.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How far is that above the port of New York?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. One hundred and fifty miles.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Has the gentleman been advised at all as to the probable cost of the 35-foot depth in the Delaware River for a distance of 60 miles?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I have not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have been advised unofficially that the cost would be $10,225,000.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I have heard no intimation; have not heard the slightest rumor as to what it would cost.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I wish to say to the gentleman in the time reserved to me that the commerce of the port of Philadelphia last year was over 27,000,000 tons; that the revenues collected at that port aggregated $20,000,000. That, of course, was distributed in the revenues of the country in other sections as well as in ours. Vessels went ashore last year in the Delaware at the 30-foot depth. One was a battle ship of the United States that carried away the marine forces that were to hold up the dignity of our country in southern waters. I want to ask the gentleman whether he does not think it possible that we should have some consideration through the Board of Engineers of that 35-foot project at this session of Congress?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. It is impossible for me to hazard even a guess. I do not know how much work is before the board of review. I do not know whether the Delaware survey has yet reached the board. It would be utterly impossible to make any guess.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The fact, then, is that one engineer on the Hudson River project was able to complete his report in time to get it in for action by the Senate, and another engineer, starting to work exactly at the same time on the Delaware River project, is unable to get it in in time for consideration before either House?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Smyrna River, Delaware: For maintenance and continuing improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 815, Sixtieth Congress, first session, $25,000: Provided, That no part of said amount shall be expended until satisfactory title to the land required for the necessary cut-offs shall have been transferred to the United States free of cost.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Insert after the word "cost," in line 10, page 19, the following new paragraph:

"Inland waterway to connect the waters of the Chesapeake and Delaware bays: For acquisition of the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal, in accordance with the report submitted in Senate Document 215, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, for the purpose of freeing said canal and ultimately securing and maintaining a depth of channel of 35 feet, $2,514,289.70."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, this is a case where there has been a survey and a report. A commission known as the Agnus commission reported in favor of the taking over of the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal in 1907. That action was duly reported to the House. The taking over of that canal would mean much to the Atlantic seaboard in the way of saving life and property, and in the reduction of transportation rates, as well as in the facilitation of a great commercial and agricultural business. The canal is now in active operation. It has been so since it was constructed in 1829, but it is still of the antique order, like all the canals along the Atlantic seaboard.

I hold in my hand a letter from one of the shippers over that canal—a cut-off of 13 miles through solid land, saving an outside sailing distance of about 325 miles—which indicates the charges that are now made, and the difficulties that shippers have even in that short artificial waterway:

For your information the present charge for tolls through the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal for the 13 miles is higher than any railroad charge for the same distance on any railroad in the United States, and the railroad furnishes the motive power, the track, and the vehicle, whilst the canal charge is merely a privilege of passage, the customer furnishing in addition the vessel and motive power and all the liability, so it is an easy matter to figure the great burden this is to the development of the commerce, as it practically prevents competition and warps all development.

That canal to-day is used by the lumber trade which comes up from Virginia, North Carolina, and South Carolina and passes into the ports of New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore, and is also used in the shipment of coal and other bulky commodities. It has a depth of only 9 feet, insufficient to pass any modern vessel of commerce outside of the barge class. It is the shortest cut between the Delaware and Chesapeake bays, upon which, according to the report of the engineers, there could be a monumental commerce. I quote from the report presented to the Fifty-eighth Congress, which shows the commerce on the Delaware and Chesapeake bays:

The commerce of the Delaware and Chesapeake, registered and otherwise, has been estimated all the way from 50,000,000 to 90,000,000 tons annually. This is much larger than the tonnage of the entire annual foreign commerce of the United States. The Isthmian Canal Commission estimated that the Panama Canal, now to be built at a cost approximating $200,000,000, would have carried a tonnage in 1899 of but 4,574,852 tons.

Mr. Chairman, there is so much of importance in this matter that I dare not venture in the five minutes' limitation to cover it all. Therefore, in moving the adoption of the amendment, I ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, extending, by permission of the House, my remarks on the amendment to the river and harbor bill, providing for the taking over and freeing of the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal, I wish, first of all, to put into the RECORD an extract from the excellent and comprehensive report of the Agnus commission, which was forwarded to Congress January 12, 1907. It deals with the long and patient agitation of the people of the Eastern States, who have pleaded so earnestly for consideration of this worthy project, and sets out in forceful terms the commercial, naval, and military advantages that would accrue to the Government and the people of all the States by its adoption. Especially to those devoted and successful advocates of the great projects of the Middle West is this succinct statement of one of the crying commercial necessities of the Atlantic seaboard commended.

Commenting upon the public interest in the project, the commission said:

COMMERCIAL ADVANTAGES.

At each of the public hearings in Baltimore, Wilmington, and Philadelphia the business organizations of the city were represented by committees of leading citizens and speakers, including Representatives in Congress, members of the judiciary, and officers of the city and State. The commission found in these great cities—and elsewhere also—a remarkably efficient and practically unopposed demand for the ship canal.

So many forceful speeches were made at the hearings that it is difficult to choose from them, but because of his well-known conservatism and his high standing with the American people, these words from the distinguished jurist, Hon. George Gray, at the Wilmington meeting, seemed to be especially pertinent:

"Anyone who looks at the map, or, indeed, any map of this region, can understand why as early as two hundred years ago it occurred to the intelligent voyagers to this country that a canal across this narrow neck of land would be a necessity of the future. It was talked about one hundred and fifty years before it was accomplished, and across that upper narrow portion of the peninsula a canal was at last put which has served largely to promote the commerce of our country and this region. No one can overestimate the advantage it has been between the North and the South. The coal, lumber, and general merchandise which has found a cheap passage has been a considerable advantage. Now that the country has grown in wealth and population it is a natural sequence that attention should be called to its important relation to the country at large. A great deal of the commerce of the Chesapeake Bay from Baltimore, from Washington, and all the affluents of the Chesapeake Bay go up that canal. Now if it was a ship canal it would connect the two geographical divisions of the country—all that country east of the Hudson—with the country that lies west and south of the Chesapeake. That little obstruction compels an ocean voyage of several hundred miles, and there is to be considered not only the distance, but the expense. The plan for the canal should commend itself to the representatives of all the country. You could not contradict the propositions which these simple facts support. It would be of immense importance. Whether you are in favor of liberal appropriations or not, it has every argument that it would be for the better support of the National Government."

Even stronger testimony may be found in the action of the commercial bodies and other public organizations of the cities and towns along the Atlantic seaboard, the more important of which are contained in the records of public hearings on file with the proceedings of the commission.

THE MODERN DEMAND FOR CANALS.

The significant development of the public hearings was the conviction of leading business and transportation experts that the railroads of the Atlantic seaboard were having great difficulty in handling freights, and that the extraordinary growth of the country's business had already taxed them to the limit of their facilities. In the Eastern States the freight congestion has become a serious embarrassment to business.

The opinion was expressed that the railroads could now choose the kinds of freight they wish to carry and leave the commoner kinds to take their chances. In this the United States is passing through an experience similar to that of Europe. The rise of the railway caused the decline of the canal until recently, when the railway could not meet all of the public demands. It is recognised that the capacity of the railways in solving the question of good traffic is limited, and so, as never before in recent history of the railroad, attention has been turned to canals. It has been found that "by natural process of adjustment railways carry a lighter and more valuable material, which must be conveyed rapidly, where canals carry heavier and less valuable goods which do not require rapidity of transportation."

THE COASTWISE TRADE.

It is very unfortunate that there are no satisfactory statistics of our coastwise trade, although it represents many times the value of our foreign commerce. A letter from the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, replying to the commission's inquiry, says:

"Our information with reference to the coastwise commerce is of very little value. It is the one feature of the internal commerce of the country to which I have not been able to give attention."

The fact that vessels engaged in coastwise trade are not required to file copies of their manifests at the custom-houses makes the record difficult.

The projected canal across the Maryland-Delaware peninsula would unquestionably be a great convenience to foreign shipping. The view that it would not be used by ocean-going ships is the same contention that arose when the other great ship canals were built, but their history has shown that when the channel is cut the ships will always take the shortest course.

The Delaware and Chesapeake bays have a shore line of 2,500 miles, with 500 tributary streams and more than 10,000 registered vessels.

An idea of the trade immediately affected can be had from the statement contained in Report No. 2725 to the Fifty-eighth Congress, which says:

"The commerce of the Delaware and Chesapeake, registered and otherwise, has been estimated all the way from 50,000,000 to 90,000,000 tons annually. This is much larger than the tonnage of the entire annual foreign commerce of the United States. The Isthmian Canal Commission estimated that the Panama Canal, now to be built at a cost approximating $200,000,000, would have carried a tonnage in 1899 of but 4,574,852 tons."

Of the registered tonnage traffic in a recent compilation, 25,873,167 were on Delaware Bay points and 24,151,932 on Chesapeake Bay points. These figures, however, do not include the undocumented and unregistered tonnage traffic, which would add nearly 100 per cent to the total.

Considerably less than one-tenth of the traffic on the Delaware and Chesapeake bays and their various points belongs to foreign commerce. The great value of the proposed canal would be in facilitating the coastwise trade.

It is estimated that at least 2,000,000 tons of coal would go through this canal to consumers farther north. Under the present conditions, much of this coal has to make a detour by way of the capes, and often the vessels must lie at Hampton Roads ten or twelve days and even two weeks waiting a shift of wind.

A striking illustration of this condition was found in the newspapers of Thursday, October 25, 1906, the day the first draft of this part of the report was written, when it was stated that on that day "about 75 steamers, tugs, barges, and sailing vessels passed out Cape Henry, bound south and east, the majority having been weather-bound for at least two weeks."

The experts who appeared before the commission believe that the canal would cheapen coal for the New England points. Lumber will be an important item. Its movement northward from the Carolinas and other Southern States is much hampered by the inadequacy of the present canal. With a free canal the cost would be about half the present rate, according to the experience of the lumber trade on the Great Lakes.

Coal and lumber have been mentioned, but they are only two of the numerous products, among which may be counted cotton, corn, staves, hog products, poultry and vegetables, live stock, hay, fisheries, tobacco, coke, wool, potatoes, peanuts, phosphate, turpentine and resin, zinc, and stone.

It is estimated that the South each year has over $2,000,000,000 worth of raw materials. A very considerable part of all this seeks northern markets, and in return the North sends machinery and supplies of all kinds. All this movement would be aided by the proposed canal. The manufacturing interests touched by waterways, which this canal would connect, and of which it would become a part, have an annual total production of considerably more than $1,000,000,000.

Many of the great industrial concerns have located on the seaboard so as to have the advantage of cheap transportation.

It is the commission's opinion that the deep-water canal across the upper end of the peninsula would be of very great advantage to commerce. It would give the West a seaboard more than 100 miles nearer the ocean than it now has. It would relieve hundreds of vessels of the necessity of a dangerous sea route, which in years gone by has cost $10,000,000 in wrecks. It would save time and expense to the trade movements of the whole country. It would immediately affect the 11,000,000 people upon the two bays and their tributaries, and would contribute to the interests of all of the population. In increasing commerce and reducing the cost of transportation, it would stimulate production and be of direct financial benefit to American industries. The commission believes the commercial advantages will fully justify the expenditure of the funds necessary to complete the work.

MILITARY AND NAVAL USES.

In a general strategic sense the military advantages of the proposed ship canal appear most prominently in the channel offered for the rapid transit of naval vessels from one bay to the other to concentrate against hostile naval fleets or for the breaking of blockades.

To make the canal thus available at all times, its termini must be thoroughly protected by sufficient coast defenses to render its passage at all times open. This is at present secured on the Delaware for the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal route by existing defenses, and on the Chesapeake by the defenses of Washington, Baltimore, and Hampton Roads, which an attacking naval force would hesitate to leave in its rear, sheltering cruisers that could demolish its boats of communication and supply. But full strategic use of the canal could be secured only by adequate coast defense at each terminus. It is not considered that a project for the defense of the Chesapeake terminus lies within the scope of this report, as such project should receive careful consideration by a competent board of military engineers. The cost would be practically the same for either route.

Assuming, however, that both termini are to be properly defended, the canal itself offers many advantages to such defense by the ready means of intercommunication afforded. The canal would permit the prompt interchange of troops and munitions between the coast batteries and particularly of the submarines, scout boats, and coast-defense monitors that now form an important factor in seacoast defense, thus minimizing the number required for a complete defense.

Another important feature of the canal would be the obstacle presented by it as an adjunct for land defenses. These would serve as a base for troops operating to break up military occupation of the peninsula, or to check advances therefrom without reembarkation should such occupation become effective. A geographical study of the Atlantic coast of the United States, as at present defended, shows the peninsula of Maryland and Delaware as the most vulnerable and suitable place for the location of a base for land operations should our navy be driven from the seas. This was demonstrated by history in the war of 1812.

THE COST AT 35 FEET.

So much for the report of the commission. It recommended the taking over of the canal, at a cost of $2,514,289.70, and expressed its belief that "the construction over the route of a free ship canal" was "justified by the demands of commerce and by military and naval considerations." For a depth of 35 feet, which would enable the canal to carry the largest ships afloat, the commission estimated the cost to be $20,621,323.70. The cost of a 30-foot depth was estimated at $17,312,064.70. These estimates are taken from the original reports, but subsequently, under the direction of the Chief of Engineers, there was a reassembling of estimates to ascertain the cost of depths less than 30 feet, as appears from the following report from one of the engineer commissioners submitted October 8, 1908, for the information of the Committee on Railroads and Canals:

COST AT 16 FEET, $10,638,993.89.

HEADQUARTERS THIRD BATTALION OF ENGINEERS,
Fort Leavenworth, Kans., October 8, 1908.

The CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
United States Army, Washington, D. C.

GENERAL: As directed by indorsement from the office of the Chief of Engineers dated June 4, 1908 (E. D. 442), I have the honor to submit the following report covering the information desired by the chairman of the Committee on Railways and Canals, House of Representatives, in letter to the Secretary of War dated May 21, 1908. This information was as follows:

First. The cost of construction along the line of the present Chesapeake and Delaware Canal of a canal of proper widths and 25 feet deep at mean low water.

Second. The construction along the line of the present Chesapeake and Delaware Canal of a canal 16 feet deep at mean low water, of proper widths.

Third. For a canal of 35 feet depth at mean low water, with revetments placed for final expansion to this latter depth, and also an alternative estimate for a canal of 16 feet depth, with proper widths for that depth, estimate to include a permanent revetment upon one bank of the canal and a light temporary revetment on the other bank for removal in case of future expansion of the canal.

Fourth. The cost of construction of a ship canal of 35 feet depth and the cheapest line paralleling the present canal close to its present position, but without encroaching on any of the properties of the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal Company.

Fifth. The estimated value to the United States of the saving effected by utilizing the present route of the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal Company over what the cost would have been were canal to be constructed over this line under conditions precedent to the construction of the present canal.

To prepare accurate estimates for this report would require, as I stated verbally to the chairman, an accurate and carefully contoured survey of the land along the two routes considered. As the War Department had at its disposal no funds available for such survey I was compelled to base my estimate on existing maps of previous surveys, which do not even approximate the desired accuracy. The figures given below are obtained from the profile along the line of the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal, as given in report of the commission—of which I was a member—on a waterway to connect the waters of the Chesapeake and Delaware Bay—printed in Senate Document No. 215, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session—and which is fairly accurate, and from a profile shown on accompanying tracing along alternate route to the south of the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal constructed from the local maps of the United States Geological Survey. These maps give only 20-foot contours and do not pretend to the accuracy desired for computations of excavation. It is my opinion, however, that the figures given in the estimate will not vary from the correct ones more than 5 per cent for canal prisms along the line of the present canal or more than 10 per cent along the alternate route.

The estimates desired taken seriatum are as follows:

1. Canal along the line of the present Chesapeake and Delaware Canal, 25 feet deep at mean low water, with surface widths for future expansion to a 35-foot depth.

Estimate.

Purchase of land, 903 acres high land, at $250	$225,750.00
Purchase of land, 750 acres marsh land, at $100	75,000.00
Excavation:
Chesapeake Bay from Pooles Island to Turkey Point, 3,229,550 cubic yards, at 13 cents	419,841.50
Mouth of Elk River and Chesapeake City, Md., 3,299,900 cubic yards, at 14 cents	461,986.00
Chesapeake City to point 33,000 feet east of same, 26,709,191 cubic yards, at 16 cents	4,273,470.56
From above point to Delaware River, 14,743,723 cubic yards, at 14 cents	2,064,121.22
Shore of Delaware River to present dredged channel, 2,680,500 cubic yards, at 13 cents	348,465.00
Revetment:
Bank revetment, 103,100 linear feet, at $6.50	670,150.00
Special revetment on deep cut where presence of quicksand is indicated	500,000.00
Jetties, 2,000 linear feet, at $20	40,000.00
One railway and 6 highway bridges	925,000.00
Maintenance of plant	702,500.00
Contingencies and engineering, 10 per cent of above	1,070,628.42
Purchase of works and franchises from Chesapeake and Delaware Canal Company	2,514,289.70

The area of land as stated above is that actually required for a strip 1,000 feet wide. The canal company's land map shows very few places where their holdings even approximate 1,000 feet in width. The company states its land holdings at 8,000 acres; if correct, this is probably largely outside holdings of land for drainage basins for their summit water supply. As the proposed canal will have no summit level, these drainage areas will not be needed and some saving might be effected by the sale or exchange of surplus land.

2. Canal along the line of the present Chesapeake and Delaware Canal, 16 feet deep at mean low water, with surface widths for future expansion to a 35-foot depth:

Purchase of land:
903 acres high land, at $250	$225,750.00
750 acres marsh land, at $100	75,000.00
Excavation:
Channel in Elks River and Back Creek, 464,520 cubic yards, at 14 cents	65,032.80
Chesapeake City, to point 33,000 feet east, 23,966,846 cubic yards, at 16 cents	3,834,695.36
Above point to shore of Delaware River, 10,186,884 cubic yards, at 14 cents	1,426,163.76
Shore of Delaware River to 16-foot depth in Delaware River, 1,102,000 cubic yards, at 13 cents	143,260.00
Revetment:
Bank revetment, 103,100 linear feet, at $6.50	670,150.00
Special revetment on deep cut where presence of quicksand is indicated	500,000.00
Jetties, 2,000 linear feet, at $20	40,000.00
One railway and 6 highway bridges	925,000.00
Maintenance plant	702,500.00
Contingencies and engineering, 10 per cent of above	860,755.19
Purchase of work and franchises from Chesapeake and Delaware Canal Company	2,514,289.70

3. For a canal of 35-foot depth along line of present canal, and for a canal on same line 16 feet deep, with suitable surface widths for the 16-foot depth, but with wooden revetment along one bank of the canal to permit easy removal in case of future operations for widening the canal at the surface suitably for a 35-foot canal—the revetment on the other bank to be of riprap, as recommended by the commission, and as included in above estimates.

Estimate for a 35-foot canal.—This is given on pages 7 and 8 of the commission's report as $20,621,323.70, but a careful checking of the commission's computations has developed an error in calculation of 3,000,000 cubic yards excess. This error, at 14 cents per cubic yard, reduces the commission's estimate by $420,000, or to $20,201,323.70.

For the 16-foot canal, as specified, we have the following:

Estimate.

Purchase of land, 903 acres high land, at $250	$225,750.00
Purchase of land, 750 acres marsh land, at $100	75,000.00
Excavation:
Channel in Elk River and Back Creek, 464,520 cubic yards, at 14 cents	65,032.80
Chesapeake City to point 33,000 feet east, 18,093,236 cubic yards, at 16 cents	2,894,917.76
Above point to shore of Delaware River, 8,358,994 cubic yards, at 14 cents	1,170,259.16
Shore of Delaware River to 16-foot depth in Delaware River, 1,102,000 cubic yards, at 13 cents	143,260.00
Revetment:
Bank revetment, permanent, 51,550 linear feet, at $6.50	335,075.00
Bank revetment, temporary, 51,550 linear feet, at $6	309,300.00
Special revetment on deep cut, where presence of quicksand is indicated	500,000.00
Jetties, 2,000 linear feet, at $20	40,000.00
One railway and 6 highway bridges	925,000.00
Maintenance plant	702,500.00
Contingencies and engineering, 10 per cent of above	738,609.47
Purchase of works and franchises from Chesapeake and Delaware Canal Co	2,514,289.70

4. Canal of 35-foot depth on line to the south, paralleling the present canal, but not encroaching upon its territory; the line of this canal is shown on accompanying map.

Estimate.

Purchase of land, 1,283 acres high land, at $250	$320,750.00
Purchase of land, 375 acres marsh land, at $100	37,500.00
Excavation:
Chesapeake Bay to mouth of Elk River, 20,524,470 cubic yards, at 13 cents	2,668,181.00
Mouth of Elk River to Chesapeake City, 10,055,000 cubic yards, at 14 cents	1,407,700.00
Chesapeake City to point 9,600 feet from Delaware River, 58,891,415 cubic yards, at 16 cents	9,422,626.40
Above point to shore of Delaware River, 4,738,810 cubic yards, at 14 cents	663,433.40
Shore of Delaware River to present dredged channel, 4,758,750 cubic yards, at 13 cents	618,637.00
Bank revetment:
126,400 linear feet, at $6.50	821,600.00
Special revetment where presence of quicksand is suspected	500,000.00
Jetties, 2,000 linear feet, at $20	40,000.00
One railway and 6 highway bridges	925,000.00
Maintenance of plant	702,500.00
Contingencies and engineering, 10 per cent of above	1,812,792.78
Total	19,940,720.58

5. The estimated value to the United States of the saving effected by utilizing the present route and property of the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal Company over what the cost would have been were a canal to be constructed over this line under conditions precedent to the construction of the present canal:

Useful excavation already made 5,506,620 cubic yards, at 16 cents		$881,059.20
Land holdings, 8,000 acres, at $50		400,000.00
Telephone line		2,000.00
		1,283,059.20
Less cost of removing 3 locks, at $5,000	$15,000
80,000 linear feet of bank revetment, at 10 cents	8,000
44,000 perches of masonry, at 40 cents	17,600
Balance		1,242,459.20

The above figures are a very rough approximation, but they have been carefully considered and the best available without a detailed survey. It is to be borne in mind that a large amount of excavation made by the canal company was placed on the banks as spoil and to form a towpath in the marshes, and is not useful excavation, in that it must be again handled in the construction of a ship canal.

Summary of estimates.

1. 25-foot canal along line of present canal, full widths	$14,291,202.40
2. 16-foot canal along line of present canal, full widths	11,982,596.81
3. 35-foot canal along line of present canal	20,201,323.70
16-foot canal along line of present canal, diminished widths	10,638,993.89
4. 35-foot canal along parallel line to south of present canal	19,940,720.58
5. Saving in value of work to the United States to be effected by using present canal route	1,242,459.20

The accompanying tracing shows the two canal routes considered, the profile along the alternate southern route, and the cross sections adopted for the three depths considered.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

C. A. F. FLAGLER,
Major, Corps of Engineers, Commanding.

HISTORY OF THE 13-MILE CUT.

The Chesapeake and Delaware Canal was opened in 1829. It was dug by hand in the old-fashioned way at the expense of the Federal Government, the States of Pennsylvania, Delaware, and Maryland, and private stockholders. It has been in continuous operation ever since, and while as good as any other eastern canal, is so antiquated and lacking in depth and width that the Half Moon of Hendrick Hudson's time could not pass through it. And yet it saves an outside sailing distance from Philadelphia and points north to Baltimore and points south, of about 325 miles, for to take the outside course by water means a sail down the Delaware River and Bay into the Atlantic Ocean as far as Cape Charles, Virginia, which must be rounded at Hampton Roads before Baltimore can be reached. The 13-mile cut across Delaware and Maryland saves all this time and risk, and provides a safe and speedy inside passage for commerce or for war vessels. It was to save the outside sailing that our forefathers cut the canal, and it is this saving the business interests of to-day are seeking to accomplish in an up-to-date, open, and unhampered water highway.

If the upper Mississippi, from the mouth of the Missouri to St. Paul, is to take $20,000,000 for "ultimate commerce," why should the "existing commerce" of the Atlantic coast be denied an equal opportunity? The query is not sectional; it suggests a square deal; a square deal, and nothing more!

It is not a proposition to be scoffed at because it has so often come before the House. On the contrary, it is a burning, lasting shame that it should have been so long postponed, postponed to the great disadvantage of a populous, thriving section of the country, which has done well for every other section of the country and deserves in turn to be fairly dealt with.

IMMENSE SHIPMENTS OF LUMBER HELD UP.

Add to this a statement from the Philadelphia Inquirer of February 11, only a few days ago. It pertains to shipments of lumber from Virginia and the Carolinas since the 1st of January, 1910—shipments not for a year, as commercial statistics are commonly reported by the United States engineers, but for one month and a few days only. The statement conveys a faint notion, too, of the dangers confronting life and commerce by the outside route. Here it is:

Although there were 15 lumber schooners reported lost or missing since January 1, entailing a loss of many hundreds of thousands of feet of lumber, 16,583,000 feet of lumber arrived at this port since the beginning of the year, according to the statement of the commissioners of navigation, made public for the first time yesterday.

The lumber was carried in 41 bottoms, principally barges, carrying nearly two-thirds of the immense quantity of lumber through the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal, following a freeze up, which held up many barges in Chesapeake Bay for nearly a month.

Twenty-seven barges, carrying 9,861,000 feet and one sailing vessel carrying 52,000 feet of lumber arrived via the canal within two days' time, breaking all records for business in the canal since it was first opened in 1829. More than 5,535,000 feet of lumber arrived on 11 sailing vessels via the Capes and 1,135,000 feet on 2 barges by the same route, making a grand total of 16,583,000 feet. Placed end to end the lumber would reach a distance of over 3,140 miles, or practically from Philadelphia to San Francisco.

USEFUL THOUGH ANTIQUE.

Antiquated as this old canal is, far behind the necessities of the country as it has been, these figures, compiled by the secretary of the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association, speak forcefully of its practical utility:

The canal with improvements cost $4,000,000.
It has carried 708,000 vessels.
It has carried 46,000,000 tons of freight.
It has received from tolls $13,000,000.
The length of the canal is 13¾ miles—12 miles in the State of Delaware and 1¾ miles in the State of Maryland.
The depth of the channel is 9 feet.
It has three locks, each 220 feet in length and 24 feet wide.
Speed of vessels through the canal is limited to 4½ miles per hour.
Two commissions have reported in favor of the construction by the Government of a ship canal substantially on the lines of the present Delaware and Chesapeake Canal, although other routes were considered.

SOMETHING ABOUT RATES.

It is said that freight rates by water are about one-sixth the rates by rail. It has been brought to my attention that a ton of clay can be brought from France across the Atlantic Ocean and delivered at Jersey City at one-half the cost of transporting the same ton of clay by rail from Jersey City to Trenton, N. J., a distance of 56 miles. I have also been advised that a ton of fertilizer (2,240 pounds) could be delivered by a completed inside waterway from Philadelphia to Wilmington, N. C., at $1.30 per ton against the rail rate of $4.80 per ton of 2,000 pounds. Be this as it may, with its serious effect upon the farmer, we are able to give some specific instances of the influence of the inside water route upon transportation rates. Here are some poignant facts from reliable authority upon the existing Chesapeake-Delaware situation:

By reason of the now-existing inland route between North Carolina and Philadelphia, for the navigation of which small barges of light-draft have been built, lumber freights from such places as Newberne and adjacent territory have been reduced from $5, which is the outside rate, to $3 per thousand feet. The handling charges on lumber shipped by barges, owing to their construction—large hatches, etc., which would not be feasible on craft navigating outside waters—have been reduced from 60 cents for loading to 20 cents and discharging from 50 cents to 25 cents per thousand feet.

ADVENT OF THE INLAND BARGE.

Before the advent of the inland barge, not over fifteen years ago, it was almost impossible for lumber dealers to secure tonnage to load in the Cape Hatteras district during August, September, and October, excepting at exorbitant freight rates, owing to the dangers of hurricanes in those waters. By the inland method fluctuations of freight rates seldom occur. Hurricanes do not retard the progress nor endanger barges or other craft navigating the inland waters.

Barge owners are subjected to higher canal charges from North Carolina ports in the late fall and early spring. This is due to the lack of competition at that period, the Albemarle and Chesapeake Canal not being navigable to vessels of any size, owing to low water due to high winds.

When the Albemarle and Chesapeake Canal ceases to be a factor the Lake Drummond Canal officials put their rates up on lumber 20 cents per thousand feet to 35 cents.

Great benefit would result from the prompt improvement of the Albemarle and Chesapeake Canal, which would make it navigable at all seasons of the year.

My informant adds:

Potomac River wood trade, which until a few years ago was all in the hands of schooners plying the outside route, is now done exclusively by the inland barge, the result being a reduction in freight rates from $3.50 a cord to $2, now the prevailing rate.

Fully 70 per cent of the lumber now brought here (to Philadelphia) from the North Carolina district comes by the inland route. This means an enormous saving in the way of freights and insurance charges.

SAVING OF LIFE AND RISK.

I might add—

Says my informant—

that the saving of life through the adoption of this method of shipment has also been enormous. When the small outside schooners were in this Hatteras trade the sacrifice of life during the hurricane months—August, September, and October—was appalling. I have personal knowledge of crew after crew that perished in this way.

With vessels navigating inland waters the insurance problem, which for years was a vexatious one to both the owners of craft and shippers of lumber, no longer exists. A vessel's classification no longer enters into the question. All vessels that will float are considered a good risk for underwriters when navigating inland waters.

CANALS MAY ALSO NEED REGULATION.

These direct statements from an experienced, practical shipper ought to have great weight with the Congress. But there is another phase of the question which is important. The canal, unless freed from private or corporate ownership, may not prove the blessing the shipper seeking competition desires.

The railroad control of the Delaware and Raritan Canal—prevents at this time the development of a large business between North Carolina ports and New York. Rates are prohibitive, and the early closing of the canal operates against trade.

The Delaware and Raritan Canal bisects the State of New Jersey and establishes an inside water connection between Philadelphia and New York. It might become, under government control, the highway of the greatest manufacturing district in the world, but it is antique; it is kept antique; and under railroad ownership fails to give the public service or competition that mean encouragement of capital and industry.

River improvements are important—

Writes another shipper—

but what the business community wants is a free Chesapeake and Delaware Canal, which would stimulate the entire commerce of the port as well as of Baltimore and the South.

The present charge (February, 1910) for tolls through the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal for the 13 miles is higher than any railroad charge for the same distance on any railroad in the United States, and the railroad furnishes the motive power, the track, and the vehicle, while the canal charge is merely a privilege of passage, the customer furnishing in addition the vessel and the motive power and all the liability; so it is an easy matter to figure the great burden this is to the development of commerce, as it practically prevents competition and warps all development.

WHERE THE GOVERNMENT IS AFFECTED.

In addition to these commentaries upon a system of ownership and control which is not conducive to commercial enterprise or commercial development, let me draw upon the address of the president of the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association, at Norfolk in November, 1909:

It has been but a few months—

He said—

since the Secretary of the Navy proposed to send 4 torpedo boats from the navy-yard at Philadelphia to the navy-yard at Charleston. I asked that these boats be sent through the inside passage. They were small craft and were not calculated to withstand the storms of Cape Hatteras. The Secretary answered that he desired to send the boats through the inland waterways, but that they drew too much water to pass through the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal and the canals below Norfolk. Then, again, there was no outlet at Beaufort, below Hatteras, sufficient to enable the passage of these vessels out of the North Carolina sounds. They were sent outside, and in a few days the newspapers, under startling headlines, announced that these valuable vessels of the Government had been driven back from Cape Hatteras, had returned to Norfolk for repairs and in order that some of the men might be taken off and sent to the hospital.

TAKE THE CANAL AND MAKE IT FREE.

This, in brief, is the story of the Chesapeake and Delaware waterway. In the very center of a population of 30,000,000 of people, linking up the north and the south, it presents an opportunity that could not fail to improve the agricultural as well as the commercial and industrial relations of the various States. Its improvement would mean the development and enrichment of a country as fertile as any in the land. It would afford facilities for capital seeking profitable investment and add to labor's opportunities. The Government would have a strategic advantage, going and coming, over any foreign fleet that might attack the Atlantic coast.

The deepening and freeing of the waterway would instantly regulate the rates of transportation, to the great advantage of every consumer of raw materials or manufactured products. So long as existing limitations of depth, width, and tolls prevail, the productive power of the producer and the shipper is limited. When those limitations are removed capital and industry will be free to seize the opportunities awakened by the new conditions. Compared with other great projects authorized by the pending rivers and harbors bill, that of the Chesapeake and Delaware is indeed modest. The adoption of the project therefore ought not to be longer postponed.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, this survey which the gentleman from Pennsylvania refers to, and on which his motion is based, has been superseded by a survey put in the bill of 1909, on which the board has not yet reported. It is a general survey from Boston to New York, New York to Philadelphia, Philadelphia to Baltimore, and Baltimore to Norfolk and Beaufort, and on to Key West. The survey to which the gentleman refers is likely to be very seriously modified by that larger survey, in which he is so deeply interested, and in which the people along the entire seacoast are interested. I hope that the amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Northwest Fork of Nanticoke River (Marshyhope Creek) from its mouth to Federalsburg, Md., in accordance with plan No. 1 as recommended in the report submitted in House Document No. 869, Sixtieth Congress, first session, $22,100.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I submit a committee amendment on page 20, line 13.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 20, line 13, strike out "twenty-two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "ten."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Wicomico River, Maryland: For maintenance, and continuing improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 569, Sixty-first Congress, second session, $17,000: Provided, That no part of said amount shall be expended until title to the land required for the necessary right of way and for the disposition of dredged material shall have been transferred to the United States free of cost.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I submit a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 20, lines 20 and 21, strike out "seventeen" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-nine."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Potomac River: Continuing improvement and for maintenance at Washington, D. C., $180,000.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I submit the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 21, between lines 5 and 6, insert the following:
"Improving Potomac River, at Alexandria, Va., in accordance with the report submitted in the House Document No. 1253, Sixtieth Congress, second session, $20,000."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Removing the water hyacinth, Florida, Texas, and Louisiana: For the removal of the water hyacinth from the navigable waters of the State of Florida, so far as it is or may become an obstruction to navigation, $5,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee under what auspices this appropriation for the removal of water hyacinth from the navigable waters of Florida is to be expended?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. To be expended under the Secretary of War and the superintendence of the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Done under the direction of the engineers?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. A part of their duty?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes; the same as any other appropriation.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Yazoo River and tributaries, Mississippi: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, including Yazoo, Tallahatchie, Big Sunflower, and Coldwater rivers, and Tchula Lake under the existing project, and Steele and Washington bayous and Lake Washington, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 904, Sixtieth Congress, first session, and Bear Creek, Mississippi, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 908, Sixtieth Congress, first session, $39,000.

Mr. SPIGHT. I notice here an appropriation for the improving of the Yazoo River and tributaries, $39,000. I want to ask the chairman of the committee this question: In 1907 an appropriation was made for the improvement of the Tallahatchie River from the mouth of Coldwater ot Vicksburg, Miss., the sum of $4,000 being appropriated for that purpose. Of that amount all but $175 was expended during that year.

In March, 1909, an allotment of $5,000 was made for the improvement of the same part of the Tallahatchie River. No part of that appropriation was expended during the last year.

I want to know, first, if the chairman can tell me, why none of that money was used in the improvement of that part of the Tallahatchie River last year; and then I want to know whether or not the $1,000 which I understand will be allotted under this bill for the same part of the river will be added to the $5,000 and the $175 left of the appropriation of the preceding year.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. The gentleman is right. The first appropriation was made to be used for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and both can be used together.

Mr. SPIGHT. Why was it that none of that money was expended last year?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Of course I can not answer without the report of the engineer.

Mr. SPIGHT. I see from the report of the engineer that he says no work was done on that part of the river, for the reason that this appropriation was not available during the low-water season.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. That is right.

Mr. SPIGHT. The low-water season came after July. His reply was that it was not used after that time. I was surprised and disappointed that no part of this appropriation was used.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. How does the gentleman know that no part was used? We have no report of what has been expended since June 30.

Mr. SPIGHT. I know, as a matter of fact, that no part of it was used, and in the engineer's report he says no part of it was used.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. If the gentleman has any report of the engineer, it is up to June 30 last. The gentleman has no report of the engineer since that date. At least we have none, and we would have it if there was any.

Mr. SPIGHT. I suppose the gentleman is right about that, but I say as a matter of fact that I know nothing was done on that part of the river last year, although after the 30th of June this appropriation was available, as I understand it.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Then the gentleman has information which we have not. We rely upon the report of the engineers, and there is no report in since then.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I think I can answer the question of my colleague. The only explanation I can make is that the engineer's report was that this allotment of $5,000 was made from the appropriation of last March, but there is nothing to indicate just when that allotment was made. My impression is, from talking with the engineer at Vicksburg, that he intended to do the work, but when he came to it he found he had spent his money. The allotment was made later in the year.

The original estimate was $2,000 a year and we appropriated $4,000. When they began work it developed that the work was heavier and more expensive than they thought, and they spent the $4,000 the first year, so that last year they had nothing, and the chief engineer allotted them $5,000, but my impression is he made it too late to be of use last fall. So they have $5,000 on hand for that purpose, and in this bill an additional appropriation for $1,000 is made, and I think my colleague wants to be assured that the engineers will spend this on that particular reach.

Mr. SPIGHT. That is exactly what I wanted to get at.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. There is no question but that they will spend it on that reach.

Mr. SPIGHT. With that assurance I am perfectly satisfied.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving inland waterway from Mermentau River, Louisiana, to Sabine River, Louisiana and Texas, in accordance with the report of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, dated December 21, 1908, and printed in Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 3, Sixty-first Congress, second session, $100,000.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I submit the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 40, line 26, strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following words:

"Provided, That this amount may be applied to any modified plan for this section of the waterway that may be recommended by the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, and approved by the Secretary of War."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving inland waterway on coast of Texas: Continuing improvement and for maintenance of waterway heretofore authorized, $50,000; and toward the construction of that section of the waterway between Brazos River and Matagorda Bay, in accordance with the report of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors dated December 21, 1908, and printed in Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 3, Sixty-first Congress, second session, $200,000.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I submit the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 45, between lines 14 and 15, insert the following:

"Improving channel from Aransas Pass to Corpus Christi, Tex., with a view to securing a channel depth of 12 feet, as recommended by the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, in the report submitted in House Document No. 678, Sixty-first Congress, second session, $157,900."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving waterway between Jefferson, Tex., and Shreveport, La., by the construction of a dam at the foot of Caddo Lake, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 220, Sixtieth Congress, first session, $100,000.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 45, line 18, between the words "a" and "dam," insert the words "lock and," so as to make it read "a lock and dam."

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, the bill provides that a dam shall be placed at the foot of Caddo Lake. If placed there it will cut off 28 miles of the navigable part of the river. A lock which is asked in connection with the dam will prevent the destruction of the navigation between Shreveport, La., and Jefferson, Tex., and all we ask is to have the lock recognized. We do not ask for an additional appropriation. If I am correctly informed, the committee does not oppose the recognition of the lock. I wish to have the word "lock" interlined, so that there will be no doubt in the future that the lock is recognized as a desirable project by the committee.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, the survey of the item which is provided for in this bill was introduced in the bill of 1907, and therefore is properly before Congress. But the survey of the lock which the gentleman speaks of was introduced in the bill of 1909, and the engineer's report has not been before the committee. Therefore, there is nothing before us to act upon, and I hope the motion will not prevail.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the committee does not seem to be advised of the fact that only to-day the report of the engineer has been filed, but not published. It is not in print. I will read from page 5 of the former report of the engineer:

Although the construction of a dam would at present destroy navigation from Jefferson and Mooringsport to Shreveport it would not prevent the improvement of the entire waterway later if such a course should be determined upon, since all that would be needed would be a lock through the dam and a dredged channel below. In fact, the cost of the project previously advanced would not be increased, but might be diminished by constructing a lock and dredging the channel several years later, since the inroads of the falls would certainly diminish the amount of dredging.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I am quite well aware of the existence of that report. The Chief of Engineers does not approve of the lock. It has not been before the committee, and is not now properly before Congress. The committee have had no estimate and know nothing about it, and I hope therefore the motion will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Arkansas River, Arkansas: For maintenance of improvement, including works at Pine Bluff, $51,000.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 12, page 40, insert the following: For constructing, maintaining, and operating two dredge boats, to be used in dredging the channel of the Arkansas River between its mouth and the Ozark, Arkansas, $467,700.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the committee may find it consistent to approve of this amendment. In House Document No. 71, Sixty-first Congress, first session, the Board of Engineers recommended tentative dredging to be done on the Arkansas River, and this language was used:

Some experimental dredging has been done on the Arkansas, and while as yet unprepared to advocate the adoption of this means of improvement for the entire section of river under consideration (i. e., from the mouth up to Muskogee), the Chief of Engineers believes it worthy of further trial below Little Rock, and recommends for adoption the tentative plan proposed by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors.

The Report of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, 1909, contains this statement:

The operations of this fiscal year consisted in snagging operations and in dredging operations with a hydraulic dredge borrowed from the Mississippi River Commission. * * *

The hydraulic dredge Gamma was operated at three localities, but the principal work was done at Rob Roy. Here the main channel of the river had left the draw spans of the railway bridge and only a secondary channel behind a middle bar afforded a passage for boats through the draw openings of the bridge. The dredge opened this secondary channel and, notwithstanding this unfavorable condition, the dredged channel has remained open to the close of this fiscal year, but for fifteen days (October 10–24) during the lowest water period of this fiscal year the dredged cut did not afford a navigable channel. The dredged cuts made at the other two localities were obliterated in the freshet of October 25–November 8, 1908. Because of having to return the borrowed dredge to the Mississippi River Commission about the 1st of August each year, there has been no opportunity in the two seasons it has been operated in this river to fully try out its work during low-water periods; but, judging from such dredging as has been done, it appears that by such operation much material aid can be given to navigation by lengthening the navigable periods of the river. The district officer recommends that two dredges be provided for the river below Little Rock—174 miles.

Now, in House Document No. 510, being a report of the Board of Engineers making recommendation with reference to the Arkansas River between Little Rock and Ozark, they say:

In the report on the Arkansas River called for by the river and harbor act of March 2, 1907 (see H. Doc. No. 71, 61st Cong., 1st sess.), the board gave as its opinion that any expenditures Congress decided to make for the improvement of this river should be for dredging, and that the work should be undertaken tentatively by the use of two dredges on the reach below Little Rock. As the object of the tentative dredging proposition was to demonstrate the effectiveness of improving the channel by this method, the board now recommends that the field of operations be extended to Ozark and that the two dredges suggested be used where they will best serve the purpose for which intended. It is believed that this plan will determine the practicability of improving navigation at a reasonable cost, and will, at the same time, aid and encourage navigation between Little Rock and Ozark. The estimated cost of the work proposed is $349,000 for plant, with $118,700 annually for operating expenses.

On page 18 of the same report is an itemized statement of the estimated cost of these dredge boats, their maintenance and operation, and my amendment conforms to this estimate. It is as follows:

In view of this condition and the fact that the principal object of the tentative dredging proposition was to demonstrate the effectiveness of improving the channel by this method, it is recommended that the field of operations be extended to Ozark and that the two dredges suggested be used where they will best serve the purpose for which intended. It is believed that this plan will determine the practicability of improving navigation at reasonable cost, and will, during the period of trial, aid and encourage navigation. The estimated cost of the work proposed is as follows:

2 dredges, at $150,000	$300,000
1 fuel towboat	27,000
4 fuel barges, at $3,000	12,000
1 survey boat	10,000
Total	349,000

The operation of this plant is estimated as follows:

2 dredges	$63,000
1 fuel boat	14,700
1 survey boat	12,250
Expenses in ordinary and repairs	28,750

In compliance with that part of section 13 of the act of March 3, 1909, with reference to the special subjects to be considered, the board reports that there are no present terminal facilities at the landings on this river between Little Rock and Ozark except a paved slope or levee at Little Rock, where boats land, but it is proposed by the Little Rock Packet Company to construct coal loading and unloading appliances at the mines near Ozark and at Little Rock if navigation is so improved as to make their efforts at transportation by water successful. There are no water-power, terminal, or other subjects so related to the project proposed that they may be coordinated therewith to lessen the cost and compensate the Government for expenditures made in the interests of navigation.

I sincerely hope, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment may be adopted. The dredging work that has been done on the Arkansas River by way of experiment is, as these reports fully disclose, proving of material aid to navigation in the lower reach of the river, where they have been tried. It is thought by these engineers that two dredge boats can perform the tentative work on the entire reach of the river between Ozark and its mouth; and while it is true from some operations conducted there that perhaps two boats could well be used on the lower stretch of the river, I would be gratified to see those two boats created or put into commission there for the stretch of the river from Ozark to its mouth.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I sympathize with the gentleman. He wants two dredge boats, and we propose to give him two dredge boats if it is possible. The Mississippi River Commission, of which Colonel Bixby is president, has a number of dredges. He has written me already that he will send one of these boats to the Arkansas and he is looking for another which he is quite certain he can furnish. As I stated earlier in the day, we have between 500 and 600 boats and not all of them are in commission. The engineers are now looking to see where the idle boats are, that they may send them into those places where they are most needed. I will say to the gentleman from Arkansas that if Colonel Bixby is unable to put two good boats to work on this river this summer, I for one will be in favor of helping him out in the next bill; but I am certain, however, that he will get the boats at work this summer that he desires.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the gentleman yield for just a moment?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am gratified at the statement which the chairman of the committee makes, but I want to call his attention, however, to this fact, that for two years efforts have been made within my knowledge to secure the transfer of boats of the character to which he alludes from the Mississippi River to the Arkansas River and I had hoped at one time that would have been done more than a year ago. Those efforts, however, have so far failed. I thank the chairman of the committee for his efforts in the matter and I sincerely appreciate them and hope he will be successful. I desire to state to him now that if he does prove successful it will, so far as I can see, encompass every end I desire to accomplish by the adoption of this amendment, for the reason that I merely desire the work carried on and have no wish to see unnecessary boats constructed; but I would like to ask the gentleman in that connection what information he has, if any, concerning the likelihood of there being a transfer made of boats for permanent use on that river for that purpose?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I can not answer for the permanent use, but I can answer somewhat specifically, yes, on the temporary use for this summer, and then if this summer Colonel Bixby decides that he has no boats that he can spare, we will have to build them; that is all.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the gentleman will permit me one further statement in that connection, as these reports of the Board of Engineers, the engineer in charge, and the Chief Engineer show the experiments which have been made on the river in regard to dredging have all been made under great difficulties, having been made at times when they could least conveniently be made, I had hoped that the gentleman would find it consistent to recommend the acceptance of this amendment.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I certainly will join the gentleman in an earnest endeavor to secure those two boats for him. In the meantime I hope he will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Chairman, in view of the statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. REID. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

"That the Mississippi River Commission be, and are hereby, directed to transfer two dredge boats to the Arkansas River, to be used in dredging the channel of said river between its mouth and Ozark, Ark."

Mr. REID. Mr. Chairman, in view of the statements made by the chairman of the committee, it seems to me that that amendment is entirely in order and ought to be adopted. The chairman speaks with force of the recommendations by the Board of Engineers, who investigated this matter, and promises at an early day to do what he can to secure the transfer of boats from other sections to these reaches on the Arkansas River, and gives us what assurance he can that in the near future two boats can be transferred from the Mississippi River commission to the reach from the mouth of the river to Ozark on the Arkansas River. If that can be done for temporary purposes, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me it might be well now to make the permanent provision which the gentleman promises will be made in a future bill; and in the event that more boats are not in their places, let them be constructed for the use of the commission elsewhere. I have offered the amendment so as to conform to the suggestions of the chairman of the committee and to meet the immediate demands for opening the channel of the Arkansas River.

The gentleman can not have overlooked the report recently made by the special corps of engineers, who took into consideration the commercial importance of the stream, the development of the industries along the river, and especially the great coal fields on the upper Arkansas River that are now restrained from development because of lack of facilities for transportation, and the fact that the railroad interests up each bank of the river have until now succeeded in suppressing the navigation on the river. There is a navigation company which has been organized at Little Rock, and organized in such a way as to maintain it against any competition for the next ten years at least, and we are in important need of opening the channel. From the suggestion made by the chairman here it seems to me entirely feasible to make use of at least two boats now, to be taken from somewhere else and assigned to duty on that river. I therefore offer that amendment.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, the local engineers have recommended the construction of 12 or 14 dredges, snag boats, and so forth, in different parts of the country. The committee finally settled upon a rule that this bill should authorize the construction of no boats or dredges excepting a seagoing dredge on the Pacific coast. Now, in order to help gentlemen out who are rarely, it would seem, in need of these boats, we have undertaken to provide them not by an appropriation through this bill, but by a transfer from another part of the country. I think the gentlemen ought to be willing to let us try that out. If we can not do it, then they have grounds for coming here and asking that they be built for them.

This dredge is wanted above Little Rock. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] wanted a dredge for below Little Rock, but they both could be taken care of, I am confident, during the summer, and during that time we will ascertain if they can be put there permanently. I hope this amendment will not pass.

Mr. REID. This amendment does not propose an appropriation for the building of any dredge, but simply asks what the chairman assures us he thinks he can accomplish. It assures us that two dredges will be placed there, and the gentleman's suggestion as to one wanted below and one above Little Rock is in compliance with the suggestion of the board that went there and made an investigation of it. We want the two dredges on the entire reach.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I hope there will be no legislation put into this bill for this dredge.

Mr. REID. In view of the Chairman's assurance on the floor here that two boats will be put there during the coming season,

I want to call his attention to this fact, that in the report of the engineers it is suggested that when operations have been begun, the boats have been taken by the Mississippi River Commission, and the work has been interrupted every time.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I am aware of that.

Mr. REID. And we do not want to be troubled with it again if we can avoid it.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I am aware of that, and I want to say to my friend from Arkansas that I am quite sincere in this matter. Of course, we may fail to get the boat, but if we do fail it will be simply because boats are not to be had.

Mr. REID. I will withdraw the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Cumberland River above Nashville, Tenn.: For maintenance, $10,000; and for completing construction of Lock and Dam No. 21, $85,000; in all, $95,000.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after the word "dollars," in line 12, on page 47, the following:

"And for continuing improvement by the construction of Locks and Dams Nos. 8 and 9 in accordance with reports of examination and survey in 1882 and 1883 and adopted by the river and harbor act of August 5, 1886, and by subsequent river and harbor acts until the passage of the river and harbor act of March 2, 1907, $150,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such materials and work as may be necessary to prosecute the said project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $300,000, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated: Provided further, That the amount herein appropriated and authorized shall be applied to the acquisition of land required for sites of Locks and Dams Nos. 8, 9, 10, and 11, and toward the construction of Locks and Dams Nos. 8 and 9."

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment well aware of the rule by which the Committee on Rivers and Harbors was governed in the framing of this bill and under which they refused to insert any item of appropriation for any river project that had not been reported favorably by the Department of Engineers.

I offer the amendment, Mr. Chairman, in the hope that the committee will agree to it, because it constitutes a striking and worthy exception to the rule by which the committee was governed. This river, or rather that stretch of this river, to which the amendment applies, merely seeks to restore a scheme of improvement favorably reported by the Department of Engineers in 1883, and adopted by Congress in 1886, and readopted in each successive rivers and harbors bill until 1907, when without any apparent reason so far as I could see or in so far as any commercial, business, or transportation man familiar with the basin drained by this river could see, the Department of Engineers saw fit to recommend that the scheme of improvement for this entire stretch of river, penetrating a magnificent forest and mineral region for a distance of more than 200 miles, for the present should be discontinued above Lock No. 7, and this was based solely upon commercial grounds.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the point to which I seek to direct the attention of the committee is that there are instances when the judgment of the Department of Engineers upon the commercial conditions—not only present, but prospective—of our rivers is somewhat erroneous. And I insist that it is the duty of the committee and the duty of Congress to provide some means by which adequate relief can be had in the way of an appeal from the judgment and the recommendation of the Department of Engineers when they report favorably from an engineering standpoint upon every phase of the river except the commercial phase.

I have no disposition to detain the committee, except to call their attention to this condition, that doubtless exists in more than one section of the country. The section of river to which I have directed attention has a commerce of greater value than that of rivers like the Kentucky, the Big Sandy, the Big Kanawha, and other rivers that have already been improved at an expense of several millions of dollars—a commerce, I say, in its unimproved condition greater than that of these rivers in their improved condition and upon which millions have been expended.

I hope the committee may see fit to adopt this amendment of mine, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I sympathize with the gentleman, but there was an adverse report against this lock in 1905. Then we put into the bill of 1909 another survey, and only a few days ago the report came in adversely. Of course it would be contrary to law and to the existing policy for many years to admit this amendment. I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for just one suggestion?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that it is understood the engineer in charge made this report without any particular new investigation, and for that reason I call the attention of the committee to the condition there by offering this amendment. I am aware of the rule of the committee, but wished to call attention to the matter deemed unjust in that way.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Cumberland River below Nashville, Tenn., in accordance with the reports submitted in House Documents No. 758, Sixtieth Congress, first session, and No. 1481, Sixtieth Congress, second session, respectively, $213,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such materials and work as may be necessary to prosecute the said project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $450,000, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated: Provided further, That the amount herein appropriated and authorized shall be applied to the necessary surveys and the acquisition of land required for sites of Locks and Dams B, C, D, E, and F, and toward the construction of Locks and Dams B and C.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I observe that this paragraph carries with it an appropriation of $213,000 and an authorization for continuing contract of $450,000. Now, in the remarks made by the chairman of the River and Harbor Committee this afternoon, in referring to annual river and harbor appropriation bills, it was stated that one reason for annual bills was that heretofore recognized improvements had been excluded, except as to those favored projects which were recognized by continuing contracts to be therein made. Now, I assume on this paragraph that the sum of $213,000 is all that can be profitably expended during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911. If that be true, in view of the expressed attitude of the chairman of the committee, I ask why this particular improvement was differentiated from the other improvements by a continuing contract which is not necessary to expend during the ensuing fiscal year? I doubt not, Mr. Chairman, that there are other projects recognized in this bill, either for the first time or recognized by appropriations, for continued improvements which were as much deserving of recognition by appropriations to be made hereafter.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I do not know that I quite understand the point that the gentleman asked.

Mr. SMALL. I asked why there was a continuing contract in reference to this projected improvement of the Cumberland River? There is an appropriation of $213,000 carried in this bill. Is that all that can be profitably expended during the fiscal year; and if so, why was it necessary to have a continuing contract?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. This is masonry work. The construction of it may take one year, or it may take two, depending entirely on the contract. Even annual bills must carry continuing contracts. A lock means masonry work, a large sum involved, and the contract authorization provides simply for the completion of it. Engineers can not know in advance whether they can complete it within the year. Continuing contracts are generally given to projects requiring considerable time. In this case it is masonry work, and may extend over two or three years. Therefore a continuing contract is made. Does that answer the gentleman?

Mr. SMALL. Not entirely, if the gentleman will pardon me. The appropriation is for $213,000. Now, I will ask him, Is it not a fact that that is all that can be profitably expended during the fiscal year; and if so, why put it upon the continuing contract basis? I understood the gentleman to say that this may take two or three or more years to complete, and that is an argument in favor of the proposition I am trying to submit—that is to say, that if the sum of $213,000 is all which can be profitably expended during the coming fiscal year, if it be in contemplation to have another river and harbor bill next session of Congress, why not wait until that bill and make an appropriation then? Why differentiate this one improvement from other projects?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Well, I have answered and will answer again.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. If the gentleman from New York will yield to me, I desire to state that the gentleman from North Carolina is mistaken in his statement that the cash appropriation needed is only $213,000. As a matter of fact, the appropriation that was needed in cash was about $450,000; but it was thought to be advantageous to make the appropriation in cash $213,000, and the remainder desired to be appropriated—$450,000—in a continuing contract, saving the Government the expenditure of the larger amount of cash this year, this continuing-contract system being just as advantageous for the improvement.

Mr. SMALL. I desire the gentleman to answer this question: Will he give his authority, from the report of the engineers, that there can be profitably expended more than $213,000 for this fiscal year?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. There are five locks and dams to be constructed there, and I suppose every dollar of the whole appropriation might be profitably expended. The money is needed for the Cumberland and therefore is appropriated; that is all that need be known.

Mr. SMALL. That still does not answer my question. There are various projects in this bill recognized by appropriations where you have made only partial appropriations, sometimes one-fourth and sometimes one-fifth and sometimes less, of the amount which could be profitably expended during the next fiscal year.

Now, I say here if $213,000 of this is all that can be expended during the next fiscal year, why differentiate this from other projects?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. That is not the fact.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman allow me to reply to his question? This paragraph relates to the construction of several locks. You can not let contracts advantageously for the foundations of the locks alone. You must let the contracts for the whole work. And even though you can only expend $213,000 advantageously in one year, you must enter upon the construction under the continuing-contract system, if the work is to be done economically and advantageously. That is the reason why this item appears in the bill as it does.

Mr. SMALL. I move to strike out the last two words. I do not desire to be unduly insistent in this matter, but I am simply suggesting that perhaps inadvertently the committee may have been guilty of an inconsistency with regard to this particular project. I clearly understood the chairman of the committee, in presenting this bill, to say that it differed from prior bills in that, with a view to having annual appropriations hereafter, we were only appropriating upon each project such an amount as could be profitably expended during the ensuing fiscal year.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. On the contrary——

Mr. SMALL. Now, if $213,000 is not all that can be expended during the ensuing fiscal year, I should like to know that, because it will answer one feature of my inquiry.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Will the gentleman allow me to answer?

Mr. SMALL. But if that is all that can be expended, I have not had a sufficient reason, and I submit that the committee have not had a sufficient reason given them why this is put upon a continuing-contract basis.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman allow me to answer his question again?

Mr. SMALL. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman was a contractor, and the Government advertised for bids, and the gentleman offered a bid for the foundations of these locks, and he was obliged, when he secured his contract, to assemble all his machinery for the construction of the foundation alone, would he think it likely that he could do the work on the foundation alone on as advantageous terms as he could if he were to be awarded the contract for the construction of the whole of the lock?

Mr. SMALL. Then, if the gentleman will pardon me, do I understand him to make the statement that this is one of those works of improvement which ought to be let by contract as a whole and not by parts? If that is his statement, then one reason at least has been given why this should be put upon a continuing contract basis, and I should like to know if that is the case.

Mr. MADDEN. That is the case, and you can not do this work in any other way to the advantage of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. SMALL. I think that is an explanation.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I think the gentleman from North Carolina entirely misunderstood the statement of the chairman of the committee with reference to the policy adopted regarding annual bills. We have adopted the policy of an annual bill, but in the motion adopting it there was a stipulation that there was to be no abandonment of the continuing contract plan. There are certain projects upon which the work can not be done economically or advantageously for the Government unless a contract is authorized involving an expenditure covering several years; so that while we are to have annual bills, yet when needed from the standpoint of economy and efficiency there will still be continuing contracts authorized.

Mr. SMALL. And this is a project of that class?

Mr. LAWRENCE. That is correct.

Mr. SMALL. I understand the gentleman now.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. And I distinctly said so in my opening remarks, and paid a tribute to Senator FRYE, chairman of the Senate Committee on Commerce, who was the father of this system. It goes with any bill, and must go with any bill—annual, biennial, triennial, or for any number of years.

Mr. SMALL. The distinguished chairman of the committee is, as usual, very clear, and it was through no fault of his that I did not understand it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Obion and Forked Deer rivers, Tennessee: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $437.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 10, page 48, insert the following:

"For the continuing of the work heretofore begun of cleaning out and improving Caney Fork River, in Tennessee, $5,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment involves a project that has the misfortune to have been reported adversely by the local engineer. This report is in direct conflict with the reports made by former engineers. This project heretofore has received in different appropriations $28,000 in small amounts of three or four thousand dollars in each appropriation. The only exhaustive report made by an engineer was one in which he recommended an annual or semiannual work on the river of three or four thousand dollars, amounting in all to about $48,000, and that would give navigation about six months in the year.

Further improvement has been reported adversely by the local engineer in the last report, and he gives as a reason for that that the commerce will not justify it, setting forth in support of it that the reason for the former recommendation for the project was that they did not have railroad facilities, which they now have. Such a report is entirely without foundation in the facts in the case. The railroad facilities to which he alludes were in existence at the time the former reports were made. He speaks of a railroad which is a branch of the Nashville and Chattanooga Railroad, which runs along the Cumberland plateau up above Caney Fork Falls. It is impossible for the produce or products of that valley to be hauled up on the plateau; a six-horse team could not pull out a two-horse load. The same condition exists all the way along the banks of Caney Fork River. It is a rich and fertile valley and has very steep sides on each side of the river.

Now, this railroad transportation was there when the former reports were made and was as accessible then as now, and it is a mistaken fact to say that the commercial value will not justify it because they have access to a railroad. There is no reason why these people should not have the benefit of river transportation if they had railroad transportation, but this is true especially where the railroad is not accessible at all.

I think the report of the engineer discloses the fact that he examined this stream for only about 24 or 26 miles. That I think is fully inferable from his report.

This valley is about 80 miles long, and is as rich and productive as any land in Tennessee or any in the United States, and is without means of getting its produce to market except down the river. They could get it down at certain periods of the year with this small outlay.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe there is an expenditure of money at any place in the United States, upon any stream, that will bring so many returns according to the amount invested as would this small investment. We are very modest in what we ask for. It does not require very much because of the peculiar formation of the river. It is a very deep stream; it has long pools that are interrupted by shoals; and if we can move out a few bowlders and improve those shoals, they can bring the products down to market with this small outlay. It will bring better returns than money invested in the larger streams in proportion to the amount invested.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, this is in the class where the local engineer has made an adverse report, and where a survey has been given and another adverse report is made. This second adverse report is now pending before the board of review and is not before the committee for consideration nor before the House for its consideration. It is simply waiting its chance with the board of review. It has been reported adversely by the local engineer. The board may reverse the local engineer, and in that event it would properly be before Congress; but it is not so now. I hope the motion of the gentleman will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Tennessee River below Chattanooga, Tenn.; Alabama, and Kentucky: Continuing improvement at Hales Bar, Tennessee, $50,875; continuing improvement and for maintenance by open-channel work from Chattanooga, Tenn., to Riverton, Ala., $310,000, of which amount $15,000 may, if required, be expended in that section of the river between Hobbs Island and Guntersville; continuing improvement at Colbert and Bee Tree Shoals, $100,000; and continuing improvement and for maintenance below Riverton, Ala., $150,000; in all $610,875.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors when the report authorized during the last session of the Sixtieth Congress for a resurvey of the Tennessee River between Knoxville and Chattanooga will be submitted to the committee and for the consideration of Congress.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that I have no idea when that report will be submitted either to the committee or to the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Kentucky River, Kentucky: For completing construction of Lock and Dam No. 13, and beginning construction of Lock and Dam No. 14, $106,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such materials and work as may be necessary to prosecute the said project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $65,000, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated: Provided further, That of the amount herein appropriated the sum of $6,000 may be expended for the construction of a bridge across Tates Creek and the restoration of the county road near Otter Creek, both of which items of work have been rendered necessary by the construction of Locks and Dams Nos. 9 and 10, Kentucky River.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice in the proviso here in this paragraph that it appropriates $6,000 for the construction of a bridge across Tates Creek and the restoration of the county road near Otter Creek. The paragraph states that this construction is made necessary by the construction of certain locks and dams. Now, I wish to ask the chairman if it is usual where a canal is constructed, for instance, and that canal intersects a public road, for the United States to build and maintain a bridge across the same? I was not aware that such was the custom. A distinguished gentleman near me suggests that it might have been provided in this instance for the benefit of the moonshiners in the State of Kentucky in order to enable them to make better progress through that country. Of course that would not be considered as a reason by the committee.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to my friend from North Carolina that perhaps the gentleman who made that suggestion to him had better get up and make it on the floor himself. I would like to know who he is.

Mr. SMALL. Oh, the gentleman who made that suggestion to me is always very courageous and always speaks for himself. Seriously, I would like to know the reason for it.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I would say that in the construction of the lock it drowned out the county road, so that the Government was obligated to construct a bridge to overcome that obstruction. There are several precedents in past years.

Mr. SMALL. Where the United States constructs a waterway and thereby makes necessary a bridge, do I understand that it is incumbent upon the United States to construct and maintain the bridge? I understand that if this bridge is constructed by the United States it must be maintained for all time, so that a liability is created, represented not alone by the original construction, but continuing into the future.

Mr. LANGLEY. If the gentleman from New York will allow me, I think the gentleman from North Carolina is mistaken about the obligation of the Government to maintain these bridges after it builds them. It builds the bridge to restore the status quo, so to speak—to remedy the damage which has been done by the government works. At any rate, I think I can guarantee that the counties will be entirely willing to assume the maintenance of the bridges if the Government will pay the expense of building them.

I recall at least one precedent for the proposed action: A bill which I introduced in the last Congress was passed, which provided for the reimbursement of the expense which had been incurred by Clark County, Ky., in building a bridge under exactly similar circumstances. The backwater from one of the dams on this same river had destroyed a ford across a creek, which resulted in great inconvenience to the community. The county did not see fit to wait until the Government would construct the bridge, and had it built at the county's expense. My bill to reimburse the county was approved by the army engineers, and it was passed and became a law practically without opposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMALL. I ask unanimous consent to continue for two minutes longer.

There was no objection.

Mr. SMALL. I will ask the gentleman if the instance which he gives was not a case of the destruction of a bridge which Congress was asked to replace, and not an original construction where there had been no bridge before?

Mr. LANGLEY. No; I do not think it was. But even if it was, the principle involved is precisely the same, because in either case the necessity for the bridge arises as a result of the public improvement, which, while it is a great benefit to the people of the valley as a whole, has resulted in inconvenience and damage to that particular community, and I think the obligation of the Government, under the circumstances, to remedy this, is perfectly clear.

While I am earnestly in favor of these river improvements, because of the great public good to be derived from them, I am just as earnestly in favor of protecting the interests of the few who are injured rather than benefited by them, or, rather, who are injured more than they are benefited.

I may add that neither of these proposed bridges is in my congressional district; but the building of them by the Government was recommended by the engineers, and I felt it my duty to call the attention of the committee to that recommendation, which I did, and as a result of which this proposed appropriation appears in the bill.

There are several similar places along this river where bridges should be built and which I hope to get done in due time. I recall one instance now where, as a result of the destruction of a ford across Millers Creek, in my district, the people have to travel a distance of about 5 miles farther than they did before the dam was built, in order to cross this stream. It seriously interferes with travel and traffic back and forth across the country. It is particularly inconvenient to live-stock dealers.

I would have asked the committee to include a provision for this bridge, and would offer such an amendment now, but for the fact that the engineers have not yet recommended it, and I could not, of course, expect to get such a proposition adopted without that recommendation. I hope to be able to get the recommendation in time for the provision to be inserted in the Senate.

Mr. SMALL. It seems to me we are creating a dangerous precedent.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I may say that Congress made a direct precedent in reference to a matter of this sort a few years ago when a bill was reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Congress made an appropriation for the building of a bridge, for the benefit of the city of Moline, I think it was, in the State of Illinois, where the Government had constructed or enlarged a canal, or the Rock River, so as to shut off the road. In that case there was an express appropriation made not in the river and harbor bill under an authorization for the construction by the Government of a bridge, on the ground that the Government's work had made it necessary.

Mr. SMALL. I was not aware of that precedent. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Ashtabula, Ohio: For maintenance and continuing improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 654, Sixty-first Congress, second session, $115,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such materials and work as may be necessary to prosecute the said project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $376,430, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the chairman to this paragraph, where there is a continuing contract, and to ask the specific reason for having a continuing contract in this instance.

Mr. LAWRENCE. In the absence of the chairman of the committee I will state that this is the case for the construction of a breakwater and the work can not well be divided, although the money may not be expended during the ensuing year. It is very advisible, under the circumstances, that the entire amount should be provided for any contract which should be completed. It is work like a lock or dam, where it can not be divided, but should be contracted for in one sum.

Mr. SMALL. That is the specific reason in this instance why it was placed under a continuing contract?

Mr. LAWRENCE. That is the reason.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Ohio River: Continuing improvement with a view to securing a navigable depth of 9 feet, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 492, Sixtieth Congress, first session, or such modification thereof as in the discretion of the Secretary of War may be advisable, and with a view to the completion of such improvement within a period of twelve years, $1,000,000, which amount shall be applied to the purchase of sites for 18 Locks and Dams Nos. 9, 10, 12, 14, 15, 16, 17, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 27, 28, 29, 41, and 48, and toward the construction of Locks and Dams Nos. 7, 9, 10, 12, 19, 20, 29, 41, and 48: Provided, That so much of the sum herein appropriated as shall be necessary may be applied toward the definite location and purchase of sites for additional locks and dams on said river: Provided further, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such materials and work as may be necessary to prosecute the said project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $2,500,000, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated.

Mr. COX of Idiana. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire of some member of the committee whether or not the report prepared by the board a year or so ago was adopted in full?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes; I will say to the gentleman from Indiana, it does.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Now, this paragraph——

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, I do not think the chairman got the full import of the inquiry of the gentleman from Indiana. While I understand the report has been adopted so far as relates to the river down to and including Dam 48, there is nothing that adopts it as to the improvement of the river below Henderson, whether by dams, as recommended by the report, or by dredging.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I do not exactly understand what the gentleman from Indiana asked.

Mr. COX of Indiana. The question I propounded is this: Whether or not the bill as presented here adopts the report made by the board in its entirety a year or two ago.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. It adopts the report of the board, but the bill does not in every particular conform to the report in regard to the order in which the dams should be built, and so forth.

Mr. COX of Indiana. As I recollect the reading of the report, it provides for a depth of 9 feet of water.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Now, does this bill adopt that recommendation?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Exactly.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Does this bill further adopt the recommendations made by the board for the purchase and building of all the locks and dams which were recommended by the board?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. It does.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Now, I will call the gentleman's attention to this section of the paragraph just read:

Sixtieth Congress, first session, or such modification thereof as, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, may be advisable.

Now, what discretion is lodged in the Secretary of War, if any, that would militate against the report made by the board a year or two ago?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. That is in regard to the details of the present survey. In other words, the Secretary of War is not absolutely bound up by the report in all of its details. It may be necessary to build slightly different from that report, as developed in the canalization of this river. That is what those words mean.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Then there is no intention in this bill to give the Secretary of War power, in a measure, to destroy the report as made by the board a year or two ago?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Not in the slightest, but simply we do not want to pin down the hands of the engineer in the work.

Mr. COX of Indiana. And it gives him some slight latitude.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. To carry out the line of the inquiry of the gentleman from Indiana, is it not also true there is nothing in this bill that ties Congress to that part of the report looking to the obtaining of the 9-foot stage from Henderson to Cairo by means of dams? Is not that left an open matter?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. No. The project adopted is to be by locks and dams.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, unquestionably the last project adopted on the river is Dam 48, which is just below Henderson. Now, from Dam 48 to Cairo, according to the report, are several dams——

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Five.

Mr. SHERLEY. And as I understand it it is a matter yet to be determined whether that stretch of the river should be maintained at the 9-foot stage by dredging or whether those three dams will be erected.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. The gentlemen, I think, misunderstands from a remark that was made by General Marshall a few days ago, that until those dams were constructed he might be able to get sufficient depth of water by dredging, but he had no idea of not building the dams eventually.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am very glad to hear the gentleman's statement, because I believe the dam project should be carried clear to Cairo.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. That was the information of the engineers. It was only to relieve the congestion pending the building of the other dams.

Mr. DIXON of Indiana. The proviso beginning in line 23 says:

Provided, That so much of the sum herein appropriated as shall be necessary may be applied toward a definite location and purchase of sites for additional locks and dams on said river—

Is this appropriation large enough to purchase the remaining sites?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes; a great many times over. But in order that there might be money enough, it was put in in that way.

Mr. DIXON of Indiana. Then it is expected from this appropriation that the sites for the remaining locks and dams not specifically named will be purchased?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. That is right.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, just a word. I desire to compliment the committee for the adoption of this report.

Mr. Chairman, I can not refrain from complimenting the Rivers and Harbors Committee for the work which it has done in the way of improving the Ohio River. The language carried in the bill relating to the Ohio River is as follows:

Improvement Ohio River: Continuing improvement with a view of securing a navigable depth of 9 feet, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 942, Sixtieth Congress, first session, or such modification thereof as in the discretion of the Secretary of War may be advisable, and with a view to the completion of such improvement within a period of twelve years, $1,000,000, which amount shall be applied to the purchase of sites for 18 locks and dams, Nos. 9, 10, 12, 14, 15, 16, 17, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 27, 28, 29, 41, and 48, and for the construction of Locks and Dams Nos 7, 9, 10, 12, 19, 20, 29, 41, and 48; providing that so much of the sum herein appropriated as shall be necessary may be applied toward the definite location and purchase of sites for additional locks and dams on said river: Provided further, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such materials and work as may be necessary to constitute the said project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $2,500,000, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated.

In addition to the above item, the bill carries another item of $575,000 for continuing and completion of projects already begun.

The language in the bill adopts the 9-foot stage of water exactly as recommended by the Board of Army Engineers two years ago, and it specifically provides for the purchase of 18 new dam sites. This, together with the proviso in the following language—

Provided, That so much of the sum herein appropriated as shall be necessary may be applied toward the definite location and purchase of sites for additional locks and dams on said river—

forever adopts and approves the report as made by the Board of Army Engineers, and the bill in its present shape, as reported and passed by the House, provides for the completion of dams already in progress and for the purchase of sites at every place where dams were recommended by the Board of Army Engineers, contained in their report, Document No. 492, first session of the Sixtieth Congress.

This report provides for the building of 54 dams for the improvement of the Ohio River from Pittsburg to Cairo. The board of engineers having charge of this work estimates that it can not complete the work in less than twelve years, and, Mr. Chairman, taking into consideration not only the immense amount of work to be done in the improvement of the Ohio River, but elsewhere, in the improvement of rivers, this is as short a time as the work can be completed.

It is useless for me to argue the unquestioned benefits which this improvement will bring, not only to the present but future posterity. We have in the Ohio River Valley a country surpassing in richness the world-famed valley of the Nile. Beginning far up in the State of Pennsylvania, the Ohio River pursues its devious course for more than 1,000 miles, until it reaches the Mississippi River, "the father of American waters." On its northern shores border the great States of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, and on the south Kentucky. These States alone represent a population of approximately 20,000,000 people, with industry as varied as the universe itself.

Mr. Chairman, we have in this country to-day approximately 90,000,000 of people, and by the time our children arrive at mature manhood and womanhood we will have a population of three times this number, and I believe it to be our duty, not only as citizens, but as legislators, to provide for their comfort and welfare, and in so doing we will be building up in the Ohio River Valley the greatest empire of the world. Bordering along the Ohio River and in close proximity thereto is found all the natural resources which go to make a country great and strong. When the Ohio River is completely canalized by building and constructing dams, as provided for in this bill, there will spring up as if touched by the hand of magic all along its course flourishing towns and cities furnishing employment of labor to the countless millions of people who will seek the Ohio River Valley as a home in which to live. From Pennsylvania and West Virginia iron ore will come down the Ohio River, and along by its side, not only from these two States but from the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Kentucky, will come millions of tons of coal to heat the furnaces which will manufacture iron ore into iron and steel, the great basic principles of American industry. The race to-day to capture the world's commerce is indeed a fierce one, and with the completion of the Panama Canal in a few years a new era of development will begin. East of us lies the Orient—China as yet an undeveloped nation, with her 400,000,000 of people to be clothed and fed; Japan, beginning to awake to the energies of civilization, likewise furnishes a great field for American commodities and American enterprise—and with the completion of the improvement of the Ohio River and the construction and completion of the Panama Canal an impetus will begin here in the Ohio River Valley to capture these great world marts of trade in the East.

Mr. Chairman, the business man is readily confronted with two propositions; first, the freight rates entering into the transportation of his commodities; second, time; and with an undoubted confidence in the ingenuity of the business man living in the Ohio River Valley, if he be put upon a par with his foreign competitors, upon both of these propositions, I have no doubt of his ability to meet and compete in foreign fields for the world's commerce.

Mr. Chairman, benefits will accrue, not alone to the business man, but to the laboring man, the merchant, the farmer, all will unquestionably reap and receive renowned benefits when this work is finally completed. Congress has for years sought to control and regulate railway traffic in this country, but, in my judgment, without very much success; but the improvement of the Ohio River so as to maintain a 9-foot stage of water the year round will alone control freight rates in the Ohio River Valley, and will put American business men upon an equality so far as freight rates and time are concerned.

Mr. Chairman, the fight has been long and strenuous, asking that the improvement of the Ohio River as a project be taken up and completed as a whole, and I can not refrain at this time from complimenting the Rivers and Harbors Committee on adopting the report long since made by the Board of Engineers, and saying to them they have done a great work, not only for the present but for the future.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, in lines 12 and 13, by striking out these words:

Or such modification thereof as, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, may be advisable.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina offers an amendment which the Clerk will report:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 53, lines 12 and 13, strike out the following words:
"Or such modification thereof as, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, may be advisable."

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, if I understand the policy of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and of Congress, it is this—that no appropriation has been made for an improvement against an adverse report of the engineers or without first having an investigation and a favorable report by the engineers. Now, this paragraph, after having included these words:

Continuing improvement with a view to securing a navigable depth of 9 feet, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 492, Sixtieth Congress, first session—proceeds to give the Secretary the power to modify and change that report and to expend this money under a changed report without first having been submitted to and approved and authorized by Congress. There may be precedents for such a deviation as this, but I am not aware of any. I think where an appropriation is made in accordance with the report of the engineers, that to authorize the Secretary of War to expend that money in any other manner except in accordance with that report, which has been examined and approved by the committees of Congress and by Congress itself, is a dangerous precedent which will rise to plague us in the future.

Now, I am in favor of this appropriation for the improvement of the Ohio River and of the Mississippi and its tributaries. The Ohio carries more commerce, there is more prospective commerce upon the Ohio River, and it seems to be the consensus of sentiment among those who have examined the reports and are familiar with the stream that this improvement recommended by the engineers ought to be carried out. But the point is this, that when an appropriation is made to be expended in accordance with the report, that discretion ought not to be invested in the Secretary of War to spend that money otherwise than is recommended in the report which has been adopted. Therefore, upon that, I base my motion to strike out these words, so that the appropriation shall be expended under the investigation and the report which has been made by the Chief of Engineers, and which presumably has had the approval of the committee, and if any other surveys were necessary, then this project should have been put upon the same basis as other improvements, that it should have been rereferred for another investigation and another report.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SMALL. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. With this provision would it be possible to proceed on a project looking to having 12-feet depth without further authorization by Congress?

Mr. SMALL. I do not see why not under this language, "under such modification thereof as the Secretary may deem advisable." That is broad in its scope, and he may make any modification he chooses.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion? The words which he wishes to strike out are very common words in our bill. There is one on page 2 that we have already passed—in line 20:

Improving Saco River, Maine: Continuing improvement in accordance with the existing project or such modification thereof as the Secretary in his discretion may approve.

It does not go to the project at all. It simply goes to engineering details. The project is adopted. Neither would these engineering details be changed without the approval of board of review and the Chief of Engineers. Here is another case in the bill of 1907:

Improving Manistique Harbor, Michigan: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $25,000, to be expended by the Secretary of War, on the same project, or any modification thereof.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is it the understanding of the chairman of the committee that this language authorizes the modification of a project so as to give a greater depth than that authorized?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Certainly not.

Mr. SMALL. May I ask the gentleman if this language is not susceptible of such a construction as would permit a material change in the project?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. No; because it was never so construed.

Mr. SMALL. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, perhaps the language just read as to the improvement of the Ohio River marks as great a departure from the past attitude of the Government as to internal improvements and indicates as clearly its future attitude as any other provision in the bill. The one noticeable thing in the language relative to the Ohio River is that for the first time that language relates to the whole of the Ohio River. Not only does it adopt the project as a whole, but, in making the appropriation of $1,000,000 and authorizing the expenditure of $2,500,000, that appropriation and authorization is made in language so that it can be applicable to the whole river, and enables the engineers, according to the physical condition of the work at many or a few points, to expend the money to the best advantage instead of having money lying idle at some place while there is a lack of funds at some other place. Here is an appropriation of $1,000,000, which may be expended at any one of several points, and contracts may be entered into for $2,500,000 that may be expended at any of the places enumerated. The effect of this is to commit the Government to the project as a whole—to commit it to completion in a definite time, and, therefore, to a definite, regular rate of progress of the work. In order to do that, it was necessary that this money should be at the command of the engineers to be used at one or another place as they deem most necessary.

If there has been one thing more than another that has subjected Congress to criticism in the past, it has been the spasmodic and sporadic appropriation of moneys for partial river and harbor improvements, rather than the completion of any one project. If there be a project now before the American people that from reports of the engineers and those having knowledge both of the technical and commercial factors involved will warrant the expenditure of a large sum of money, it is the project looking to the improvement of the Ohio River, and it is therefore proper that the departure from the old method of doing business, one that looks forward to the rapid completion of any improvements that are undertaken, should be evidenced by these items relative to the Ohio River. There is no man living upon that river but must feel that this committee has dealt with the utmost fairness and liberality with the plan that lies so close to the hearts of all of us. The same rate of appropriation now provided in this bill would not complete the river within twelve years, as it will take $60,000,000 for the whole project, and the bill carries an appropriation of only $4,175,000. But we realize, as anyone familiar with the proposed work must, that during the first year some preliminary work is necessary before much money can be expended. There has been authorized in this bill all that the committee should properly have authorized, and I for one desire to express my great gratification and thanks to the committee for its treatment of this national project. [Loud applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Rouge River, Michigan: For maintenance, $20,000: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended until the channel banks within the limits of the project shall have been properly docked by the riparian interests.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 57, strike out all of lines 18, 19, and 20, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "shall be expended at those points within the limits of the project where shoaling is due to caving banks until the banks shall have been protected by suitable docks or revetments constructed at the expense of the riparian interests."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 56, line 8, for the purpose of offering an amendment to perfect the provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to return to page 56 for the purpose of making a correction. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to insert the words "Manistee County" after the word "Lake," in line 8. This is done because there is another Portage Lake which is a part of a waterway in Michigan.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 56, in line 8, insert the words "Manistee County" after the word "Lake."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Indiana Harbor, Indiana: For improvement and maintenance in accordance with the project recommended in House Document No. 1113, Sixtieth Congress, second session, $62,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended until the Secretary of War shall be satisfied that the conditions specified in said project have been fully complied with.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of suggesting an amendment to the proviso. The change I suggest is in the word "project," in line 5. I think that ought to be "document" instead, so that it will read:

Until the Secretary of War shall be satisfied that the conditions specified in said document have been fully complied with.

That is Document No. 1113, referred to above.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. There is no objection to that.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Then I move that the word "project," in line 5, page 61, be stricken out and the word "document" inserted in its place.

Page 61, line 5, strike out "project" and insert "document."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JAMES. I want to ask the chairman of the committee relative to the appropriation for the Ohio River. I understand some question was raised a few moments ago relative to whether or not this appropriation authorizes a definite location and purchase of sites for locks and dams below 48, at Henderson, Ky., on down to the mouth of the river at Cairo, Ill?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. It does.

Mr. JAMES. I have no doubt of it myself, but I wanted it made clear. I am glad the bill clearly provides for location of sites and purchase of same from Henderson, Ky., to Cairo, Ill. It will give us a 9-foot channel the year around, and will revive the traffic which made this historic river famous in the years of long ago.

The Clerk read as follows:

And provided further, That the said commission be, and is hereby, authorized to design and construct two experimental towboats of modern but different types, with a complement of suitable barges and necessary loading and unloading facilities for towing and delivering supplies along the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and in making designs for such boats the said commission shall investigate and consider types of boats in use for similar purposes on nontidal rivers in this and other countries, and for the purposes of such investigation, designs, and construction there is hereby appropriated the additional sum of $500,000.

Mr. SMALL. I wish to ask a question with reference to the second proviso in this paragraph, which provides that this Mississippi River Commission are authorized to design and construct experimental towboats with a complement of suitable barges and necessary loading and unloading facilities.

If that is for the purpose of conducting an experiment with a view to providing an illustration to those who desire to exploit the possibilities of commerce upon the Mississippi River, it seems to me that it is going a little beyond the proper scope of a river and harbor bill. Of course, if these towboats and barges are absolutely necessary in the work of improvement of the river, perhaps that would present another aspect of the question; but I do not understand that it can be necessary for the Mississippi River Commission to construct experimental towboats and barges for the purposes of the improvement of the Mississippi River. In what sense is the term "experimental" used? Is it experimental for the purpose of river and harbor work, or experimental for the purposes of ascertaining what is best suited for the carrying of commerce on the Mississippi?

And if the latter is the intention, it seems to me, it is beyond the purview of Congress, and particularly of this bill; and I think it ought to be stricken from the bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from North Carolina if he has read the committee's report, on page 13?

Mr. SMALL. I have not.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. It explains the matter fully, and I wish to read from it.

Mr. SMALL. The gentleman can make a brief statement.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I will read, because it answers in a word the gentleman's proposition.

It is believed that the appropriation of $500,000 to be expended in the purchase of plant for use in connection with the work of improvement of the river will also provide for experiments to be carried on by the Government which will result in improving the present type of river freight carriers, and also that these tests can be made in no other way, since the expenditures and uncertainties involved preclude the use of private capital for the purpose. As a result of the tests or experiments it is hoped that a large saving to the country at large may accrue from decreased costs of transportation, and that a type of carrier may be developed which will also reduce the cost of all bridges across navigable streams due to lessened requirements in the matter of head room.

This shows that it is for the purpose of increasing the plant. The first part of this paragraph in the report says:

The British Government has been designing shallow-draft boats for use on the Nile, and the German and Austrian Governments have been working along similar lines with reference to methods of transportation on the Rhine, the Danube, the Elbe, and other waterways. The boats designed have been very successful, having been used in connection with modern loading and unloading appliances. On our western rivers little change has been made in the design of towboats, barges, etc., since 1860, and it is believed that a design embodying the best points of modern vessels, with modern machinery and cargo-handling devices, might lead to a marked increase in the traffic on the nontidal rivers of the United States, especially after permanently improved channels are available.

These boats can be used in connection with the improvements going on in the Mississippi, the Ohio, and the Missouri, and at the same time experimental tests for securing the best modern type of boat known to the engineers at the present time can be made.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman from New York will yield to me, I want to ask the gentleman if it is proposed in the construction of the experimental boats to have them constructed so that they can be used on any part of the river?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. And not only in the deeper parts?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. No; on any part. It is especially desirable that they be constructed for a 6-foot depth.

Mr. SMALL. Now, Mr. Chairman, if I may be permitted to make this further comment: The distinguished gentleman, chairman of the committee, has, of course, been entirely candid, and in the statement from the report which he has read it is perfectly apparent that this expenditure of $500,000 for the construction of experimental towboats and barges is intended to furnish a type of towboat and barge most suitable for carrying commerce upon the Mississippi River, and as an illustration for other sections of the country of what is a suitable towboat and barge for other nontidal rivers.

Conceding the importance of having a type of towboat and barge most suitable for the development of commerce in the upper reaches of our interior rivers, I do not think that it is within the province of Congress to authorize the Corps of Engineers, under the direction of the Secretary of War, under whom all appropriations are expended, to enter upon the construction of experimental towboats and barges, nor to furnish the most suitable type for inland commerce of the United States.

But, while admitting the importance of obtaining such a type of towboat and barge, I submit to the committee that it is dangerous legislation. I have no hope of convincing the committee. Perhaps the majority of the committee think otherwise about this matter, but I do submit that as important as the development of commerce on the Mississippi River and its tributaries may be, an object which should command the approval of every citizen, no matter where he may reside, whether upon the Atlantic or the Pacific, yet I submit at the same time that Congress, neither in a river or harbor bill, nor in any other legislation, ought to appropriate money for the construction of any type of boat or for any other appliance or material for use in private enterprise or for the more successful prosecution or promotion of that enterprise.

While it may be necessary for the promotion of commerce on the Mississippi River and its tributaries to have a better type of towboat or barge, yet it is not within the province of Congress to furnish them, but it ought to depend upon the public spirit and enterprise which exists in such a large degree in the Mississippi Valley to furnish for the increase and promotion of this commerce such a type of towboat and barge as shall best promote the commerce which they hope to build up. I do think that this proviso ought to be stricken from the bill.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, when this bill was before the House in 1907 it carried an item of $3,000,000 for the lower Mississippi River, which was $1,000,000 more than the appropriation for that purpose usually carried. In discussing that paragraph then I said, among other things:

"There is an increase carried in the paragraph for the lower Mississippi for the ensuing year, the amount, as you will observe, being $3,000,000 instead of $2,000,000, which is usually provided. While the wording of the paragraph is identical with that heretofore employed, it is the intention of the Mississippi River Commission to spend this extra million in the further prosecuton of bank revetment.

"The policy of revetting the banks, primarily to prevent levee lines from caving into the river, has not been favored by the commission. This policy, in fact, was definitely rejected a number of years ago, and a resolution to that effect was formally adopted by the commission. Time and experience, however, have convinced the engineers that a hard-and-fast rule could not be adhered to, and there has been of late some relaxation. It is not the intention of the commission now to embark upon the general policy of revetting the banks of the entire Mississippi, nor is it the desire or expectation of this committee that this appropriation be expended to that end. There is, however, a middle ground to which events have forced the advocates of both extremes, and this extra million will be expended in furtherance of this resultant plan.

"The Government has spent a good deal of money in the building of levees on the lower Mississippi. We have proceeded upon the thought that the riparian owners of the overflowed lands, which were thus protected from devastating floods, would contribute in fair proportion to the expense of the work. This has been done in the particular district which I represent. We have, under state law, organized taxing districts for the purpose, and in the past twenty-five years we have paid into our levee boards more than $15,000,000. During the same period the Government has expended less than $10,000,000 along the same reach of the river. Of course when we began the building of levees after the series of destructive floods of 1882, 1883, and 1884 we did not realize the tremendous proportions of the system we were to undertake. If we had known then what the ultimate grade and section would have to be, perhaps there would have been more shrinking from the task which has since proven herculean indeed. To get an idea of our situation, let me relate an incident: In the lower Yazoo district, which has a frontage along the river of 189 miles, after paying the most burdensome taxes for thirteen years, and each high water demonstrating that the levees must be built still higher, we cast up accounts immediately after the flood of 1897, and ascertained then that we had approximately 20,000,000 yards of dirt in the levee line. It was painfully apparent, however, that we were not out of the woods, and as the levees grew higher the cost of dumping a yard of dirt on top of them likewise grew higher. When that flood subsided we went at it again, and in the next six years we put another 20,000,000 yards of dirt on them. In other words, we did in the next six years as much as we had done in the previous thirteen. Then the flood of 1903 came—in many respects the biggest of them all—and when it had come and gone with its lessons our engineer made another report in which he announced that it could be fairly accurately told then what the ultimate grade and section would have to be, and that estimate was that still another 20,000,000 yards would be required. That was an appalling announcement, Mr. Chairman, and one that would have broken the spirit of a people less determined. More than 60 per cent of all our taxes had gone into those levees for twenty years, and still the end seemed no nearer than before. There was no high-sounding motto of Nulla Vestigia Retrorsum on our arms for the very practical and prosy reason that ours was a battle of shovels, not shields. But the situation was there, full of ominous meaning, and we knew our only pathway lay in front of us. The legislature authorized us to issue a million more bonds, which we did at once.

"As I have said before, Mr. Chairman, we have proceeded upon the theory of contributions by local interests in the building of our levees, and this particular district has certainly kept the faith. We have contributed more, in fact, than our just share. Few people had ever taxed themselves as we had for the conquests of peace, and we had found that her victories were not only no less renowned than war's, but were also hardly less costly.

"At this juncture, Mr. Chairman, it developed that the Mississippi River, pursuant to its own sweet and fickle will, had begun to cave its banks to such an extent that the levee at Longwood was about to go into the river. This was one of the largest sections in the entire line of the system, and if it were lost, a new line would have to be built at a cost, including rights of way, of $750,000. As I remarked a moment ago, in the matter of local participation we had done our part. We had kept the faith; we had fought the good fight; but, Mr. Chairman, we had also, as regards our ability to raise money, finished the course. There was but one alternative, and that was to induce the Mississippi River Commission to revet the banks and stop the caving. And this was contrary to their declared purpose and in violation of their expressed opinion as to the proper treatment of the river. Our engineers went before them, however, and pitted our condition against their theory, and being wise men, the commission subjected their theory to the force of this ponderous fact and made the allotment, and the levee was saved.

"Mr. SHACKLEFORD. What did it cost the Government to put in this revetment work you speak of to save the Longwood levee?

"Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. It cost a little more than $150,000.

"Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Has there ever been any estimate by the engineers of the cost of revetting the banks on a large scale, so as to preserve the regimen of the river and also to protect your levee lines?

"Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. There have been numerous estimates. Mr. Nolty, who is an engineer of considerable learning and experience, has estimated that the cost of revetment, including cost of plant, administration, and engineering charges—in fact, everything—will be $200,000 a mile. He says, also, that there are 500 miles of caving bank between Cairo and the mouth of Red River. In other words, that it would cost $100,000,000 to revet all the caving banks along that reach of the river, which is about the only part of the river where there is any considerable caving. It is the opinion of our engineers, however, that it would not be necessary to revet more than one-half of the caving banks; in other words, not more than 250 miles. And it is also their opinion, and in this Mr. Nolty concurs, that if the work were done on a large scale—that is, if the Government should go at it in a businesslike way—the cost per mile could be cut almost, if not quite, in half, so that the revetment, instead of costing $100,000,000, would probably cost not more than $25,000,000.

"Of course, the protection of levees is not the only—in fact, is not the principal—object in view in doing this revetment work. It is very necessary, in the first place, to prevent the bends from being cut off. I think all the engineers are agreed on this, because you can readily see what disastrous consequences would follow in the wake of a cut-off where the bend, let us suppose, is 15 miles around and only 1 mile across. The fall in the river is about 6 inches to the mile, and when the cut-off is made we would therefore have a fall of 7½ feet in 1 mile. This would upset existing conditions for 40 or 50 miles above and below the cut-off, and, in addition, experience has demonstrated that this shortening of the river would be only temporary. It would at once begin to eat into the opposite shore, and in a very few years it would restore the length lost by the cut-off. The amount of silt dumped into the river by reason of these caving banks is astounding. In an article written by Chief Engineer West, of the Mississippi Levee Board, he says that in his district alone, embracing only one side of the river for a distance of 189 miles,

"Sixty-seven square miles of land, most of which was highly improved, have been abandoned by the retirement of the levee line from caving banks since 1882, and but for the limited revetment that has been done this would have been considerably more.

"Assuming that an equal amount of caving occurs on both sides along this reach of the river, enough land is caved in in this 189 miles annually to fill the river to the level of its banks for a distance of 12 miles. While on this point I will read another passage from Mr. Nolty. He says:

"If the revetment work is systematically prosecuted, there will eventually be such a small amount of sediment carried out that the necessity of dredging in the pass and seaward extension of the jetties will be removed.

"But let me return, Mr. Chairman, to the Longwood levee. Since this allotment was made by the commission, they have made others for similar purposes. It is intended to relax still further the old rule, and this additional $1,000,000 which this paragraph carries will be expended in that way.

"In the annual report of C. H. West, chief engineer of this levee district, he makes this startling statement:

"Since 1882 there have been 172 miles of levee abandoned, or 91 per cent of the total length of the controlling line.

"During the three years since the high water of 1903 there have been 31.45 miles of levee abandoned, or nearly 17 per cent of the total length of the controlling line.

"As the levee grows in volume the loss per mill from caving banks becomes more and more serious, and if the same rate continues the time will soon come when the annual revenues will not be sufficient to build the new levees required to replace those that cave into the river.

"There is no more competent authority than this officer. No man understands the problem of this great river more thoroughly than he, and no man has brought to its study more patriotic zeal or more intelligent energy, and I quote his opinion therefore with some degree of assurance.

"I believe, Mr. Chairman, that this appropriation marks the beginning of the end of what at some times in the past has appeared to be an endless, if not a hopeless, fight.

"The upper Yazoo district has demonstrated beyond cavil the possibility of holding the Mississippi River within its channel in flood time. It has withstood all the floods of recent years, and if the Federal Government will see to it that the levee lines as they are to-day will not be permitted to cave into the river the problem there is solved. What is there accomplished is simply a demonstration of what can be done everywhere.

"We have proceeded thus far, Mr. Chairman, on the theory that there was a dual responsibility along the lower Mississippi. That it was as much the duty of the Federal Government to improve the navigation of its rivers by building levees which incidentally protect the property of the riparian owners as it was the duty of the riparian owners to build levees to protect their property which incidentally improve the navigation of the rivers. The burden, therefore, has been borne by both.

"Right here let me read again from Mr. West's report:

"But for the enormous loss of levee due to the extensive caving of the river banks the entire levee line would by now be as high and strong as it is estimated it will ever have to be to control the highest floods that may be expected.

"When we remember that this revetment work is permanent—engineers estimate that a mattress properly placed will last one hundred years—and that but for caving banks the levees would likewise be permanent, I say, when we recall these facts, I believe we can at last see the light breaking in the east, the light which I confidently believe will usher in the day wherein shall be seen the consummation of our hearts' desire, the subjection of the world's greatest and most unruly water course to the will and the purposes of man."

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Mississippi River from the mouth of the Missouri River to Minneapolis, Minn.: Continuing improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 341, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, for the purpose of ultimately securing and maintaining a depth of channel of 6 feet and with a view of completing said improvement within a period of twelve years, $500,000: Provided, That of this amount so much as may be necessary, not to exceed $75,000, may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be expended for the repair and maintenance of existing levees constructed by the United States and for dredging for the benefit of through navigation in harbors and at landing places, giving preference to localities in which the communities interested shall hereafter maintain such dredging without cost to the United States.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to inquire how it can be ascertained which "community shall hereafter maintain dredging without cost to the United States?" Is there any provision by which contracts or agreements shall be entered into with the communities, or how is it to be ascertained that the community will hereafter pay for this dredging?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Of course the agreement is always made in advance among the people themselves.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to get this information, and I am going to get it if I possibly can.

Mr. MANN. The engineers are the ones that determine it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is the agreement made with the communities before any money is expended, or what provision of law is there for such an agreement being made?

Mr. MADDEN. This is simply at the landing place, right up at the face of the dock, where the people who maintain the landing places and docks are obliged to keep a depth of water which is necessary for navigation, not only in the middle of the stream, but up at the dock where the ships land. The Government in its work maintains the channel, but it does not create the channel so as to enable the ships to land at the docks, and this provides that the community which has a dock where ships can land must create the depth of water necessary to enable the ships to land at the dock.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think the gentleman quite grasps my question. This gives discretion to the engineers to expend $75,000——

Mr. MANN. I may say to the gentleman that I do not wonder the gentleman has not noticed this provision, because in the city of New York, of course, the Government does all of the work; but there are a good many places in the country where the maintenance of the navigable channel is at the expense of the local community, properly, where the situation is entirely different.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is entirely mistaken about the situation at the city of New York. In this bill there is a provision appropriating $250,000 for the commencement of improvements to which the city of New York is required to contribute a very large sum. It is the Jamaica Bay improvement. There is also a provision for the removal of a ledge, I think, at the entrance of Navesink River, to which the States of New Jersey and New York must make certain contributions. But here is a provision that certain sums may be expended, and a preference given to localities in which the communities interested shall hereafter maintain such dredging without cost to the United States. I have asked how it is to be ascertained whether the community will after the dredging is done maintain it, or what authority there is for making such agreement, or how is it intended to cover that?

Mr. MANN. There is no agreement made. It depends upon the engineer. The city council may pass a resolution——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, the gentleman from Illinois has not illuminated this question any, and I wish he would give way to one of the gentlemen on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. MANN. I am trying to talk while they are getting prepared. [Laughter.] Of course this practically amounts to the fact that the Government is under no obligation to maintain the channel after it is constructed, and it is a very common thing, where the people say they will maintain the channel, for the Government to construct it and then assume no obligation to maintain it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I insist the gentleman thoroughly misunderstands the question. This is not for the dredging of the channel. It is for the dredging at the landing.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Will the gentleman allow me to answer the question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes .

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. The larger towns and cities on the Mississippi River have harbor lines, just as in New York or any other ocean harbor. They have harbor lines at St. Louis, Cincinnati, and so forth.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Government does not dredge within the harbor lines in the city of New York.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. And they do not here. Wherever a community is willing to dredge to wharves inside of the harbor lines, then this $75,000, or so much thereof as may be needed, may be expended by the Government in dredging up to the harbor lines of that particular place. We have just passed an amendment for Alexandria. The channel is to be made 24 feet deep. The harbor line is 300 or 400 feet from the wharves.

The Government proposes to dredge this channel up to within a certain distance of that harbor line, and those who own the docks along will dredge immediately in front of the wharves and in the slips. It is virtually the same on this river. The engineers may dredge to these harbor lines and the owners of the wharves do the balance.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Now, that may be what is intended, but that is not what this provision says, because it says distinctly that the dredging shall be at the landing places, which hereafter the community shall agree to maintain and dredge without cost to the United States. If I understand what this language purports to convey, it is that the Government, in the first instance, will dredge inside the harbor line and the landing places, provided that the community agrees hereafter to maintain the dredging.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. No; it is against the law to dredge inside harbor lines. I will read an item from the annual report of the army engineers in 1909:

For dredging at harbors and landing places under allotments amounting to $100,000 there has been expended to June 30, 1909, $78,000. Satisfactory work was done at Red Wing, La Crosse, Eagle Point, Cassville, Prairie du Chien, Moline, Quincy, and Hamburg.

This is a continuation of the same appropriation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is not within the harbor line.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. No; the Government never dredges within the harbor line.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the construction of a waterway from Lockport, Ill., by way of the Desplaines and Illinois rivers, to the mouth of said Illinois River, $1,000,000. The Secretary of War shall appoint a board of five members, to be composed of four engineer officers of the army and one civil engineer taken from civil life. The president of the board of five members authorized under act of March 2, 1907, to examine the Mississippi River below St. Louis and report to Congress on the project of a 14-foot channel, shall be president of the board herein provided for. The board shall, after full conference with the authorized agency of the State of Illinois, submit a report upon the extent to which the United States may properly cooperate with the State of Illinois in securing the construction of a navigable waterway from Lockport to the mouth of the Illinois River in conjunction with the development of water power by said State between Lockport and Utica, for which the people of the State of Illinois have authorized their general assembly to appropriate $20,000,000; the report shall state the extent and character of the cooperation recommended and the conditions considered necessary in connection therewith to fully protect the interests of the United States. Should the board consider cooperation to be advisable, the report herein called for shall include plans and estimates of cost of the work recommended to be done by the United States alone or in cooperation with the State of Illinois; and until these plans and estimates have been submitted and a project for the improvement adopted by Congress the appropriation of $1,000,000 herein made shall not be available for expenditure. The board also shall consider and report upon the improvement of the Mississippi between the mouth of the Illinois River and the mouth of the Ohio River by the construction of a dam at or near Jefferson Barracks and a dam at or near Commerce, and the development of water power incidentally created by such dams. In the performance of its duties the board may consider all reports heretofore made; and the force, plant, and records of the Mississippi River Commission and the several engineer districts between Chicago and Cairo shall be available for the use of the board. The members of the board herein authorized shall be entitled to compensation at the rate of $6,000 per annum, but the official salary of any officer appointed on said board from the Engineer Corps of the Army shall be deducted from the compensation provided for in this act. For salaries and expenses of said board, including all necessary clerical and other personal services, there is hereby appropriated the sum of $50,000. The reports herein called for shall be submitted to the Chief of Engineers not later than November 1, 1910, reviewed by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, and submitted to Congress not later than the first Monday in December, 1910.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 65 strike out all of lines 22, 23, and 24, and on page 66 all of line 24 from and after the word "Illinois" and all of lines 25 and 26, and on page 67 all of line 1.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to discuss this amendment for a few minutes, and I would like to ask unanimous consent to proceed for fifteen minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to proceed for fifteen minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Unless there is a disposition not to complete the bill to-night.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. There is no objection; go on.

[Mr. DAVIDSON addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to proceed for ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Chairman, in adopting this provision the House is doing a rather exceptional thing, but this is an exceptional case, and exceptional cases justify exceptional action. I am convinced that it is not only a right and a proper thing for Congress to do, but that it is a very sensible thing. It may result in a waterway constructed at very reasonable expense to the country, which will not only be a benefit to the people of the Middle West, but a most important factor in the commercial development of the whole country. [Applause.] We are all familiar with the earnest and aggressive fight that has been made for a 14-foot channel from the Lakes to the Gulf. That project has been adversely reported upon. The board which considered it have practically, as I understand it, recommended a channel 8 or 9 feet in depth from Chicago to the Gulf.

Now, what is the situation that confronts us? I take it that Congress would willingly authorize the construction of such a waterway. In view of the vast sums expended and to be expended in various parts of the country, and in view of the commercial importance and the wonderful possibilities of the region especially to be served, I do not see how Congress could withhold its approval. But the people of the State of Illinois want an opportunity to cooperate with the National Government in the construction of that waterway. They want not alone the benefits of navigation, but the great benefits which come from the creation of water power, a very worthy purpose, and one with which all those who believe in the great movement for the conservation of our natural resources must sympathize. The people of Illinois want that waterway and that water power so much that they have expressed a willingness to be taxed to the amount of $20,000,000. That being so, of course it is wise for Congress to appoint a board to investigate especially this question of cooperation between the State and the Nation. It will undoubtedly result in great saving to the United States Treasury, and that being so, Congress can well afford to encourage such cooperation by intimating that it is ready to make appropriations when a proper plan is submitted, and it is convinced that the waterway can be constructed at a reasonable cost. This appropriation is available only when a report is made by the board and formally adopted by Congress.

Let no one think that in adopting this provision Congress is suffering from a case of enlargement of the heart. It is clearly a case of the head dominating the heart. The appropriation is so hedged about by conditions that no harm can come to the United States Treasury, and yet it is very far from a gold brick. It is a deliberate intimation to the people of Illinois and of the Middle West that Congress means business, and that appropriations will be made when a proper plan is submitted to Congress, and that plan adopted by Congress. Did anybody ever hear of a case where Congress deliberately and formally adopted a project without making an appropriation? We are doing nothing reckless, but we are giving encouragement to a generous and public-spirited people who are entitled to that encouragement.

Mr. FASSETT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Yes.

Mr. FASSETT. Are we to commit ourselves to this project before the report has been received from the committee which has been appointed?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Congress does not commit itself to the project in any way.

Mr. FASSETT. Then, why put in the million dollars now?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Because I believe that in order to encourage cooperation, which will result undoubtedly in a great saving to the United States Treasury, we can well afford to do so. [Applause.]

Mr. FASSETT. Can one single dollar of this million dollars be used?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Not until the board makes a favorable report and Congress adopts the project.

Mr. FASSETT. Then why not wait?

Mr. LAWRENCE. So far as I am concerned——

Mr. FASSETT. Suppose this commission reports adversely?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Then, of course, the appropriation fails.

Mr. FASSETT. The $1,000,000 will encourage the report to be made favorably?

Mr. LAWRENCE. It will not; but I think it will encourage the people of the State of Illinois to cooperate in a very generous way in the construction of the proposed waterway.

Mr. FASSETT. Will not the appointment of the commission be encouragement enough? If not, the encouragement is in the $1,000,000 and not in the commission.

Mr. LAWRENCE. The fact that Congress shows a willingness to appropriate money when a plan is adopted which meets its approval will be the encouragement.

Mr. COX of Indiana. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Certainly.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Part of the provision is that the people of the State of Illinois are authorized in general assembly to appropriate $20,000,000. Now, has the general assembly of the State of Illinois made that appropriation?

Mr. LAWRENCE. I understand not.

Mr. COX of Indiana. What is the statement?

Mr. LAWRENCE. The people of Illinois have authorized, I understand, the general assembly to appropriate the money, but that money has not yet been voted.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Has the legislature of the State of Illinois convened since that authorization occurred?

Mr. LAWRENCE. It is in session now.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I understand the legislature is in session now. The senate has passed a bill, at the recommendation of the governor, to go ahead and spend their $20,000,000 on that work from Lockport to Utica. Under the act the people authorized an issue of bonds, and that bill has passed the senate and has now been passed up to the assembly.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I must decline to yield further. I want just one minute more and then I am going to close. It is sometimes intimated that those who live east of the Allegheny Mountains are apt to think that the country is bounded on the west by that mountain range. I do not admit the truth of the charge. I deny it. But if an eastern man is in any danger of getting into that frame of mind the best thing for him, I think, is service upon the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. That compels study of our geography and our resources, and sectionalism then disappears, as a matter of course. Now, I am from "the land of the sacred cod," but through my service on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors I have learned how close to the hearts of the people of Illinois and the Mississippi Valley this waterway is. I am willing to encourage them to the extent of this conditional appropriation, and I believe it to be a rational step toward making their hope a reality. [Applause.]

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the motion made by the gentleman from Wisconsin will not prevail. The gentleman says that we are doing something in this case which we have done in no other case. He compares the situation here with that upon the Delaware River and to that existing in many other streams and harbors of this country where the report of the engineers has been adverse——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. It is my opinion that the case here is an entirely different case from that which occurs in any of these places.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman will permit me to ask whether he knows that the report upon the Delaware River has been adverse?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Oh, I am not talking about the Delaware River, only as a matter of illustration. There has been no report there, to be absolutely correct; but I am not talking about the Delaware River, and I decline to discuss that case.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I understood the gentleman to say the report was adverse. Do I understand that to be the fact?

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Now, the situation here is this: The Ernst board, which is the first board which examined the proposition, was authorized to report upon a 14-foot channel from the Lakes to the Gulf. That was the question which was submitted to them. They were not asked to report to Congress whether or not they approved or disapproved of that project, but only to make an estimate of the cost, and in strict conformity with the law under which they acted they did make a report to Congress, giving an estimate of cost of constructing this canal, but making no recommendation as to whether it should be done or should not be done.

That portion of the canal which we are now considering, from Lockport to St. Louis, they estimated to cost $31,000,000. This report was submitted to the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, and they reported that it was inadvisable to pay the large sum of money required to build this waterway from Lockport to the Gulf. Then the next board, the Bixby board, so reported. In the report of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors there was a statement to the effect that, in their judgment, it would be wise to build a waterway 8 or 9 feet deep, if it could be done at a reasonable cost. The Bixby board went over the same matter and reported against the 14-foot channel, as that question was submitted to them.

But they again reported to the effect that in their judgment a waterway 8 or 9 feet deep would be justified. We have had two surveys. We have had two reports favoring an 8 or 9 foot waterway, but the actual question which was submitted to these boards was upon a 14-foot waterway to be constructed entirely at the expense of the United States.

We have now an entirely different proposition before us, one for a waterway to be constructed by the State of Illinois in cooperation with the United States, and this provision in the river and harbor bill before you to-day is that a board shall be appointed to which that question shall be submitted, namely, the construction of a waterway of such character as they shall deem advisable, and if they deem such construction wise, that then they shall say what portion of that expense should be paid by the State of Illinois and what portion should be paid by the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to continue for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Criticism has been made of the fact that this bill carries an appropriation. It does provide in terms that $1,000,000 is appropriated for this waterway. Then it provides for the appointment of the board, and then follows this language:

> Should the board consider cooperation to be advisable, the report herein called for shall include plans and estimates of the cost of work recommended to be done by the United States alone or in cooperation with the State of Illinois. And until these plans and estimates have been submitted and the project for the improvement adopted by Congress, the appropriation of a million dollars herein made shall not be available for expenditure.

Now, the gentleman from New York says if we can not expend this money until Congress convenes again and adopts this plan, why should we say anything about it? That is a fair question. It is placed there as an encouragement to the people of the State of Illinois, who during all these long and weary years have waited for something to be done about this waterway. The situation in Illinois is this: The people, by an amendment to the constitution, authorized the legislature to appropriate money for the building of this waterway—the sum of $20,000,000 of the $31,000,000 the waterway from Lockport to St. Louis is estimated to cost. That proposition is now pending before the legislature of Illinois.

A bill has passed the senate authorizing the appropriation of that money and providing the raising of it by the issuance of bonds. It is now pending in the house of representatives of that State. It is desired by the friends of this waterway that at this time, while that question is pending in the Illinois legislature, that there should be some expression of opinion from the Congress of the United States, not an expression of opinion which binds Congress to the adoption of a plan before they know what it is, but an expression of opinion that, in the judgment of Congress, it is wise to cooperate with the State of Illinois in the building of this waterway providing a plan can be adopted at a reasonable cost which will effectuate the result and the State of Illinois will contribute a fair amount to it. I hope, sirs, that this provision will remain in the bill. I believe it is wise. I believe it is not in contradiction of the general policy of this committee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Any action at this session of Congress is likely to have some influence on the assembly of the State of Illinois, is it not?

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. I hope it will have.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And if we pretend to make an appropriation that we do not make, are we not likely to lead the assembly of Illinois into believing that we have done something we really have not done?

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. My experience with the politicians of Illinois is that they are not easily misled.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Our experience is that the people are very easily fooled.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I had intended to discuss this provision, but it has been so fully covered by the gentlemen who have preceded me that I merely arise to say that I sincerely hope the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. DAVIDSON] will not be adopted.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I am asking entirely for information. I would favor and do favor cooperation with the State of Illinois and favor this waterway improvement. But this question has arisen in my mind since the gentleman from Wisconsin has offered his amendment: What is the use of our appropriating a million dollars when it can not be used in any way until a favorable report is made here by the board and favorable action taken by Congress? Why would not the same thing be accomplished by omitting the million dollars and adopting the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin? As I understand it, that does not say we are opposed to cooperation; and on that line I would like to have the gentleman or some other Member interested here explain what is the necessity of this million-dollar appropriation, because there are a great many of us who are in doubt on that proposition.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. In my opinion, the necessity for it, to be perfectly frank, is that which is contained in the expression "hope deferred maketh the heart sick." The people of the great Mississippi Valley, which has been aptly called the "breadbasket" of America, have had their hopes deferred until their hearts are sick. The people of that valley wish to have connection between the Gulf of Mexico and the Great Lakes; and the only possible way for them to secure that connection is through the Illinois and Des Plaines rivers, connecting the Mississippi River with Lake Michigan.

Mr. Chairman, this project stands on a very different plane from the Delaware River, the Atlantic interconstal canal, and other projects that have not been surveyed and brought before us. These latter are great projects, and I hope sincerely they will come before us with favorable reports within the next few months. I hope that when the next river and harbor bill is adopted next session we can make liberal provision for the Delaware River and for the interconstal canal from Boston to the Rio Grande. In reference to the project before us, we have a statement by the Ernst board that it is entirely feasible, from an engineering standpoint, at a cost of $31,000,000.

The Bixby board confirms that report, that it is feasible as an engineering problem, and the only question is, shall we adopt it from a commercial point of view? The 35-foot project on the Delaware River has not been reported on yet, neither has the Intercoastal Canal project. Consequently these matters stand upon a very different plane from this one.

In my judgment we should encourage the many millions in the Mississippi Valley who are interested in this project. We should especially encourage the close friends of the project and the people who were able to induce the President of the United States, the Speaker of this House, and over 100 Representatives and Senators to take the famous trip down the Mississippi River last year—the most enlightening trip in regard to waterway improvement that was ever taken by any band of men in this Republic. We should encourage them and give them hope and let them understand that Congress intends to construct a suitable waterway between the Lakes and the Gulf, if it can be done in a reasonable, business way, and with the cooperation of the people of Illinois. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am afraid the gentleman from Wisconsin attempted to impress upon the House the notion that the project contemplated by the paragraph to which he offers his amendment is to cost the people of the United States $158,000,000. The fact is that the engineers who made the survey over the territory embraced in this paragraph showed the total cost of the improvement for a 14-foot channel to be $23,500,000; and if perchance locks of 20 feet over the miter sill should be adopted, this board says that that would add $1,500,000 more, making $25,000,000. Now, the proposition is that the people of Illinois shall expend $20,000,000 of this $25,000,000.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him? You misunderstood me. My reference to $158,000,000 was the entire project from the Lakes to the Gulf.

Mr. MADDEN. Now, what I feared was that some person on the floor might have misunderstood the gentleman to mean that we of Illinois were asking the Government to expend on this project $158,000,000.

Let me make myself clear. The State, through its people, has voted authority to its general assembly to legislate upon the question of spending $20,000,000 in the stretch of the Des Plaines and Illinois rivers covered by this paragraph of the bill. If the Government of the United States should cooperate, how much money would it take out of the Government Treasury? That is the question. It could under no circumstances, even though you built the locks 20 feet deep over the miter sills, cost more than $5,000,000. It could under no circumstances, if the locks are built 24 feet over the miter sills, cost the Government of the United States over $6,500,000. And then if you go further and say that you want the Government of the United States to continue the improvement below Utica, through the Illinois River down to St. Louis, the only additional expenditure which would be required from the Treasury of the United States would be an additional $8,500,000, making a total expenditure out of the Federal Treasury of $15,000,000 at the utmost.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Will the gentleman state whence he gets those figures?

Mr. MADDEN. I get those figures from the reports of the engineers.

Mr. DAVIDSON. What engineers?

Mr. MADDEN. The government engineers. The government engineers say that the total cost of a 14-foot waterway from the end of the Sanitary District Canal to Grafton, and thence from Grafton to St. Louis by an additional canal, would be $31,000,000. The cost between the end of the Sanitary District Canal and Utica, according to the engineers' reports, for a 14-foot lock and 14-foot channel, would be $23,500,000. If, as I said before, we made these locks 20 feet, that would be a million and a half more; but I think I have made myself sufficiently clear, so that every Member of the House present here can distinctly understand that this project, under no conditions, commits the Government of the United States to an expenditure of more than $15,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask for an additional two or three minutes.

Several MEMBERS. Five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the time of the gentleman from Illinois be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. We did not request an appropriation under Document No. 252, which contains the report of this engineer board. Why? The project reported by this board contemplated the construction of nine locks and a number of dams, the number of which I do not know now; but it also contemplated the expenditure of all the money for the entire improvement out of the Government Treasury.

In 1907, when the river and harbor bill was up for consideration, I stood upon the floor of this House and introduced an amendment to the bill which provided for an appropriation of $31,000,000 and some odd thousands with which to construct this waterway from the end of the Sanitary District Canal to St. Louis. The distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], who was then chairman of this committee, said to me, "I am opposed to the appropriation of this $31,000,000, because I believe that the State of Illinois should not benefit from the creation of water power which is made possible by an expenditure of money from the Federal Treasury," and I regarded that as a reasonable objection to the amendment which I offered.

And in view of a further statement made by that distinguished gentleman to the effect that if the State of Illinois would contribute the money necessary to make the pools and create the water power, then he, as chairman of this great Committee on Rivers and Harbors, would feel committed to the proposition of federal cooperation; in view of that statement and of all the facts in the premises, we of Illinois voted to authorize the issue of $20,000,000 of bonds. We think now that we have fairly met the objection that was made by the then chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

We have met that objection. We come here with clean hands. We come here with no extraordinary demand or request. We ask for the appropriation of $1,000,000 and the creation of a commission. And why do we ask for an appropriation of $1,000,000? Because we believe we are fairly entitled to say to the people of Illinois that the Government of the United States is ready to cooperate with the people of that great Commonwealth in the development of any waterway which a report will prove to be feasible.

They say that it will lower the lake levels if we take the water for a waterway. Why, nobody can prevent the great city of Chicago and all the great cities of Illinois and the great cities of Missouri and of the other States of the Union which border on the Mississippi Valley from taking all the water from the reservoirs which have been placed at our disposal by God Almighty for sanitation. Sanitation is the first consideration before the American people, and what objection can there be, gentlemen of this House, to floating ships on a waterway that is created by the necessities of sanitation? We must have the water to dilute the sewage or our people must die of disease, and while we have this water why not float the ships? Why not create the water power? Why not conserve the natural resources? Why not do that which any sane business institution would do under like circumstances? We ask you to vote down the amendment offered by my friend, the distinguished member of the River and Harbor Committee from Wisconsin. [Applause.]

Mr. HOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the distinguished chairman of the committee a question. What effect will this proposition have on the lower lake levels if you draw from Lake Michigan sufficient water to supply a 9-foot channel?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. As I understand it, they are now taking about 4,200 feet per second, and that is all they have the right to take under the conditions prescribed by the Secretary of War. That would be, as I understand it, sufficient water for an 8 or 9 foot channel.

Mr. HOWLAND. So that it would not materially change the conditions. I would like to ask you, following that, what your answer would be if we were to take sufficient water from Lake Michigan for a 14-foot channel?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. If you take sufficient water for a 14-foot waterway, it would lower the lake level 7 inches, 6 inches down as far as Lake Erie.

Mr. MADDEN. I wish to say, in addition to what the chairman of the committee has said, that, although we have been taking the quantity of water from the Lakes which the chairman of the committee says has been taken since 1900, the level of Lake Michigan has been and is now from 5 to 7 inches higher than it was before we commenced to take the water.

Mr. FASSETT. The more water you take the higher the water is. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAVIDSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ALEXANDER of New York) there were 36 ayes and 51 noes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and one gentlemen present.

So the committee refused to rise.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate now close on this paragraph under consideration and all amendments.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me suggest that outside of one gentleman all of those who have spoken have spoken against the amendment. Certainly those who are in favor of the amendment should have some opportunity.

Mr. MANN. Those in favor of the amendment have had as much time as those opposed to it up to the present time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves that all debate close on this paragraph and amendments.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FITZGERALD) there were 71 ayes and 19 noes.

So the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DAVIDSON) there were 27 ayes and 67 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out lines 21 to 25, on page 67.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 67 strike out lines 21 to 25, both inclusive.

The language moved to be stricken out is as follows:

The reports herein called for shall be submitted to the Chief of Engineers not later than November 1, 1910, reviewed by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, and submitted to Congress not later than the first Monday in December, 1910.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Missouri River with a view to securing a permanent 6-foot channel between Kansas City and the mouth of the river, $1,000,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War shall appoint a board of three officers to further consider and report upon the most economical and desirable plan of securing such channel, in which report consideration shall be given to the subject of cooperation on the part of local interests in the work of said improvement: Provided further, That the report hereby authorized shall be submitted to Congress on or before the opening of its next regular session.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DALZELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 20686, the river and harbor appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

S. 1981. An act to amend section 1 of an act approved January 30, 1897, entitled "An act to prohibit the sale of intoxicating drinks to Indians, providing penalties therefor, and for other purposes"—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 14676. An act for the relief of the Pittsburg Brewing Company.

H. R. 15448. An act to authorize certain changes in the permanent system of highways plan, District of Columbia.

H. R. 18895. An act to authorize the Wilson and Glassport Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Monongahela River, between Wilson and Glassport boroughs, Allegheny County, Pa.

H. R. 12438. An act to amend sections 7 and 8 of the act of May 29, 1908, entitled "An act to authorize the sale and disposition of a portion of the surplus and unallotted lands in the Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Indian reservations, in the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, and making appropriation and provision to carry the same into effect.

H. R. 19399. An act to extend the time for the completion of bridge across the Mississippi River at St. Louis, Mo., by the St. Louis Electric Bridge Company.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to Mr. ASHBROOK for ten days on account of death in family.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

The Speaker laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States (H. Doc. No. 143), which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the twenty-sixth annual report of the United States Civil Service Commission for the year ended June 30, 1909.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 14, 1910.

WHITE-SLAVE TRAFFIC.

The Speaker laid before the House the bill (H. R. 15816) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," with Senate amendments thereto.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move to nonconcur in the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The Chair announced the following conferees on the part of the House:

Mr. HOWELL of New Jersey, Mr. BENNET of New York, and Mr. BURNETT.

ADJOURNMENT.

Then, on motion of Mr. ALEXANDER of New York (at 7 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 15, 1910.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

The Vice-President resumed the chair.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CLAIM OF JAMES O. TURNER.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a certified copy of the findings of fact filed by the court in the cause of James O. Turner, administrator of Christiana Turner, deceased, v. United States (S. Doc. No. 364), which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by W. J. Browning, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15816) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved February 20, 1907; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and had appointed Mr. HOWELL of New Jersey, Mr. BENNET of New York, and Mr. BURNETT managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 78) changing the title of the sealer of weights and measures of the District of Columbia to superintendent of weights, measures, and markets, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. BACON. I present a proposed amendment to the rules, which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee on Rules.

The proposed amendment was read and referred to the Committee on Rules, as follows:

Senate resolution 180.

Amendment proposed by Mr. BACON to paragraph 4 of Rule XIV, to be inserted at the conclusion of said paragraph:

"No bill or joint resolution shall be considered, nor shall a request for unanimous consent for its consideration be entertained, during the morning hour, until after the conclusion of the order of concurrent and other resolutions; and it shall be the duty of the Chair to enforce this rule without any point of order hereunder made by a Senator."

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15816) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved February 20, 1907, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment, that the request of the House for a conference be acceded to, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed Mr. DILLINGHAM, Mr. LODGE, and Mr. DAVIS the conferees on the part of the Senate.

PIPE LINES IN ARKANSAS.

Mr. OWEN. I wish to enter a motion to reconsider the votes by which the bill (S. 3544) to grant right of way over the public domain in the State of Arkansas for oil or gas pipe lines was ordered to a third reading and passed. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS] would like to be heard with regard to the bill a little later along.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

Mr. OWEN. I move that the House be requested to return the bill to the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

POSTAL SAVINGS DEPOSITORIES.

Mr. BURKETT. I ask that Senate bill 5876, the postal savings bill, be laid before the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 5876) to establish postal savings depositories for depositing savings at interest with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER], in one of his heroic and habitual defenses of the Constitution a day or two ago, criticised a speech of mine at the last session of Congress upon the postal savings bank. In fact, a little colloquy between the Senator and myself during the time of my address, which I am sure no one else who heard it took so seriously, seems to have laid heavily upon the Senator's mind during all these intervening months. I am sorry, indeed, if anything that I may have said has been justly the cause of so much anxiety to him. I realize always how solicitous he is about the Constitution, and it was perhaps unwise that I should have undertaken to have pointed a way whereby this Government is able to enact legislation, however just and wise and desirable that legislation may be. We all know the readiness and the facility with which the Senator comes to the defense of the Constitution alike in dangers fancied or real. The fathers themselves who made it were not prouder of their child than is the Senator to-day of what they did. They were not more devoted to it then than the Senator is now; they were not more sensitive for its preservation nor more apprehensive of its dangers than is the Senator from Maryland.

I would not undertake to speak to-day if this were to be a contest between our ability or our fervor as defenders of the Constitution. But, Mr. President, I feel that I owe it to myself at least to say that I am as devoted to the Constitution and to every principle that it enunciates as any Senator here, including the Senator from Maryland. It is quite possible that all who heard and will read the Senator's speech may not have heard and may not have read what I said, and for that reason I want to suggest that he based his conclusions upon a portion of my speech rather than upon the whole of it. As I listened to the Senator reading a few extracts from what I said, and then proceeding to condemn the entire proposition of postal savings banks, I thought, perhaps, that likewise in his exposition of the Constitution he had relied more upon a correct quotation of Tucker than a broad comprehension of the entire Constitution.

The Senator was facetious in replying to a remark that I made in answer to his interrogatory as to the constitutional authority of this legislation. It perhaps will not offend the Senator if I say that my answer then was quite as much to escape a prolonged controversy at the time as to enlighten the Senator. I admit that the words in cold type as he read them, and apart from the context and the settings, do convey a somewhat different impression than I think they did at the time I uttered them. As I had said at the time, I expected to treat the constitutional phase at a different part of my speech and did not want to go into the matter at length then to explain fully my meaning. However, if the Senator had read all of what I said at that time, he would have been more fair at least in selecting his text. He will find that nowhere have I based the constitutionality of this act upon the general-welfare clause alone. He will find that nowhere have I attempted to give that clause a larger or different authority than the Congress of the United States has repeatedly given it and that the Supreme Court has sustained. While my address was made without manuscript, and into it might very naturally have crept some statement that would not bear a closer analysis, nevertheless there is nothing in that speech that gives the "general-welfare" clause an unlimited meaning or even separates its application from the taxing power. What the Senator based his remarkable speech upon the other day, as I have said before, was but a hasty reply, an incomplete reply, and only a part of the reply at that to the question with which he sought to illuminate my address upon that occasion. I am not now and I was not then entirely oblivious of the contemporary criticism of text writers and the obiter dicta of court decisions upon this part of the Constitution which he retailed to us with the vigor of a newly discovered philosophy. I had no different thought then than now as to our constitutional authority to enact this legislation. It was my opinion then and it is my opinion now that these words "for the general welfare" do mean something in the Constitution. They have sustained the American Congress in its action in the past, and succeeding years have not lessened their significance.

I hope, however, that I am not insane enough to undertake to turn over an accepted construction of these words, quite as old as the words themselves, and never better defined than by John Quincy Adams almost a century ago at a time when he was being assaulted for defending the power and prerogative of the Nation by basing the whole tariff proposition upon the "general-welfare" clause. At that time there were men who fought the protective-tariff policy on constitutional grounds like the Senator from Maryland now fights postal savings banks. They trembled for the Constitution and demanded to know, as the Senator does now, "where the specific clause was that would sustain it." Adams and others replied that it was in the "general-welfare" clause. Madison ridiculed him for adding a new and unwarranted and unlimited power to the Constitution. But in his vigorous reply, the exact words of which I do not have at hand at the moment, Adams said that "common defense and general welfare" are the purposes for the authority to tax. They are declaratory of the purposes for which power of taxation was given to Congress.

The Senator from Maryland summoned all his unabridged vocabulary to mystify us and his mighty power of invective to dragoon us. But I am neither depressed with his words nor annihilated by his eloquence. As great a man as Madison scoffed at the "general-welfare" clause, and contended that it had no meaning. But a greater man was Hamilton, and he said that "general welfare included not only the enumerated powers of the Constitution, but whatever Congress may deem to be for the general welfare."

Madison was also a great linguist, and shifting somewhat from his earlier political associations, in that great letter debate with John Quincy Adams upon the tariff during the Twelfth Congress, to which I have referred, denounced the words "for the common defense and general welfare" as "harmless words."

But John Quincy Adams, the old political philosopher of the early part of the last century, who had drunk deep the draughts of wisdom and experience in many lands, replied in the National Intelligencer that it was as much the duty of Congress to provide for the "common defense" and "general welfare," and that it was as imperative a duty as that of paying the debts of the Union. He declared that Congress could not discharge themselves from that great and paramount duty to the people by declaring that they were "harmless words."

Adams never contended that the words added any substantive and indefinite power, but that they imposed a duty upon Congress to tax for the general welfare. Nowhere, sir, have I extended the interpretation of Adams.

"For the common defense and general welfare" may have no place in the lively imagination of the Senator from Maryland, but, Mr. President, however much he may depreciate the opinion, those words have been resurrected and vitalized by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the United States v. Gettysburg Electric Railway Company (160 U. S., 668). In a public-building bill Congress had appropriated a sum of money for acquiring by purchase or condemnation the site of the battle of Gettysburg, for the purpose of preserving the lines of battle and for properly marking with tablets the positions occupied by the various commands of the army, and for opening and improving avenues, and so forth. Under this authority the United States district attorney for the eastern district of Pennsylvania filed a petition in the name of the United States for the purpose of condemning certain lands. The Gettysburg Electric Railway Company answered the petition to the effect that they had acquired certain of the property and were occupying it with the railroad, and that the Congress had no constitutional authority to exercise eminent domain for the purposes named in the bill. In the circuit court the petition was dismissed on the ground that preserving lines of battle, marking positions occupied, and so forth, was not the kind of public use for which the United States had the constitutional power to condemn land. Justice Peckham rendered the decision in the Supreme Court and stated in the beginning of his decision that the really important question was whether the land was to be put to a public use within the limitations of any of the powers of Congress granted to it by the Constitution, and he held that it was for the general welfare of the American people. Let me read a little of what Mr. Justice Peckham said in the course of that decision:

> In examining an act of Congress it has been frequently said that every intendment is in favor of its constitutionality. Such act is presumed to be valid unless its invalidity is plain and apparent; no presumption of invalidity can be indulged in; it must be shown clearly and unmistakably.

Justice Peckham did not put the burden upon those who would sustain the law, but upon those who would destroy it. And getting to the particular point further along the court said:

> Congress has power to declare war and to create and equip armies and navies. It has the great power of taxation to be exercised for the common defense and general welfare. Having such powers, it has such other and implied ones as are necessary and appropriate for the purpose of carrying the powers expressly given into effect. Any act of Congress which plainly and directly tends to enhance the respect and love of the citizen for the institutions of his country and to quicken and strengthen his motives to defend them, and which is germane to and intimately connected with and appropriate to the exercise of some one or all the powers granted by Congress, must be valid.

Again, further along, the justice, after reciting the real objects to be accomplished by the legislation, stated that the monuments to be provided for were for the benefit of all the citizens of the country for the present and for the future. Then, continuing, he said:

> Such a use seems necessarily not only a public use, but one so closely connected with the welfare of the Republic itself as to be within the powers granted Congress by the Constitution for the purpose of protecting and preserving the whole country. It would be a great object lesson to all who looked upon the land thus cared for, and it would show a proper recognition of the great things that were done on those momentous days.

Further along in the decision he says again:

> No narrow view of the character of this proposed use should be taken. Its national character and importance, we think, are plain. The power to condemn for this purpose need not be plainly and unmistakably deduced from any one of the particularly specified powers. Any number of those powers may be grouped together, and an inference from them all may be drawn that the power claimed has been conferred.

The Supreme Court, in the Legal-tender cases (12 Wall., 457, 534), said:

> And here it is to be observed it is not indispensable to the existence of any power claimed for the Federal Government that it can be found specified in the words of the Constitution, or clearly and directly traceable to some one of the specified powers. Its existence may be deduced fairly from more than one of the substantive powers expressly defined, or from them all combined. It is allowable to group together any number of them and infer from them all that the power claimed has been conferred.

Justice Peckham said the power need not be plainly and unmistakably deduced from any one of the particularly specified powers. The Senator says, "Show me the authority; point out the specific clause."

I shall not expect the distinguished Senator from Maryland to accept the doctrine of that decision. I know that distinguished men of his party and of his particular school of constitutional defenders hazarded their judgment in advance that that law would never be sustained by any court, just as the Senator has risked his professional reputation against the one we are now considering. So liberal a paper as the Green Bag consoled itself only with the thought that the money was better spent than upon congressional funerals.

Mr. President, I might be depressed after the castigation that the Senator has administered unto me if I stood alone in my discomfiture. But it is consoling and sustaining that Alexander Hamilton and the Supreme Court of the United States are likewise denuded of the cuticle of their feelings and held up to the mockery of the jeering and gibing multitude. If the Senator had honored me with more of his presence at the time I delivered my address, he would have learned that I was not basing this legislation upon the "general-welfare" clause alone, nor extending the power of Congress by it. Fortunately, in my opinion, we need not rely upon that clause at all.

Mr. President, if these words were stricken from the Constitution this legislation would not fall before that immortal document, and if it did, then, in my opinion, we should know it, the sooner the better. If after denying to the States the right to establish postal savings depositories the Federal Government itself shall be impotent, then the American people should know it. If the American people can not have what every other people on earth enjoy, then let us place the responsibility. But, Mr. President, I am of the opinion that this legislation can be sustained by one or more of the enumerated powers of the Constitution under the opinion of Marshall in the McCulloch v. Maryland case (4 Wheat., 315). The Senator opposes this bill because he says there is no specific authority for it in any one of the enumerated powers of Congress.

Justice Peckham says any number of them may be grouped together and an inference from them all may be drawn that the power has been conferred. The question that the Senator raises is not a new one. It is not wholly unexpected. It is not new from the Senator from Maryland, because we have heard it, lo these many times; it is not new to these halls, because it has been raised upon every occasion during our national life when the American Congress has undertaken to legislate upon a subject not specifically enumerated in the eighth section of Article I of the Constitution. It was raised in the first Congress that assembled and few Congresses since but have contributed to the unending discussion. I say it is not unexpected, because although much discussed it is one of those doctrinal questions that probably never will be answered satisfactorily to certain minds and to certain schools of political thought. It was the weapon with which Benton fired mercilessly and everlastingly his anathemas against the national banking system. It was used against internal improvements and the protection of American industries. It was called into action against the acquisition of Florida and Louisiana—Alaska and the Philippines. It did duty again in the great conflict of thought from which was precipitated the war between the States, and in later days it has been on the firing line on every occasion of industrial and commercial legislation. It was raised by Jefferson and answered by Hamilton. It was raised by Madison and Monroe and answered by John Quincy Adams. It was raised by Jackson and again answered by Webster. Ah, Mr. President, it was raised by Maryland and answered by Chief Justice Marshall.

I am not vain enough to hope that I shall be able to do what Hamilton and Adams and Webster and the mighty Marshall could not do. I can not expect to soothe the aching conscience of the Senator from Maryland when the adjudications of the great court of the American people have failed to do it. There are tasks too difficult for human undertaking. But, Mr. President, from the depths of legislative history and the wellspring of American statesmanship, from which comes our splendid American achievement, I can at least justify those of us who shall vote for this bill.

I shall not weary the Senate by specific naming of every instance of legislation that might furnish us a criterion at this particular time. I have neither the time, the inclination, nor the equipment at the moment to undertake an exhaustive address upon this subject. What the limitations of the power of Congress are and what they ought to be has been an unending controversy. We can not get back far enough to see the beginning, nor see far enough ahead to get the ending. Those who have thought the Government should do very little have found very little power to do anything, while those who have thought the Government should stand for much have always found abundance of power to sustain them. Those who opposed national banks and internal improvements and a protective-tariff policy and industrial legislation have always been unable to find authority for them in the Constitution, notwithstanding the opinions of the judiciary, confirmed by the century of popular approval.

In the light of the age and by the precedent and custom of all the world, it is the legitimate function of the post-office, and is therefore constitutional under the authority to establish post-offices and post-roads. There are instrumentalities of the Postal Service that the makers of the Constitution never dreamed of, and there are functions now in practice that they never contemplated. If the object of this bill is needed, or if it will be helpful, in the opinion of Congress, to regulate and promote commerce among the States, it is proper under the commerce clause of the Constitution. If it will be useful to the Government in borrowing money, it can be maintained under the clause authorizing Congress to borrow money. If Congress believes it would be beneficial in raising and supporting an army, it is constitutional.

It is not required that legislation shall be indispensable or comprehensive in carrying out any of the enumerated powers of Congress. Neither is there any authority outside of Congress to determine the degree of its efficacy for such purpose. But if even in a remote way it can be helpful in any of the enumerated powers of Congress, it will be sustained by the court.

The Supreme Court early planted itself squarely upon this proposition, and from it has never wandered. In the case of United States v. Fisher (2 Cranch, 358, 396) the court said:

> In construing this clause it would be incorrect and would produce endless difficulties if the opinion should be maintained that no law was authorized which was not indispensably necessary to give effect to a specified power. Where various systems might be adopted for that purpose it might be said, with respect to each, that it was not necessary, because the end might be obtained by other means. Congress must possess the choice of means, and must be empowered to use any means which are in fact conducive to the exercise of a power granted by the Constitution.

Further along this line I shall read what the court said in a later case of the Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson (154 U. S., 457). That early opinion that I have just read in Cranch was written by Mr. Marshall, and this later one was written by Justice Harlan, as I recall it, and almost a hundred years subsequent. But it will be noticed that Justice Harlan in this later decision does not differ from the opinion of Mr. Marshall of almost a hundred years before. The Supreme Court said in this later case:

> Congress is not limited in its employment of means to those that are absolutely essential to the accomplishment of objects within the scope of the powers granted to it. * * * The test of the power of Congress is not the judgment of the courts that particular means are not the best that could have been employed to effect the end contemplated by the legislative department. The judiciary can only inquire whether the means devised in the execution of a power granted are forbidden by the Constitution. It can not go beyond that inquiry without entrenching upon the domain of another department of the Government. That it may not do with safety to our institutions.

So I have undertaken to show that it is for Congress to determine whether this postal savings system that we are seeking to inaugurate will be beneficial for the carrying out of any of the enumerated powers of the eighth article of the Constitution. We are the sole judges of its utility and efficiency. We are not bound to say that this is a necessary thing to do to carry out any particular one of these powers; neither are we bound to say that this is the only thing that can be enacted to carry out any of these powers; but if in the judgment of Congress it is a valuable thing, a desirable thing, to do, to carry out those powers, we are the sole judge of the question of desirability and of advisability; and the Supreme Court repeatedly has said that if it should undertake to decide what is advisable and desirable it would be invading the prerogatives and the domain of another branch of the Government.

The words of Chief Justice Marshall have never been overruled, and what he said in the McCulloch case would apply here. They are as follows. I want to read just a paragraph of this McCulloch decision, because it is the great opinion upon which all the decisions for a hundred years have been based:

> Where the law is not prohibited—

I remember when the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] a day or two ago arose and made some interrogatory as to whether or not the proposition that the law was not prohibited might have any efficacy in the argument, he was almost scoffed at by certain Senators here. Yet Mr. Marshall, in that great case, said:

> Where the law is not prohibited, and is really calculated to effect any of the objects intrusted to the Government, to undertake here to inquire into the degree of its necessity would be to pass the line which circumscribes the judicial department and to tread on legislative ground. * * * We think a sound construction of the Constitution must allow to the National Legislature that discretion with respect to the means by which the powers it confers are to be carried into execution, which will enable that body to perform the high duties assigned to it in the manner most beneficial to the people. Let the end be legitimate—

These are familiar words, with which we are all so familiar—

> Let the end be legitimate; let it be within the scope of the Constitution, and all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted to that end which are not prohibited, but consist with the letter and spirit of the Constitution, are constitutional.

When the national banks were established it was attempted to justify the authority upon a single specific clause of the Constitution. But it was contended that they were necessary and proper for the purpose of better carrying into execution the power for levying and collecting taxes, for paying the public debt, for borrowing money at home and abroad, for regulating commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, for raising and supporting an army and navy, and for carrying on war.

To use the words, or rather the thought of another (for I do not recall the exact words that were used in defense of the United States notes), the law furnishes a medium for the payment of private and public debts at times when money is being rapidly withdrawn from circulation. It will furnish the means to buy the government bonds. It will stimulate trade and revive the drooping energies of the country and restore confidence to the public mind. The Supreme Court, in the Veazie bank case, held that it was a constitutional prerogative for the Congress to provide money and currency with which to conduct the business of the country. In support of that doctrine the court has sustained the most extraordinary measures to furnish that circulating medium.

After sustaining the national-bank note and the greenback, the trade dollar, and the transportation of silver to every portion of the country to get the currency into circulation, and the tax on state-bank issues to give a monopoly, I have no fear of the court not sustaining this measure, if upon no other ground than that of keeping the money in circulation. Surely there is no specific and enumerated power in the Constitution to issue greenbacks nor to delegate to banks the power of issuing their notes as money. There was no authority for the trade dollar, but, sirs, they have all been sustained upon the inherent power of the Government to use any means necessary to perform the legitimate functions and prerogatives of government. There are things universally and everlastingly recognized as not only powers, but duties, of government, and one of them is the power of furnishing a suitable circulating medium. But of what consequence would that be if there did not accompany it the power to use suitable and proper means for keeping that money in circulation. Suppose some Goliath of money—of actual money—were about to tap our fountain of supply and lead away into his own coffers somewhere all our money as it is issued from the mint and printing presses. Can it be doubted that the great powers of the Government, as directed by the ingenuity of our citizenship, could be utilized to prevent the catastrophe that would surely follow?

But, Mr. President, that money supply has been tapped. Not all of it, but, as I showed in my speech a year ago, 49 per cent of it has been taken from the channels of trade, and we feel the deadening effect of it. At times we feel it more than at other times. But remedies are always made for the times of disease. Does anyone doubt that less money would have been hoarded in the nineties or less two years ago if there had been a postal savings system? The Government came to the rescue of the banks in 1907 and placed all the money it could command in the banks, and that stopped the panic—ability to get enough actual money. But suppose it had come at a time when the Government Treasury had not been overflowing. Suppose the needs had been greater than they were. Does anyone doubt the efficacy and desirability of a system that will go out into the highways and the byways of business, onto the farms and into the workshops, into the cellars and into the garrets, and collect the thirty and forty dollar deposits of the American people and put it all back into the channels of trade? Ah, at such a time and under that stress of times no man for a moment would doubt is constitutionality, its propriety, or its necessity.

To my mind, Mr. President, the Senator has done little more than make a speech. He has not done justice to his great ability. It is not such a speech as becomes one of his high attainments. The meter in the great reservoir of knowledge has not perceptibly risen, nor has the door of American possibility been wider opened by what he has said. For two splendid hours he had us all hid beneath the canopy of despair, shut out from all the dazzling glory of American ambitions and American opportunities. He entranced us with the graces of his oratory and the power of his magnetic personality, but he appalled us with the doctrine that he preached. He took these little words that most of us find so much difficulty in using and wove them into a medley harmonious to the ear and quick to the emotions. His speech rang with the rhythm of music and his brilliant imagination scintillated in contact with his cheerless and hopeless outlook, but withal it was dull and monotonous and dreary to the soul.

If the distinguished Senator had been born a great musician instead of a great lawyer, he would have excelled in the dirge. If God had made him a scientist he would undoubtedly have been a paleontologist and reveled in the fossils of prehistoric ages for the delectation of men. If he had been called to preach he probably would have specialized on funerals and chanted requiems to the dead and gone of his fellow-men. But, Mr. President, the Senator is none of these, but as a great constitutional lawyer he holds vigil over dead and buried political antiquities and denies himself to all the splendors of contemporary achievement.

Mr. President, I am one of those who believe there is hope for the country—not more in the devotion of the constitutional lawyer than in the intrepid layman who measures his possibilities by his needs and estimates the glory of the Republic by the genius, energy, and patriotism of her people. It is well to learn rules, but it is even better to know the principle that underlies the rule. There is a precept, older than the Constitution itself, that the letter of the law killeth, but the spirit giveth life.

INCREASED COST OF PRODUCTS.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I desire to call up the report from the Department of Commerce and Labor, submitted in response to Senate resolution 125, calling for certain information in reference to the increase in the prices of food and other products, and to make a few observations thereon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OLIVER in the chair). The Senator from South Dakota calls up the report named by him.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, as one of the results of the outcry against high prices numerous resolutions are pending in Congress for the appointment of separate and joint committees of investigation. Similar resolutions are pending in the legislatures of some of the States, an dindependent investigations are going on in the District of Columbia and in the Department of Agriculture. All of these proposed investigations apparently overlook the fact that the Bureau of Statistics or the Bureau of Labor has made a very thorough and extended investigation of this important subject and has collected a vast fund of information, covering a period of nineteen years, from 1890 to 1908, both inclusive, which throws much light upon it, and this information is now available. It is true that the investigation of this bureau does not include the year 1909, which is so recent that statistics covering it have not been connected and arranged, but it is very apparent that the causes of the high prices prevailing in 1909 are the same causes which have brought about the advance which has been steadily going upward for twelve years. The year 1909 was not different from the year 1907 in this respect. Upon the question of the increase in wages the statistics collected by the bureau are confined to the earnings of employees in the principal manufacturing and mechanical industries of the United States, and do not cover wages in agriculture, mining, transportation, domestic service, governmental service, federal, state, county, municipal, or military, or any line of work not classed as manufacturing or mechanical.

This, of course, is a very material and important omission in regard to wages, and we are greatly in need of specific information in this particular. The statistics are also comparatively slight as to the increase in the prices of commodities in foreign countries, though enough is presented to show conclusively that the advance in prices is world-wide.

It occurs to me, Mr. President, that instead of conducting long and expensive investigations of the causes for prevailing high prices and delaying conclusions for months and perhaps years, better and more satisfactory results will be attained by giving at once the greatest publicity to the valuable and material facts collected by the Bureau of Statistics and now available for the information of the country. If the Senate will indulge me for a few moments, I will undertake to give a simple outline of the facts relating to advancing prices, which are now available, together with a few observations as to the cause. I do not do this with any desire whatever to excuse or defend excessive tariffs or to justify in the slightest degree monopolies in restraint of trade. The question is entirely too serious to be made a partisan one. My only purpose is to render some assistance, if I may, in getting at the truth which lies at the bottom of the controversy.

If the price of crude and refined petroleum or the price of steel rails had advanced during the past ten years very materially, while the prices of other staple products not produced by a trust had remained stationary or fallen, we would have the best reason in the world to conclude that the increase in the price of crude and refined petroleum and in the price of steel rails was due to the fact that the Standard Oil Company and the United States Steel Corporation have a monopoly in the production of these materials. The fact is, however, that the prices of 10,000 other things, which neither the Standard Oil Company, the United States Steel Corporation, nor any other trust controls, have steadily gone up in price during the same period and to a point quite as high. I am decidedly in favor of the most rigid supervision by the Government of great monopolies like the Standard Oil and the United States Steel. I do not believe that such organizations should be permitted to follow their own sweet will and to fix a price upon any necessity. But their power to fix the price of oil or steel rails certainly has no relation to the high prices which have prevailed for a number of years and which now prevail for cotton, wheat, barley, flax, mutton, beef, pork, fish, lard, cheese, milk, poultry, butter, eggs, rents, and countless other commodities produced by individual farmers and small manufacturers, who are in no manner connected with any combination in restraint of trade.

Again, if the prices which have steadily advanced during the past ten years were prices of articles exclusively produced by a combination of American manufacturers under the protection of a tariff so high as to exclude all foreign competition, and if the prices of other articles not so protected had remained stationary or had lagged behind or fallen still lower, we would be justified in attributing the high price of such articles to the prohibitive tariff and to the monopoly organized by the trust here at home.

The United States Steel Corporation in many lines enjoys a monopoly of this kind, but unfortunately for that argument, we find that its products have not advanced much, if any, higher in price than thousands and thousands of articles which it does not produce nor control, and the production of which is not protected by the tariff at all, nor by any trust or combination. This appears to destroy the claim that the high prices generally prevailing in all lines, whether on the free or on the protected list, are due to monopoly or to the tariff.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do.

Mr. JONES. I wish to ask the Senator from South Dakota if it is not a fact, which is shown by the report from which he is quoting, that the price of steel products has really decreased instead of increased?

Mr. CRAWFORD. What the Senator from Washington states is correct. Those prices have slightly decreased. But I shall come to that in a moment.

I speak of high prices in general. I do not for a moment deny that monopoly and prohibitive tariffs should have the blame for the high prices which may be traced to them, but they do not explain the generally high and advancing prices upon innumerable articles of commerce in no way affected by monopoly or a high tariff.

There is a pretty heavy tariff upon sugar, and the American Sugar Refining Company is one of the worst outlaws in the country. We all despise it for the frauds it has committed. Nevertheless, sugar is one of the few things that has not advanced in price. On the contrary, the tendency of the price of sugar for several years has been downward. In 1907 we imported over 4,000,000,000 pounds of sugar, which paid over $60,000,000 in duty, and yet, while the price of food products unaffected by the tariff increased over 26 per cent during ten years, the price of sugar fell 1.6 per cent. The fall in price in this case was undoubtedly due to overproduction, but it makes it very clear that some other reason for high prices in general exists, and it is manifestly incorrect to say that they are all or even generally traceable to monopoly or to a high tariff. It is manifestly due to the increase in the production of gold and in the circulation per capita in the United States. A money unit as a measure of value will express the price of a million bushels of wheat in correct relation to one bushel of wheat. The quantity of commodities measured by it makes no difference. But the cheapening of the money unit by inflation will always increase the price of the commodities whose value is expressed in it. This can not be successfully disputed.

Bulletin No. 81, Bureau of Labor, contains actual wholesale prices for 1908 and relative prices from 1890 to 1908, both inclusive—nineteen years.

In this bulletin wholesale prices are presented for a large number of carefully selected representative staple articles secured in representative markets of the United States—258 articles. They are not confined to food products nor manufactured products, but represent all commodities.

The wholesale price level of 1908 was lower than 1907. The high level of 1907 was the highest in the nineteen-year period.

The average for 1908 was 5.2 per cent below 1907; 0.2 per cent higher than 1906; 36.9 per cent higher than 1897, which was the lowest year of the nineteen-year period; 22.8 per cent higher than the average for the ten years from 1890 to 1899.

The average wholesale prices declined each year from 1890 to 1897, or eight years of constantly falling prices. From 1898 to 1908 has been a period of advancing prices, with only three of the eleven years showing a decrease from the prices of the previous year. These three years were 1901, 1904, and 1908, the decline of the 1908 prices from those of 1907 being heavier than the decline in either 1901 or 1904. The lowest of the nineteen-year period was 1897 and the highest was 1907. The wholesale prices in 1908 were 36.9 per cent higher than those of 1897 and 5.2 per cent below those of 1907.

The foregoing embraces practically all of the leading classes of commodities.

The Bureau of Labor has also divided general commodities into nine groups and collected statistics showing increase of the wholesale price of each group during the same period. These groups are as follows: Farm products; food; cloths and clothing; fuel and lighting; metals and implements; lumber and building materials; drugs and chemicals; house-furnishing goods; miscellaneous.

In all these comparisons it represents the average price for the period from 1890 to 1899 by the number 100 and uses that as the basis for comparisons. The result shows that the wholesale price of the first group, farm products, taking 16 representative articles as the basis, and beginning with the lowest figure, which is 78.3 for 1896, has traveled upward each year, as follows:

1899	100.0
1903	118.8
1904	126.2
1905	124.2
1906	123.6
1907	137.1

So the wholesale price of farm products went from 78.3 in 1891 to 133.1 in 1908.

A second group of 53 representative articles of food, by the same method of comparison for the same period, shows a steady increase for each year in the same period, as follows:

1899	98.3
1901	105.9
1902	111.3
1903	107.1
1905	108.7

So the wholesale price of food went up from 83.8 in 1896 to 120.6 in 1908, which is not as great an increase as the increase in the wholesale price of farm products for the same period.

A third group of 70 representative articles of cloths and clothing, by the same method of comparison, during the same period, advanced in wholesale price as follows:

1901	101.0
1902	102.0
1904	109.8
1905	112.0
1906	120.0

It appears from these statistics that the increase in the wholesale price of cloths and clothing advanced from 91.3 in 1896 to 116.9 in 1908, a less advance than that in the price of food during the same period, and still less than that in the price of farm products.

A fourth group of 13 representative articles, coming under the head of fuel and lighting, advanced in wholesale price during the same period as follows:

1897	96.4
1898	95.4
1899	105.0
1901	119.5
1902	134.3
1903	149.3
1906	131.9

These figures show that during this period there was some fluctuation in the wholesale price of fuel and lighting; yet the general trend was upward, and the increase was more than in cloths and clothing and in food, but slightly less than farm products. The anthracite coal strike in 1902 undoubtedly caused the marked increase in the years 1902 and 1903.

A fifth group of 38 representative articles, classed as metals and implements, advanced during the same period as follows:

1901	111.9
1902	117.2
1903	117.6
1905	122.5
1906	135.2

There were fluctuations in this group. The wholesale price advanced from 93.7 in 1896 to 143.4 in 1907, and fell to 125.4 in 1908. The general advance in the group was nearly as much as the advance in farm products for the same period.

A sixth group of 27 representative articles, collected under the head of timber and building materials, advanced as follows:

1906	140.4
1908	133.1

It will be noticed from these figures that the increase in the wholesale price of lumber and building materials was steady and gradual year after year during the entire ten years, except that the increase was very marked in 1906 and 1907, while in 1908 it dropped to a point lower than in 1906. With the exception of the marked increase in 1906 and 1907, the increase in the wholesale price of lumber and building materials was very similar to the increase in farm products.

A seventh group of 9 representative articles, grouped under the head of drugs and chemicals, shows an advance as follows:

1898	106.6
1900	115.7
1901	115.2
1902	114.2
1903	112.6
1904	110.0

1905	109.1
1906	101.2

The advance in this group, while steady and continuous, was not so great as in the other groups.

The eighth group, comprised of 14 representative articles collected under the head of house-furnishing goods, shows the following increase:

1898	92.0
1899	95.1
1901	110.9
1902	112.2
1903	113.0
1904	111.7
1905	109.1
1906	111.0
1907	118.5
1908	114.0

The ninth group is comprised of 13 miscellaneous articles selected at random and collected under the head of miscellaneous. This group shows the following advances during the same period:

1897	89.7
1899	101.7
1901	108.5
1902	112.9
1903	113.6
1906	122.5

This group also shows a steady advance in prices during the period. In practically all the groups the price in 1908 was lower than the price in 1907, due, of course, to the panic of 1907–8.

The average for all the commodities included in all these groups combined was lowest in 1897 and highest in 1907.

When individual articles are traced in the record made of the investigations of the Bureau of Labor some curious things appear. For instance, representing the average level of the wholesale prices of all these commodities for the period from 1890 to 1899, inclusive, as being 100, the price of fresh eggs in December, 1908, was 223.1; Elgin creamery butter, 141.7; fresh milk, 156.9; sugar, 96° centrifugal, was only 97.6; sugar, 89° fair refining, 96.5; and sugar, granulated, 96. Cotton was 159.1; good steers, 133.6; choice steers, 138.2; barley, 139.2; wheat, 140.8; boots and shoes, 108.7; wool, Ohio medium, 109.6; blankets, all wool, 113.1; leather, 117.5; ginghams, 103.2; shirtings, 108.1; underwear, all wool, 115.8; overcoatings, staple goods, 96.9; overcoatings, chinchilla, 87; Lancaster ginghams, 96; hides, 170.8; petroleum, refined, 151.7, crude, 195.6; bituminous coal, 132.2, anthracite, 137.7; best bar iron, 101.2; steel rails, 107.4; pig lead, 113.9; steel billets, 116.1; pig iron, foundry No. 1, 119.9, foundry No. 2, 125.6; pig iron, Bessemer, 126.3; tin, pig, 160.1; door knobs, steel, bronze plated, 235.7; lead pipe, 99.6; shovels, 96.9; pine, yellow, long-leaf, 165.2; spruce, 163.8; hemlock, 167.2; earthenware, plates, white granite, 102.4; plates, cream-colored, 104; tea cups and saucers, 98.8; glassware (nappies), 98.2, pitchers, 71.5, tumblers, 67.6; table cutlery, carvers, 93.8; knives and forks, 82.5.

Out of 203 articles included in the investigation of the Bureau of Labor 165, or 81.3 per cent, show an increase in 1908 above the average level of wholesale price for the period from 1890 to 1899, 2 articles, or 1 per cent, show the same price, and 36 articles, or 17.7 per cent, show a decrease.

These figures prove conclusively, what every one already knew from personal experience, that the prices of nearly all commodities have been steadily advancing for more than ten years. What is the cause? Is it the trust or the protective tariff, or some other cause? Here, for instance, are three articles, one of them—cotton—is on the free list; it is produced by the farmer; its wholesale price is not increased by any trust. A second—petroleum—is controlled by a trust, but is not much affected by the tariff. A third—sugar—carries and for years has carried a heavy tariff and is to a very considerable degree controlled by the American Sugar Refining Company.

Let us compare the wholesale prices of these three articles of retail dealers or by independent dealers. For instance, sugar during the period, as shown by the investigations made by the Bureau of Labor:

COTTON.

1900	146.2
1903	170.8
1905	145.3
1906	167.7
1907	180.6
1908	159.1

PETROLEUM, REFINED.

1900	117.1
1901	108.0
1902	109.2
1903	134.3
1904	134.7
1905	124.5
1906	128.2
1907	132.6
1908	133.1

SUGAR, 89° FAIR, REFINING.

1902	77.4
1903	82.3
1905	94.3
1906	81.2

These figures show that the wholesale price of cotton on the free list and coming from the farmer, who is not in a trust, advanced much more than the wholesale price of refined petroleum, which is controlled by the greatest, most vicious, and arbitrary monopoly in the world, while the wholesale price of refined sugar, in spite of the thievery and jugglery of the American Sugar Refining Company, actually fell during this ten-year period. This certainly indicates that some other and more universal and general cause than the tariff and the trusts lies back of the general advance in the level of prices.

These figures can be found in Senate Document 349, made by the Bureau of Labor in response to the resolution offered by me and passed by the Senate on January 10, 1910, and in Bulletins 77 and 81.

To show still more clearly that the increase in prices is due to some other cause than the tariff or the trusts, let us take three other articles, viz, steel rails, upon which there is a tariff for protection and in the manufacture of which the United States Steel Corporation enjoys a monopoly; anthracite coal, which is on the free list but is controlled by a monopoly; and cotton-seed oil, which is on the free list and may or may not be under the control of a combination.

Assuming the wholesale price of these articles in 1899 to be 100, in 1908 their price at wholesale was as follows:

Steel rails, 99.5; anthracite coal, 130.4; cotton-seed oil, 125.7.

Cotton-seed oil, which was on the free list and, so far as I know, not controlled by a monopoly, advanced in wholesale price, while steel rails, protected by a tariff and controlled by a monopoly, fell in price.

From Bulletin 77 of the Bureau of Labor it is shown, as the result of the same line of investigation, that the retail prices advanced during the period from 1899 to 1908 in very much the same way that has been shown in regard to wholesale prices.

From the figures given on page 184 of Bulletin No. 77, it appears that in 1907 the retail price of eggs was 36.9 per cent higher than the price in 1890 and 28.8 per cent higher than the price in 1891, while the retail price of bacon in 1907 was 64.2 per cent higher than in 1890.

In 30 representative articles of food the retail price advanced on the basis of 100, or the average retail price, for the period from 1890 to 1899 as follows:

1897	96.3
1899	99.5
1900	101.1
1901	105.2
1902	110.9
1903	110.3
1907	120.6

These 30 articles of food were selected without reference to whether they were on the protected or on the free list, and without reference to whether they were handled by a combination is on the protected list, while tea is on the free list, and the retail price of sugar went down, while the retail price of tea went up, as follows:

TEA.

1898	100.7
1900	105.5
1901	106.7

1906	105.5
1907	105.3

SUGAR.

1899	101.7
1900	104.9
1901	103.0
1902	96.0
1905	103.9

These figures may be verified by comparison with the tables found on page 189 of Bulletin No. 77, Bureau of Labor, and the report made in response to the Senate resolution, page 7.

I ask leave to have the tables inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The tables referred to are as follows:

PRICE IN 1899=100.

[It is not possible in taking retail prices over a large area to secure products standardized with the same degree of accuracy as in the case of wholesale prices. It is known that in retail trade as prices advance substitutions are made of articles of the same name, but of inferior grade. It is impossible to determine to what extent this process of substitution may have taken place in various articles in the following table in the nine years covered.]

Mr. CRAWFORD. These investigations, made in a thorough manner by the Bureau of Labor, show that, with only a few exceptions, the prices, both wholesale and retail, of all commodities in the United States have steadily advanced for a period of twelve years and are still advancing. This advance is not confined to farm products, to food products, nor to manufactured products, but it embraces substantially all commodities. Food taken from the sea has advanced the same as food raised on the farm. Dry cod advanced 50.7 per cent from 1899 to 1907; herring, 22.3 per cent; salmon advanced 25.6 per cent between 1899 and 1908. Undoubtedly there are cases where storage, cold storage, monopoly, combination, excessive tariff, shortage in the supply, and other shifting causes have contributed to the increase in price, while overproduction in other cases has caused the exceptions in which prices have been falling instead of rising during the past twelve years. But it is clear that some other and more universal cause exists for the general upward trend of prices in the United States during this period than tariffs and trust combinations and shortage in production.

That some larger cause is responsible is evident when we discover that this upward tendency in prices of substantially all commodities is not confined to the United States, but is world-wide, and is found in free-trade England as well as in protected Germany and the United States.

The report of the Bureau of Labor, made in response to the Senate resolution, shows, for instance, the following advances in prices of commodities from 1899 to 1908, both inclusive:

	Per cent.
FLOUR.
Great Britain advanced	18.9
Germany advanced	18.6
France advanced	12.1
COTTON.
Great Britain advanced	60.6
United States advanced	59.1

Germany (1899 to 1907) advanced	26.5
AMERICAN LARD.
Germany (1899 to 1907) advanced	64.1
France (1899 to 1907) advanced	50.3
United States (1899 to 1907) advanced	65.5
RICE.
United States (1899 to 1908) advanced	2.8
Great Britain (1899 to 1908) advanced	5.8
Germany (1899 to 1908) advanced	6.8
France (1899 to 1908) advanced	5.5

The editor of the New York Independent in a recent editorial truthfully says: "The fact that prices have risen the world over—in England, Russia, China, and South America, although not so much as here—prove a world-wide cause."

In my opinion, and in that opinion I am sustained by nearly all the leading students of political economy and finance, the cause for the general advance in the price of commodities at this time and during the past twelve years is and has been due to the enormous increase in the production of gold, the increase in the world's coinage, and the increase in the circulation per capita in the United States.

I ask leave to insert in the RECORD Tables VII, VIII, IX, and X, found on pages 13 and 14 of the report of the Bureau of Labor, in response to the Senate resolution already referred to.

Table VII shows that notwithstanding the enormous increase in the population of the United States from 1896 to 1909, the circulation per capita steadily increased each year, going from $21.41 in 1896 to $34.93 in 1909, an increase of 63.15 per cent.

Table VIII shows a steady and enormous increase in the yearly production of gold in the world, going from $202,251,600 in 1896 to $412,532,900 in 1907, an increase in the year 1907 alone of more than 100 per cent over the year 1896.

Table IX shows that the total coinage of gold and silver at the mints of the world advanced in a very marked degree during the years 1896 to 1907, inclusive, going from $355,439,544 in 1896 to $633,456,728 in 1907. The coinage of gold alone went from $195,899,517 in 1896 to $411,803,902 in 1907, an increase of 110 per cent. It should be remembered that this shows the percentage of increase in 1907 over 1896 only, and takes no account of the enormous annual increases of the intervening years.

Table X shows the increase in gold production in the United States from 1896 to 1907, both inclusive, going from $53,388,000 in 1896 to $90,435,700 in 1907, an increase of 170.3 per cent. This shows the percentage of increase in 1907 over 1896 only, and takes no account of the enormous annual increases of the intervening years. The production for 1906 alone was $94,373,800.

This enormous production of gold and increase in the world's stock of money, and the enlarged circulation per capita in the United States could have but one result. As Professor Norton, of Yale—a professor of political economy—says in a recent article in the New York Independent:

> The popular outcry, now sweeping the country, directed against prevailing high prices, forcibly illustrates some of the social consequences of the depreciation of gold. * * * Gold ore yielding $20 gold per ton is relatively rare in nature. On the other hand, gold ore running from four and five dollars per ton is distributed very widely, and the deposits are of large area. When, therefore, mining engineers and chemists succeeded in devising methods of extracting gold from ore as low in grade as $5 per ton at a profit the potential supply of gold enormously increased. As a result of these scientific discoveries the annual production of gold began to mount at an increasing rate in the nineties. Exactly as the successive issues of greenbacks by our Government during the civil war forced prices to higher and higher levels until finally commodities sold at two and three fold previous prices, so gold, ever increasing in production, has produced a similar effect.
> Bradstreet's index of average prices indicates an advance of 60 per cent in prices since July 1, 1896. In other words, a dollar's worth of goods to-day could have been purchased for 62 cents in 1896. During the past thirteen years prices have maintained an average advance of 4½ per cent per annum.
> The individual, therefore, who deposited $1 in the savings bank in 1896 to be compounded at 4 per cent for the thirteen years at the present time would have, principal and accumulated interest, barely sufficient to purchase the goods which he could have purchased with his original dollar in 1896.
> Measured in purchasing power, the savings-bank depositors of the United States in reality have received no interest on their funds for thirteen years, since the interest credited just about balances the depreciation of their funds in purchasing power.
> The gold inflation is world-wide, and prices everywhere have moved upward in response. * * *
> At the present time popular clamor seeks to fix the responsibility upon the trusts, just as in Washington's day a similar agitation resulted in laws against "forestallers and monopolists," whereas the true cause lay in the depreciating continental currency. "Not worth a continental" in the future may be substituted by the phrase "Not worth a gold dollar," for how serious the situation may become nobody knows.

Mr. Byron Holt, vice-president of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, says that prices in the past year have increased 10 per cent. Referring to this statement, Professor Norton says:

> Every individual knows whether his income has increased 10 per cent. If his income has not increased in proportion, that person is to be numbered among those who, in Cicero's words, are "Eager for new things." History teaches that social disturbances are fed on rising prices, because the seeds of discontent more easily are sown.

From these statistics gathered by the Bureau of Labor it is clearly demonstrated beyond the possibility of successful contradiction that the present high level of prices and the upward tendency in prices during the past twelve years is due to the increase in the production of gold, accompanied by the large increase in the United States of the circulation per capita. Cost of transportation, tariffs, combinations in restraint of trade, and shortages in supply have their effect in individual cases of course, and this has always been so; but that does not and can not explain the constant tendency upward, each year being higher than the preceding, of the general level of the prices both wholesale and retail, of commodities in general, not only in the United States but throughout the world.

Now, if the increase in the prices of commodities is due to the increase in gold production, as we must conclude it is, who is hurt by it? Is it a bad thing for the country to have an era of high and generally advancing prices? That depends entirely upon the angle from which you view it. For a poor man, not in a labor union, who is dependent upon the wages he earns as a laborer, or upon the salary he earns by the week, month, or year as a clerk or government employee, and whose pay has not increased in the same proportion as the increase in the cost of living, the period of high prices has not been a good thing, and he has a right to receive more pay or to demand a reduction in the cost of living. The general effect of rising prices caused by an inflation of currency and a depreciation in the purchasing power of money is to stimulate the greatest activity in exchange and production of commodities. Everyone becomes anxious to share in the advantage of rising markets. The inducement to hoard money is taken away and consequently the disposition to hoard it ceases. This era of high prices certainly has been a good thing for the farmer and the producer, because during the past ten years it has given to him the richest returns he has received in a generation. In addition to the enormous increase in the value of the farm itself, the prices of farm products have increased faster than the general prices of the things which the farmer must buy. As the senior Senator form North Dakota said the other day, the farmer is just coming into his own, and he deserves it; he is not complaining of high prices. It is also a good thing for the merchant, manufacturer, banker, and those engaged in transportation business, unless, of course, the inflation should become abnormal, when a collapse is sure to follow. But the increased cost of living falls with great severity upon the wage-earner whose wages have not kept pace with it.

The report of the Bureau of Labor, made in response to the Senate resolution, gives, in Table V, "The relative wages per hour and relative full-time weekly earnings per employee in the principal manufacturing and mechanical industries of the United States from 1899 to 1907."

In this table it is shown that the wages of this class of employees in the United States advanced as follows:

	Wages per hour.	Wages per week.
1899	100.0	100.0
1902	110.0	107.9
1903	114.0	111.0

This shows an increase in wages in the principal manufacturing and mechanical industries only. In these the labor employed is union labor. The table does not include the wages of employees engaged in agriculture, mining, transportation, merchandising, domestic service, and governmental service, or in any line of work not classed as manufacturing or mechanical. In many of these lines wages have not increased in proportion to the increase in the cost of living. There are thousands and thousands of men and women in the United States who are getting no more pay for the same service than they received in 1896. This advance in the cost of living has pressed this class sorely, and has imposed and is imposing both hardship and suffering upon their families.

The great corporations which have taken advantage of conditions and exacted more than a fair share of profit have not advanced the wages of their employees proportionately. We must not forget that when the retail price of food and clothing increases faster than the purchasing power of the wages of the workingman the resulting hardship is unduly severe. The Bureau of Labor could not furnish figures showing what changes had occurred in the wages of employees not engaged in the manufacturing and mechanical industries, and as to them we have no statistics. The follwoing comparisons made by the Bureau of Labor show how oppressive this increase in the cost of living is to the workingman, whose wages have not been increased proportionately, and how the depreciation in the purchasing power of the dollar has affected him:

In 1896 for a dollar he could buy 7.81 pounds of fresh beef.

In 1907 for a dollar he could buy only 6.47 pounds of fresh beef.

In 1896 for a dollar he could buy 9.82 pounds of salt beef.

In 1907 for a dollar he could buy only 6.73 pounds of salt beef.

In 1896 for a dollar he could buy 16.84 pounds of milk; in 1907 only 14.40 pounds.

In 1896 he could buy 4.53 pounds of butter; in 1907 only 3.29 pounds.

In 1896, fresh pork, 9.84 pounds; in 1907 only 6.73 pounds.

In 1896, salt pork, 9.58 pounds; in 1907 only 6.46 pounds.

In 1896, poultry, 7.56 pounds; in 1907 only 5.59 pounds.

In 1896, fish, 10.20 pounds; in 1907 only 8.33 pounds.

In 1896, eggs, 5.77 pounds; in 1907 only 3.89 pounds.

In 1896, wheat flour, 40.73 pounds; in 1907 only 32.08 pounds.

In 1896, corn meal, 49.02 pounds; in 1907 only 35.39.

In 1896, rice, 13.10 pounds; in 1907 only 11.68 pounds.

In 1896, cheese, 6.45 pounds; in 1907 only 5.12 pounds.

In 1896, lard, 11.35 pounds; in 1907 only 7.95.

In 1896, bread, 20.23 1-pound loaves; in 1907 only 19.37 loaves.

You ask what is the remedy for this injustice to the wage-earner?

My answer is: Give him more pay. It is real injustice in these times of high-tide prosperity to withhold from the wage-earner what is his due. Department clerks and government employees can not live on the wages which supported them comfortably ten years ago. Wages are the last thing to advance when times are good and the first to feel the effects by reduction or nonemployment when times are bad. But while the laboring man whose wages have not advanced as swiftly nor as high as the cost of living, and the man who is dependent upon a fixed salary, which has not been increased proportionately, have suffered keenly and are suffering keenly and have reason to complain, the statistics collected by the Bureau of Labor show that this is not the case as to the workingmen employed in the mechanical and manufacturing industries. For instance, Bulletin No. 77, issued in July, 1908, based upon figures received concerning wage-earners in 4,169 establishments in the principal manufacturing and mechanical industries of the United States, compares the wages received in 1906 and 1907 with the wages received during the period from 1890 to 1899. This comparison shows that the average wage per hour received in 1907 was 28.8 per cent higher than the average from 1890 to 1899, and that the number of employees in these establishments was 44.4 per cent greater.

The increase in the average wages per hour in 1907 over the average hourly wages in any year from 1890 to 1900 was more than 20 per cent. It was 28.8 per cent over the average for the ten years from 1890 to 1899. The bulletin further shows that wages in these establishments in 1907 were 31.6 per cent higher than in 1894, the year of lowest wages per hour of the period in question. It shows that in 1907, as compared with the average of 1890 to 1899, there was an increase of full-time weekly earnings per employee of 22.4 per cent in these establishments. As compared with 1894 there was an increase of 25.3 per cent. It also shows that as compared with 1894, the year in which wages and the number of persons employed were the lowest during the period since 1890, there was an increase in 1907 of 53.5 per cent in the number of employees, and that as compared with the average for the ten years from 1890 to 1899 there was an increase of 44.4 per cent in the number of employees. Also, that when compared with the average retail price of the principal articles of food commonly used in the workingman's family during the ten years from 1890 to 1899, the purchasing power of an hour's wages in 1907, as measured in the purchase of food, was 6.8 per cent greater. This applies only, however, to employees working by the hour, by the day, or by the piecework, and is confined to manufacturing and mechanical industries only.

It does not apply to agriculture, mining, transportation, public service, domestic service, or to any class of nonunion labor. It is simply a good showing for organized labor. The figures show that while the retail price of the articles of food weighted according to family consumption was 20.6 per cent higher in 1907 than the average for the ten years from 1890 to 1899 the average wages in these manufacturing and mechanical industries was 28.8 per cent higher. Then, too, on account of money being plentiful and actively employed, labor has been generally employed during the entire period of advancing prices. In this situation it seems clear that what is most needed just now is an increase in the wages and salary of employees, where such wages have not kept pace with advancing prices.

With the volume of currency kept full and no restraint upon the coinage of gold, prices are bound to go still higher.

As I have already said, to the man engaged in the production of articles of food and raiment, or other materials of general use and necessity, a farmer, for instance, or a banker, buyer and seller, investor, manufacturer, carrier of commodities, or a member of a labor union in a flourishing plant where the union has compelled a corresponding increase in wages, this advance in prices and the resulting activity in business has been and is a good thing. It has been a fine thing for the farmer in the great Middle West, because in addition to the enormous increase in the value of his farm, the prices of farm products have increased along with and even faster than the general prices of the things he has to buy, and the steady increase in prices during the past ten years has made him rich. It is upon laboring classes that the burden falls. The purchasing power of a day's wages, measured in a depreciating dollar, has imposed very cruel and oppressive burdens upon millions of poor people of small fixed incomes and low wages, which have remained stationary. Poor people in congested centers, the laboring man whose wages have not advanced as swiftly as the cost of living, the man or woman depending upon a fixed salary, which has not been increased proportionately, have suffered and have just reason to complain.

Last year a young brakeman on a passenger train on which I was riding in the State in which I reside, and whom I knew to be a young man of good habits and industry, told me that he was getting $60 per month. He said that both he and his young wife practiced the most rigid economy and did not spend even a nickel without considering very carefully what it would buy. He told me that when he had paid his house rent, fuel and lighting, grocery and meat bill, bills for clothing, shoes, and other necessaries every cent was gone. He said they had one child, a babe less than a year old; that the mother was seriously ill for several months after the birth of the child; and that on account of her illness and expenses incident to the birth of the little one he had contracted an indebtedness of about a hundred dollars. He said this debt, added to his usual household expenses, was more than he could ever discharge, even by small payments, out of the salary he was receiving, and he was very despondent.

This is where the pinch comes. The case of this young brakeman is similar to that of thousands and thousands of others in the United States to-day, and explains the bitter and widely extended protest heard on all sides.

Twelve years ago this young man could have lived comfortably and saved something each month out of his salary. The attention of employers everywhere should be called to the justice of the claim of the wage-earner who is not receiving adequate pay, and public opinion should compel an increase in his wages proportionate to the cost of living. The statistics furnished by the Bureau of Labor do not embrace the vast number of people employed outside of manufacturing establishments and have not been brought down so as to include the years 1908 and 1909.

The information already in the possession of the Bureau of Labor is, however, sufficient, in my judgment, to clearly explain the cause of the present era of high prices and to show who are benefited and who are injured by it; and, instead of taking months and years to discover the cause, the time of Congress should be employed in devising a remedy for a trying situation.

REGULATION OF PRACTICE IN THE FEDERAL COURTS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order, and the first bill on the calendar will be stated.

The bill (S. 3724) regulating injunctions and the practice of the district and circuit courts of the United States was announced as the first business in order on the calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over on objection of the Senator from New Hampshire.

ARLINGTON MEMORIAL BRIDGE.

The bill (S. 1630) to provide for the construction of a memorial bridge across the Potomac River from Washington to the Arlington property was announced as the next business in order on the calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. This is a bill which the Senate has heretofore passed several times, but I understand the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] has some amendments to offer to it. Hence I ask that it may go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

GOVERNMENT OF HAWAII.

The bill (S. 3360) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii," approved April 13, 1900, was announced as the next business in order on the calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am informed that the senior Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] desires that the bill, the title of which has just been read, shall go over for the day, retaining its place.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

WALES ISLAND PACKING COMPANY.

The bill (S. 1035) authorizing and directing the Secretary of State to examine and settle the claim of the Wales Island Packing Company was announced as the next business in order on the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

POSTAL SAVINGS DEPOSITORIES.

The bill (S. 5876) to establish postal savings depositories for depositing savings at interest, with security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes, was announced as the next business in order on the calendar.

Mr. CARTER. Unless some Senator desires to address the Senate on the bill, I ask that it may go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

GOVERNMENT OF CANAL ZONE, ETC.

The bill (H. R. 12316) to provide for the government of the Canal Zone, the construction of the Panama Canal, and for other purposes, was announced as the next business in order on the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice that the Senator from California [Mr. FLINT] is absent from the Chamber, and I think he desires to be present when the bill is considered. So I will ask that it go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

TEMPORARY WITHDRAWALS OF PUBLIC LANDS.

The bill (S. 5485) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to make temporary withdrawals of areas of public land pending report and recommendation to Congress or for examination and classification was announced as the next business in order on the calendar.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have been requested by the chairman of the committee reporting the bill to ask that it go over without prejudice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

PURE FOODS AND MEDICINES.

The bill (S. 1461) to prevent fraudulent representations as to government guaranties of foods and medicines was announced as the next business in order on the calendar.

Mr. HEYBURN. We are ready to proceed with the bill, unless there is objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which makes it unlawful for any person, association of persons, or corporation to place any mark upon any article of food or medicine stating that the contents of such package are guaranteed by the Government of the United States under the pure-food act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS-METHODS COMMISSION.

The bill (S. 6168) creating a government business-methods commission was announced as the next business in order on the calendar.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let the bill go over.

Mr. BORAH. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was not aware that any Senator desired to speak upon the bill. I would not have asked that it go over, and I withdraw the request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The junior Senator from Idaho asked that it go over, the Chair understood.

Mr. BORAH. I asked that it go over.

Mr. HEYBURN. I, too, asked that it go over. So it seems to be unanimous.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has gone over.

THOMAS B. POPE.

The bill (H. R. 7900) for the relief of Thomas B. Pope was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that in the administration of the pension laws Thomas B. Pope shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as first lieutenant of Company A, Fifty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, on the 4th day of September, 1862.

Mr. KEAN. Ought not the bill to have some limitation, providing that no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall accrue? Otherwise, the bill goes back to the 4th day of September, 1862. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. ELKINS. Let it go over.

Mr. KEAN. Let it be passed over without prejudice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

Mr. BULKELEY subsequently said: I ask unanimous consent to return to the bill (H. R. 7900) for the relief of Thomas B. Pope, which went over on the request of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS].

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BULKELEY. This is a case in which the bill should be in the form in which it is. The War Department, the Adjutant-General's office, recognize the fact that the entries as they were made at the time were entirely erroneous, and that the soldier instead of being absent without leave was actually absent with a written leave from the department. I ask that the bill be put on its passage.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RANK OF CERTAIN ARMY OFFICERS.

The bill (H. R. 3037) to correct the lineal and relative rank of certain officers of the United States Army, and to prevent the recurrence of like cases by amending the act approved October 1, 1890, entitled "An act to provide for the examination of certain officers of the army and to regulate promotion therein," was announced as the next business in order on the calendar.

Mr. ELKINS. Let it go over.

Mr. KEAN. I do not know whether or not my colleague wants to have the bill passed at the present time. So I ask that it may go over for the present without prejudice. I have no objection to the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

CRIMINAL JURISDICTION OF CORPORATIONS.

The bill (S. 5899) to amend section 1014 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was announced as the next business in order on the calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has been read and an amendment is pending.

Mr. KEAN. Let the bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

THACKER COAL MINING COMPANY.

The bill (H. R. 18411) to authorize the Thacker Coal Mining Company to construct a footbridge across Tug River at Thacker, Mingo County, W. Va., was announced as the next business in order on the calendar.

Mr. ELKINS. The bill has been unanimously reported from the Committee on Commerce.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT KANSAS CITY, MO.

The bill (H. R. 18592) to amend an act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at Kansas City, Mo., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BLACK RIVER BRIDGE, PAROQUET, ARK.

The bill (H. R. 18806) to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the Black River near Paroquet, Ark., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ST. FRANCIS RIVER BRIDGE, ARKANSAS.

The bill (H. R. 18807) to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the St. Francis River near Parkin, Ark., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WHITE RIVER BRIDGE, ARKANSAS.

The bill (H. R. 18808) to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the White River at Augusta, Ark., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TUG FORK BRIDGE, WEST VIRGINIA.

The bill (H. R. 18695) to revive an act to authorize the construction of a bridge across Tug Fork of Big Sandy River, West Virginia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SYSTEM OF LAND DESIGNATION.

The bill (S. 4629) to authorize the surveyor of the District of Columbia to adopt the system of designating land in the District of Columbia now in force in the office of the assessor of said District was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was to insert as section 2 the following:

SEC. 2. That hereafter all instruments tendered for record in the office of the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia in which original lots, subdivision lots, squares, or tracts are mentioned shall, in addition to any other description, contain a reference to the square or parcel shown on the plats and plans as filed for record in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia in which the real estate intended to be affected is contained, and the recorder of deeds shall not, unless for good cause shown to him, receive any instrument for record unless the provisions of this act are therein complied with.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to change the number of section 2 to section 3.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIVELY. I should like to have the report read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the report.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. BURKETT February 9, 1910, as follows:

[Senate Report 204, Sixty-first Congress, second session.]

UNIFORM DESIGNATION OF PARCELS OF LAND IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BURKETT, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, submitted the following report, to accompany S. 4629:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred S. 4629, a bill to authorize the surveyor of the District of Columbia to adopt the system of designating land in the District of Columbia now in force in the office of the assessor of said District, report the same with the recommendation that it be amended and as amended that the bill do pass.

On page 2 add a new section, to be known as section 2, as follows:

"That hereafter all instruments tendered for record in the office of the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia in which original lots, subdivision lots, squares, or tracts are mentioned shall, in addition to any other description, contain a reference to the square or parcel shown on the plats and plans as filed for record in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia in which the real estate intended to be affected is contained, and the recorder of deeds shall not, unless for good cause shown to him, receive any instrument for record unless the provisions of this act are therein complied with."

By an act approved February 23, 1905, it was provided that there should be a renumbering of blocks and parcels of land outside the city limits of Washington for assessment and taxation purposes. Under that act the surveyor is required to keep a record of such new numbering, but such record to be used only for assessment and taxation purposes. It seems that there is no reason why these numbers should not be used for all purposes of transfer and recording of property, although at present all transfers, surveys, and resubdivisions of such lots and blocks are made under the old designations, notwithstanding the fact that the surveyor, under the law, must keep such new records.

The committee has amended the bill by adding a new section, designated as section 2, providing that hereafter all instruments tendered for record in the office of the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia must contain, in addition to the old designation, the new designation as kept in the office of the surveyor. Under the law as it now stands the owner of property finds a different description on his tax receipt than he finds on his deed for the property, and the object in this bill is to make the records in all offices in the District uniform in their description of property.

Sections 1 and 3 of the bill as amended were submitted by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and their letter of transmittal is as follows:

OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, December 17, 1909.

SIR: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to submit herewith draft of a bill to provide for recording in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia the designation of squares, lots, and parcels of ground in said District which were adopted by the assessor of the District of Columbia under the provisions of an act of Congress approved February 23, 1905, entitled "An act to designate parcels of land in the District of Columbia for the purposes of assessment and taxation, and for other purposes," with request for its enactment.

The purpose of this bill is to secure a uniform designation for all parcels of land in the District of Columbia. Under the authority of the act above referred to, the assessor of the District adopted a system of designating all squares, lots, and parcels of land in the District for the purposes of assessment and taxation, but there was no authority in the law for the surveyor to adopt this system on the records of his office. In consequence, property is assessed under square numbers and parcels according to the system adopted by the assessor, while the official designations of such property in the office of the surveyor remain as they were before the new system was adopted. Transfers, surveys, and resubdivisions of recorded lots are made under the old designations of said lots as they appear on the records of the surveyor's office, while they are assessed by different designations by the assessor. For example: "Block 25, Columbia Heights," is the original record designation upon which all surveys, resubdivisions, and transfers are made, while "square 2859" is used for taxation and assessment purposes. Owners of property, seeing these new designations on their tax bills, have discarded the old designations altogether, and all inquiries regarding the property are made under the new designations. This causes great confusion, and the commissioners believe that a uniform designation of such squares, lots, and parcels of land should be adopted by the District of Columbia for all purposes. The passage of this bill will accomplish the result desired, and the commissioners earnestly request that it be enacted.

Very respectfully,

HENRY B. F. MACFARLAND,
President Board of Commissioners of District of Columbia.

Hon. J. H. GALLINGER,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,
United States Senate.

The provision of the amendment known as section 2 of the amended bill was submitted to Congress as part of the bill known as S. 4631, by the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia, transmitted through the Attorney-General, as follows:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., December 23, 1909.

MY DEAR SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith a copy of a letter from the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia, dated December 14, 1909, transmitted to me by the President, together with a draft of a bill prepared by the recorder of deeds, authorizing and directing him to keep an index of certain instruments recorded in his office. The attorney in charge of titles of this department says that, in his opinion, this bill would facilitate the examination of titles in the District of Columbia, and I therefore concur in his recommendation that its passage be procured if possible.

Respectfully,

GEO. W. WICKERSHAM,
Attorney-General.

Hon. JACOB H. GALLINGER,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,
United States Senate.

OFFICE OF THE RECORDER OF DEEDS,
Washington, D. C., December 14, 1909.

Mr. PRESIDENT: This office having received many requests that it shall index all instruments recorded therein affecting real estate under a square or parcel number, and I being doubtful of my authority to do so in the absence of express legislative authority and direction, I have the honor to herewith submit for your consideration draft of a bill which, if enacted by the Congress, would authorize and direct the recorder of deeds for the District of Columbia to institute and maintain such an index, the proposed bill also making it compulsory for persons drawing such instruments to describe the real property affected by square and parcel number.

During the more than one hundred years' existence of this office instruments recorded therein affecting real property have been indexed only by the names of the parties thereto, the result being that the searching of titles to real property in this District has been made a matter of great length of time and no little confusion. It is contended by those requesting an index by square or parcel that such waste of time and confusion would thereby be avoided, and that the institution of such an index would place this office on a modern and up-to-date footing in that respect. In this contention I concur, and respectfully ask that you lay the matter before the Congress, or that you authorize me to present it to the chairmen of the Senate and House Committees on the District of Columbia, I having presented the matter to you for the reason that a recent order of yours precludes me from submitting it directly to the Congress.

I have the honor to be your most obedient servant,

JOHN C. DANCY,
Recorder of Deeds, District of Columbia.

THE PRESIDENT,
White House, Washington, D. C.

The main provisions of the last bill (S. 4631) relate to the indexing of the records, but it is believed that the index should be made to conform to the new designations as provided for in this bill and that it can not be advantageously accomplished until after sufficient time has elapsed to complete the records in accordance with the provisions of this bill, and for that purpose section 2 has been added to the bill, and as amended the committee respectfully recommend that the bill be passed.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAND NEAR CONNECTICUT AVENUE BRIDGE.

The bill (S. 4617) to acquire land in the vicinity of the Connecticut Avenue Bridge for the extension of certain streets was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN REED, ALIAS MICHAEL FLANAGAN.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 2072) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John Reed.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

It directs the Secretary of War to remove the charge of desertion now standing on the rolls and records of the War Department against the name of John Reed, alias Michael Flanagan, late of Company E, Fifth Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, and Company D, Second Regiment United States Cavalry, and grant him a certificate of honorable discharge therefrom.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to add at the end the following proviso:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall accrue or become payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John Reed, alias Michael Flanagan."

GOVERNMENT OF ALASKA.

Mr. McCUMBER. I hope Senators will allow us to go on with the calendar, at least until we get through with the pension bills, which we are just reaching.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the regular order be first laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 5436) to create a legislative council in the district of Alaska, to confer legislative powers thereon, and for other purposes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside without prejudice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Indiana? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish to remark that until the time of the Senate is more completely occupied with the postal savings bill, so that we can get action of some kind upon that measure, I shall ask that the unfinished business be laid aside from day to day temporarily for some days.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No objection has been heard, and the bill is temporarily laid aside.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The next bill on the calendar under Rule VIII will be stated.

LANDS IN THE STATE OF WASHINGTON.

The bill (S. 4477) providing for the homestead entry of certain lands in the State of Washington, and for other purposes, was announced as the next bill on the calendar.

Mr. JONES. I ask that the bill may go over without prejudice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over without prejudice at the request of the Senator from Washington.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The bill (H. R. 17755) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, on page 5, line 21, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-four" and insert "thirty," so as to make the paragraph read:

The name of Monroe Kniffin, late of Company G, Second Regiment New York Volunteer Mounted Rifles, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The bill (H. R. 17752) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 2, after line 23, to strike out:

The name of William Bolam, late unassigned, Twenty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 20, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty" and insert "twenty-four," so as to make the clause read:

The name of De Have Norton, late of Company C, Fourth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee if this bill contains an item stricken out, or if any bill here contains an item stricken out, by the House for one Little, I think, proposing a pension for a dependent mother? The young man enlisted in the Spanish war, and after the war was over reenlisted and died from disease contracted in the army. The House struck out the item.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think that provision is in this bill.

Mr. FRYE. Is it in any of these bills?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think so. I think the matter is in a bill which has not been reported.

Mr. FRYE. I should like to have the chairman look at that.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will do so.

Mr. FRYE. The poor old woman depends entirely on charity now.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think such an item has been stricken out of these bills.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

HAZING AT THE UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY.

The bill (S. 5576) to increase the efficiency of the United States Military Academy was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 1, to insert after the enacting clause the following:

That the portion of the act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1901, prescribing penalty for hazing, is hereby amended to read as follows:

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the portion of the act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1901, prescribing penalty for hazing, is hereby amended to read as follows:

SEC. 1. That the superintendent of the United States Military Academy, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, shall make appropriate regulations for putting a stop to the practice of hazing, such regulations to prescribe dismissal, suspension, and other adequate punishment for infractions of the same, and to embody a clear definition of hazing.

SEC. 2. That any cadet who shall be charged with offenses under such regulations which would involve his dismissal from the Academy shall be granted, upon his written request, a trial by a general court-martial, and any cadet dismissed from the academy for hazing shall not thereafter be reappointed to the corps of cadets nor be eligible for appointment as a commissioned officer in the Army or Navy or Marine Corps until two years after the graduation of the class of which he was a member.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 1, before the word "that," to insert "Section 1."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 12, to add the following new section:

SEC. 3. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend an act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes,' approved March 2, 1901."

JOHN W. DULA AND C. M. COX.

The bill (H. R. 13145) for the relief of John W. Dula was announced as next in order.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, this is rather an extraordinary bill, and I think the Senator from North Carolina might explain it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not see anything extraordinary about it.

Mr. KEAN. The beneficiary was out of office, and now he wants to collect money for the time he served after his commission had expired.

Mr. OVERMAN. The district judge says that Mr. Dula had been United States commissioner for a long time; that in December he made a number of appointments, but by some neglect of the clerk Mr. Dula was not reappointed. Mr. Dula served, however, as de facto United States commissioner. The Secretary of the Treasury has audited his accounts and states that $214.35 would be due him, provided he had been appointed. He acted as a de facto commissioner, and this bill is for the purpose of validating his acts and also paying him what the Government owes him. Has the Senator any objection to that?

Mr. KEAN. Of course I have objection to a man assuming an office to which he was not appointed.

Mr. OVERMAN. He did not assume it. He had been a United States commissioner for years. The Judiciary Committee unanimously reported this bill. It was also reported unanimously, I think, by the Judiciary Committee of the House, and passed that body.

Mr. KEAN. It is a most extraordinary bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I see nothing extraordinary about it. Such bills have been frequently passed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I inquire whether this is the bill that was before the Committee on Claims once upon a time? I find that it is reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. OVERMAN. It never was before the Committee on Claims. If the Senator will refresh his recollection, I think I can explain the matter to him. In the Committee on Claims I brought the matter up. It turned out when the Committee was about to act upon it that the bill was before the Judiciary Committee instead of before the Committee on Claims, and, after examination, I found it was properly before the Judiciary Committee, because it proposed to validate the acts of a judicial officer.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the only reason I spoke of it was that I know the matter has been before the Committee on Claims. I also know that similar claims—for instance, I have in mind now one from Kansas or North Dakota, I forget which—have been before the Committee on Claims and money has been appropriated for their payment.

Mr. OVERMAN. That has always been done.

Mr. SMOOT. But they came from the Committee on Claims and not from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. OVERMAN. Probably this case ought to have been referred to the Committee on Claims. A Member of the House sent me the report from the House committee in this case, and without having the bill before me when the Committee on Claims met, as the Senator will remember, I brought it up there; but, finding that it was before the Judiciary Committee, I did not ask for action on the part of the Committee on Claims. The bill really has had approval of two of the great committees of the Senate, I will inform the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I happen to be a member of the Committee on Claims, and it did not have the approval of one member of the Committee on Claims, at any rate.

Mr. OVERMAN. That was not the fault of the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to audit and pay the account of John W. Dula, of Wilkesboro, Wilkes County, N. C., for services rendered as United States de facto commissioner for the western district of North Carolina from December 2, 1908, to and including June 5, 1909, the same as if he had been regularly appointed; and the acts of the said John W. Dula as United States commissioner de facto during said period are hereby legalized and declared to be of force and effect.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to audit and pay the account of C. M. Cox, of Bonifay, Fla., for services as United States commissioner de facto for the northern district of Florida during the months of January, February, March, April, May, and June, 1908, the same as if he had been regularly appointed; and the acts of the said C. M. Cox as United States de facto commissioner during said period are hereby legalized and declared to be of force and effect.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of John W. Dula and C. M. Cox."

MODIFICATIONS OF ARTICLES OF WAR.

The bill (H. R. 13410) to modify the One hundred and twenty-second and One hundred and twenty-fourth Articles of War was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 7, after the word "corps," to strike out "of the army," so as to make the section read:

That the One hundred and twenty-second and One hundred and twenty-fourth Articles of War be, and hereby are, modified to read as follows:

"ART. 122. If, upon marches, guards, or in quarters, different corps happen to join or do duty together, the officer highest in rank of the line of the Army, Marine Corps, organized militia, or volunteers, by commission, there on duty or in quarters, shall command the whole, and give orders for what is needful in the service, unless otherwise specially directed by the President, according to the nature of the case."

* * * * * * *

"ART. 124. Officers of the organized militia of the several States, when called into the service of the United States, shall on all detachments, courts-martial, and other duty, wherein they may be employed in conjunction with the regular or volunteer forces of the United States, take rank next after all officers of the like grade in said regular forces, and shall take precedence of all officers of volunteers of equal or inferior rank, notwithstanding the commissions of such militia officers may be older than the commissions of the said officers of the regular forces of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 13, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 2. That the One hundred and twenty-third Article of War be, and hereby is, repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to modify the One hundred and twenty-second and One hundred and twenty-fourth Articles of War, and to repeal the One hundred and twenty-third Article of War."

NEBRASKA JUDICIAL DISTRICT.

The bill (S. 226) to amend an act entitled "An act to divide the judicial district of Nebraska into divisions and to provide for an additional district judge in said district," was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend sections 3 and 7 of the act entitled "An act to divide the judicial district of Nebraska into divisions and to provide for an additional district judge in said district," approved February 27, 1907, to read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the regular terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for said district of Nebraska shall be held at the following times and places, namely: At Omaha, beginning on the fourth Monday in September and the first Monday in April; at Norfolk, beginning on the third Monday in September; at Grand Island, beginning on the second Monday in January; at North Platte, beginning on the first Monday in January; at Chadron, beginning on the second Monday in September; at Lincoln, beginning on the first Monday in October and the second Monday in May; at Hastings, beginning on the second Monday in March; and at McCook, beginning on the first Monday in March.

SEC. 7. That all civil actions not of a local nature, against a single defendant, must be brought in the division where said defendant resides; but if there are two or more defendants residing in different divisions of said district the plaintiff may sue in any division in which a defendant resides, and all issues of fact arising in such suit shall be tried in such division unless by consent of the parties, with the approval of the court, the case shall be removed to some other division.

Mr. BACON. I desire to have read the paragraph of the bill in reference to the appointment of an additional judge. I did not catch the reading of that paragraph.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the regular terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for said district of Nebraska shall be held at the following times and places, namely:

Mr. BACON. What I asked for the reading of was the paragraph in reference to the appointment of another judge.

Mr. BURKETT. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that there is not any provision in the bill for the appointment of any more judges.

Mr. BACON. I am glad to hear the Senator from Nebraska say that, because I was about to remark that I was present in the Judiciary Committee when the bill was considered, and I did not remember that there was anything of that kind provided for. I am glad to be assured by the Senator that there was not.

Mr. BURKETT. This simply provides for a change of the date of holding one term of court at Lincoln, and inserts the words "of fact" on page 2, line 14, giving the court the right to hear motions and other matters in the various divisions.

Mr. BACON. But the Senator from Nebraska will notice that the title of the bill as stated in the calendar explicitly says "and to provide for an additional district judge in said district."

Mr. BURKETT. This bill is to amend the act which did provide for the additional judge.

Mr. BACON. Ah!

Mr. BURKETT. It is merely an act to amend an act entitled "An act to divide the judicial district of Nebraska into divisions," and so forth.

Mr. BACON. I see. The only reason I interrupted was that when the bill was reported from the Judiciary Committee I did not understand that there was provision for an additional district judge, and from the hasty reading of it, which the Senator from Nebraska now corrects, I had construed the bill to provide for an additional judge.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF MORRILL ACTS TO THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 530) to amend an act entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts," approved July 2, 1862, and the acts supplementary thereto, so as to extend the benefits thereof to the District of Columbia, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES. I have received a great many letters for and against the proposition contained in that bill. It was only reported yesterday, and I ask that it go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

RAILWAY BRIDGES IN FLORIDA.

The bill (S. 6051) to authorize the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company to reconstruct, maintain, and operate its railway bridges across the Escambia Bay, Choctawhatchee River, in the State of Florida, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 2, line 3, after the word "Company," to strike out "its successors and assigns, are" and insert "is;" in line 7, before the word "existing," to strike out "First. Its" and insert "First, its;" in line 8, before the word "existing," to strike out "Second. Its" and insert "second, its;" in line 9, before the word "existing," to strike out "Third. Its" and insert "third, its;" and in line 10, after the word "River," to insert "all in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters,' approved March 23, 1906," so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company is hereby authorized to reconstruct, operate, and maintain its bridges on the line of railroad between Pensacola and River Junction, in the State of Florida, to wit: First, its existing bridge over Escambia Bay; second, its existing bridge over Choctawhatchee River; third, its existing bridge over Apalachicola River; all in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 13, to strike out:

The work of reconstruction of said three bridges shall be begun only after examination and approval by the Secretary of War of the plans, specifications, and drawings therefor provided in each case, and only in such manner as shall not unreasonably obstruct the free navigation of the several streams; and the Secretary of War is expressly empowered to prescribe such regulations as may be proper for securing that object.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 3, to strike out section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. That each of said bridges shall continue to be a railroad bridge for the passage of railway trains, shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post route, upon which no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, and munitions of war of the United States than the rate per mile paid for the transportation over the railroads leading to said bridges, and shall enjoy the rights and privileges of other post-roads in the United States, and equal privileges in the use of said bridges shall be granted to all telegraph and telephone companies, and the United States shall have the right of way across said bridges and approaches for postal telegraph and telephone purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 13, to strike out section 3, as follows:

SEC. 3. That the draw in each of the three bridges herein authorized to be reconstructed shall be opened promptly upon reasonable signal for the passing of boats, and such lights or signals as the Light-House Board shall prescribe shall be displayed from sunset until sunrise on said bridges by the owners thereof at their own expense.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 19, to strike out section 4, as follows:

SEC. 4. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridges herein authorized to be reconstructed be not commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date of the approval of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was rejected.

CERTIFICATES OF INDEBTEDNESS AGAINST RECLAMATION FUND.

The bill (S. 5705) to authorize the issue and sale of certificates of indebtedness against the reclamation fund was announced as next in order.

Mr. KEAN. That is a very important bill. I do not see the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER], who reported the bill, in the Chamber, and I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill goes over. That concludes the calendar.

RANK OF CERTAIN ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. BRIGGS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 3037) to correct the lineal and relative rank of certain officers of the United States Army, and to prevent the recurrence of like cases by amending the act approved October 1, 1890, entitled "An act to provide for the examination of certain officers of the army and to regulate promotion therein."

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, after line 5, to strike out section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. That hereafter officers suspended from promotion under the provisions of section 3 of the act approved October 1, 1890, entitled "An act to provide for the examination of certain officers of the army and to regulate promotion therein," shall not, as a result of such suspension, suffer a loss of numbers on the lineal list of their arm, corps, or department in excess of the number of casualties and retirements occurring in such arm or corps during the period of suspension among the officers senior to the officer suspended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to correct the lineal and relative rank of certain officers of the United States Army."

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 2 o'clock and 42 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 16, at 12 o'clock noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 15, 1910.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PRINTING AND BINDING FOR COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 394.

Resolved, That the Committee on Education be, and it is hereby, authorized to have such printing and binding done during the sessions of the Sixty-first Congress as may be necessary for the transaction of its business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would ask if this is not entirely new for that committee?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. It may be new, Mr. Speaker, but it is necessary. The fact that it is new is one indication that it is attending to its business.

Mr. PAYNE. Has it had any bill referred to it?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. It has, and it has had several hearings.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20686, the river and harbor appropriation bill; and pending that motion I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the District of Columbia have as much time on Thursday morning next as is consumed by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors this morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the Committee on the District of Columbia have as much time on Thursday next as is consumed in consideration of the river and harbor bill to-day. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Of course it is understood, Mr. Speaker, that after the river and harbor bill is disposed of to-day we have the balance of what is left of the day.

The SPEAKER. If this motion is agreed to, when this bill is disposed of, the District of Columbia business would come in automatically.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Was it not agreed on last week that the District should have next Friday in lieu of to-day?

The SPEAKER. No; the agreement was that it was to have to-day in lieu of yesterday as District day. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from New York that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20686, the river and harbor appropriation bill, with Mr. DALZELL in the chair.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I have the following amendment, which I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska is recognized to offer his amendment, and the Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of line 8, page 68, the following:

"And said board are hereby authorized to expend the sum of $100,000 of the amount above appropriated in making experiments as to the best and most practical method of preserving the banks of said channel."

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, the paragraph just read provides the Secretary of War shall appoint a board of three officers to consider and report upon the most economical and desirable plan of securing said channel. That is following the appropriation of $1,000,000 for the improvement of the Missouri River from its mouth to Kansas City. Now, the serious proposition in preserving the Missouri for navigation is to protect the banks of the stream. I think those who have made a study of the proposition will agree that it will be useless to try to make a navigable stream or improve the present navigation of the river unless the river can be kept within its banks. Now, the appointment of this board, as provided in this paragraph, if it is to report the best method of preserving the banks, it seems to me, ought to be coupled with the proposition to use some of the money appropriated to make experiments as to the best method of preserving these banks. Farther up the river some of the private citizens owning land along the river within the last few years have, at their own expense, experimented with a view to preserving the banks of the river and keeping the river within a certain channel and preventing it from leaving the old channel and cutting a new one. They have been wonderfully successful, I am informed, in a very simple method. They are interested and desire the Government to experiment further with this plan, or with any other plan that may be deemed advisable, having in view the protection of the banks of the stream, and it seems to me that in order to make this board effective, in order to permit it to do something practical, it ought to be allowed to use some of this money for the purpose of making these experiments. If it is not allowed to do that, it will simply be a board given authority to make a report without making any real investigations along those lines, and I appeal to the chairman of this committee to permit this small amount of this appropriation to be used in this way by this board for which the bill provides.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] evidently has not been a student of alluvial streams. The bank revetment is more than 25 years old. Every experiment known to engineering skill and science has been directed to it, and for more than two decades the revetment has been in operation and in construction that prove beyond all question it to be the proper construction for reveted caving banks. Now, this scheme that my good friend from Nebraska has in mind has been before the engineers time out of mind. It was passed over and turned aside, and gentlemen representing it have been before the Rivers and Harbors Committee. I will not say it is a ridiculous plan, but it is certainly most unfeasible——

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman permit——

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York (continuing). And I hope that it will not be injected into this bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Take the stretch from Jefferson City to Osage, of which so much has been said here within the last twenty-four hours. The revetments there have lasted fourteen years without any maintenance, and they are as good to-day as they were when put down, and you can not improve on that. Now, I will yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the gentleman, when he refers to the scheme as not being a practical one, does he have reference to the plan that was suggested before the committee by Mr. Paxton, of South Omaha?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes; and Captain Clark.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, I will ask the gentleman if it was not argued by Mr. Paxton before the committee that that particular plan, comparatively inexpensive, which they had used at their own expense, was found to be practical and that the banks were preserved in the most dangerous places on the river and are intact to-day and have kept up a great deal better than many of the banks that were attempted to be preserved by the very skilled and expert government engineers?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. No; I think nothing of the kind was in evidence before the committee, and subsequently I called the attention of the engineering board to the matter, and they seemed to know all about it and passed it over as a project entirely unfeasible and undesirable. I hope this amendment will not be injected into the bill.

Mr. BORLAND and Mr. HITCHCOCK rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] is recognized.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to support the amendment offered by my colleague from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], and in doing so I desire to say that while the government engineers in this work of controlling the Missouri River have doubtless done something by way of experimentation, yet it is also a well-understood fact in the West that the government engineers are prone to confine themselves to rather ancient methods of controlling this river, which in many respects differs from all other rivers in the country, and they are not willing to accept or even to experiment with the homely and cheaper methods which have been successfully used by people and sometimes by communities along the banks of the river.

Now, what my colleague, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], has said is true. The stock yards company of South Omaha, by a comparatively small expenditure, in using certain work of a homely kind, has succeeded absolutely in controlling the Missouri at the point where they sought to protect the mouth of the sewer of the South Omaha stock yards, and the men and the company which put in that work are confident if the engineers of the Government would carry out some experimentation with comparatively cheap devices, they would succeed in controlling the whole river front for thousands of miles by an expenditure of money much less than has been employed in the past. What the Speaker of the House of Representatives said on the floor here yesterday is true. That river can be made to do its own work very largely by the skillful direction of the current, and the great powers and forces of the river can be used. Instead of that the government engineers have in many cases put in expensive work of stone and masonry with the idea of controlling it.

Now, what my colleague seeks by this amendment is not to have the Government adopt the methods which have been experimented with in the West, but to have the government engineers experiment with them. We seek to have them open their eyes and, at least, make an attempt by the methods that have been found successful on a small scale, and we believe that these engineers, so wedded to their own devices and so prone to follow the instructions which they have received in schools and colleges, are not willing if left to themselves even to experiment with the devices which have been found practicable by those who know the peculiar habits of the Missouri River. All we ask is to have them test the expedients which have been tried and found successful on a small scale.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will not prevail. The proposition that the gentleman brings here is to use $100,000 out of the $1,000,000 appropriated for this permanent bank work in some kind of experiments to demonstrate the efficiency of certain kind of bank improvement. Now, I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the Missouri River was surveyed seventeen or eighteen years ago by the old Missouri River Commission, and while that body was in existence it had the power which the River and Harbor Committee by this bill hope to give to the War Department, namely, the power to proceed according to a general plan to control the regimen of the entire river. In that work by the Missouri River Commission thorough experimentation was carried on as to the methods of bank improvement, and I would like to call the attention of the committee to the report now before Congress on the Missouri River improvement on which this appropriation is based. This is the last report, Document 1120 of the House, made by the division engineer to the War Department and by it approved. It is as follows:

> When work was first undertaken on the Missouri River there was practically no information of value that could be applied to the control of the stream of such peculiar and individual physical characteristics. The original work therefore was of a tentative and experimental nature and was carried on at considerable expense over a period of years. The simplest and most inexpensive methods were first tried, and gradually through experience more stable structures were introduced, finally resulting in such a measure of success as to warrant the Missouri River Commission during the early part of its existence in adopting certain standard forms of dike and revetment work which were used on the greater part of the work in the first reach. The policy of the commission during its entire existence was to carry on a continuous and systematic work on the first reach rather than to protect isolated points. It was not possible, however, to carry out this policy, as the appropriations were inadequate and to a large extent were diverted by congressional action to other localities.

Then it goes on to say that in pursuance of that plan they completed 45 miles of stretch, which 45 miles has been in existence nearly seventeen years, between Jefferson City and Gasconade, and which to-day has the same depth as it had seventeen years ago; and those banks have practically no repairs.

Mr. NORRIS. I will admit candidly what you say, but does the gentleman feel because that is true experiments tending to try some cheaper and more economical and modern methods should not be tried? It does not follow because that is all true that no better and cheaper way could be found.

Mr. BORLAND. I understand what the gentleman refers to. The standard form of diking and revetment work has been established by experiment, and it costs approximately $50,000 per mile. I know that in South Omaha and also in Kansas City private parties have at a less expense done work on the banks which has proved of benefit to them, but has been of injury to the farming lands farther down the stream. They have destroyed in many cases the regimen of the stream by the private work that has been done, which has made practicable the improvement of their own land. Now, the proposition in this bill, which I want to see established once and for all, is to give full latitude to the War Department to improve the whole river on some scientific plan without any restriction put upon it by Congress. We hope this will continue for years without entering into these restrictive projects, but to proceed by certain scientific methods and course of treatment, approved by the experience of past years, entirely in charge of the Engineer Department.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to give them more liberty of action.

Mr. BORLAND. If the gentleman wants to do that, let him put in an amendment adding $100,000 for the purpose of experiment, but I do not want to take it out of the million for bank improvement.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. [Cries of "Vote!"] The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill about this item for $1,000,000 to be expended between Kansas City and the mouth of the river. I desire to know to what extent that will complete the improvement of that portion of the river.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. In accordance with the report made by Major Schulz, of the United States Engineers and the Board and Chief of Engineers, it will cost $20,000,000 for a 6-foot channel from Kansas City to the mouth of the Missouri. This appropriation is to be applied on that project.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Can the gentleman give us any information as to the probable cost of the improvement of the river above that point?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes. The report of Major Schulz covers it from Sioux City to Kansas City, and it will cost about $20,000,000 more.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Now I would like to ask the gentleman if this item on lines 11 to 14 may be used for maintenance or repair of projects that have been constructed heretofore on the river in addition to snagging?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. This improvement at Fort Benton to the mouth of the river is usually $350,000 for maintenance, practically for snagging; but that maintenance is cut in two, and we give $175,000 for this year, which is all the engineers ask or can spend this year.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to occupy the time of the committee in making extended remarks, but I do wish to say that, residing, as I do, in the Missouri Valley, I am very much gratified to know that the committee has seen fit to make some provision for the improvement of that river. There is no question of more vital importance to the people of the Northwest than the improvement of the Missouri River with a view to its better navigation, and now that it is proposed by the pending bill to undertake its improvement by the expenditure of $1,000,000 for that portion of the river below Kansas City, I very much hope that further and larger appropriation will be made in future Congresses for the carrying on of the work, until the channel proposed from the mouth to Kansas City can be continued to the upper portions of the river as far as Fort Benton. It is my opinion from reports that have been made on the subject that money could be well expended in impounding the waters of the streams tributary to the upper portion of the river, and I hope that is a subject which will receive consideration by Congress in the near future. I regret that there is not a larger sum appropriated by the bill for the maintenance of the upper Missouri, and yet in view of the report made by the committee declaring in favor of the improvement of this river, I am willing to accept the amount stated.

Mr. Chairman, I want to incorporate in my remarks that part of the report made by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors on the subject of the Missouri River, found on pages 9, 10, and 11 of the report, as follows:

MISSOURI RIVER.

This river has a continuous navigable length of 2,285 miles from its mouth, about 17½ miles above St. Louis, Mo., to Fort Benton, Mont., and has been used for over two hundred years. It has been actually navigated by steamboats for ninety years, and between 1820 and 1880 it was the main factor in the development and building up of the western country, being of incalculable value and importance for transportation purposes during the greater portion of that period. In 1867 43 steamboats cleared from St. Louis for the upriver trade, the freight both up and down being large and valuable, the passenger traffic alone being over 10,000. In the same year 28 clearances were made for the middle river and 212 for the lower river. During the year 1877, 25 steamers arrived at Fort Benton, and in 1878 there were 46 arrivals at that point. This commerce increased up to 1885, at which time there were two distinct boating sections—Sioux City, Iowa, being the dividing point—19 boats traversing the upper river and 18 being devoted exclusively to the lower. About this time, however, the commerce began to decline, and has continued to do so.

Owing to the difficulties attending navigation and the great expansion of the railroad system throughout the adjacent territory, the commerce that utilized the river for transportation was diverted to the railroads, so that the use of the river as a highway is at present almost insignificant. That this decrease is primarily due to the difficulties of navigation is plainly inferable when one considers the vast increase in population and production of this territory, an increase that has become so enormous that the capacity of the railroads is inadequate to move the commodities seeking transportation. The territory naturally tributary to this river comprises an area of more than 300,000 square miles, equal to the whole of the New England, Middle, and a large part of the Southern States.

The crop production alone of this area amounted in 1907 to 25,000,000 tons, with a value of $500,000,000, while the meat products of four cities located on the river amounted to about 800,000 tons. In addition to this the manufactures of four States through which the river flows, or touches, approaches nearly a billion dollars in value. That a large percentage of these commodities does not seek transportation by water, especially when the various railroads are unable to handle it expeditiously, must be due to the fact that existing conditions do not permit of the river's economical utilization.

The first work done by the Government in this river was in 1838, and since that time the total expenditures amount to about $11,500,000. Originally, improvement work consisted of snagging, removal of shoals, and bank protection at widely separated points, and it was not until the river was placed in charge of the Missouri River Commission, in 1884, that any systematic improvement was begun. An effort was made by the commission to accomplish continuous, progressive control of the river, contracting it where necessary, giving the channel proper direction, and securely holding it in place.

Work in this direction was done in the vicinity of Kansas City and on the reach of the river which extends from Jefferson City to the mouth. On 45 miles of this reach a continuous channel not less than 6 feet in depth at low water was obtained, where the depth before was only 2½ feet. This was originally one of the worst parts of the river, with especially difficult conditions in the vicinity of the mouth of the Osage River. In addition to securing a permanent channel, much new land was formed and much land protected from destruction by the river.

This particular work, executed at a cost of about $56,000 per mile, consisted of 65,000 feet of revetment and 104,000 feet of dike construction. Its durability and permanency are shown by the fact that since completion, twelve years ago, the yearly percentage of the original work destroyed has been of revetment only 2.3 per cent and of dikes only 3.9 per cent.

Since the commission was abolished by the river and harbor act of June 13, 1902, the appropriations for this river have been too sporadic and limited in amount to admit of any extensive systematic work equal to that on the 45-mile reach above mentioned, but the results achieved, as well as the experience since gained, show the entire feasibility of such a plan of improvement, and it is believed that the time has now arrived when Congress is warranted in adopting a plan similar to that of the commission, and by generous appropriations place the river in a condition to attract the commerce of which it is capable. Instead of spreading small appropriations over the whole length of the stream, and expending them at widely separated localities, thorough and systematic improvement of important reaches, beginning at the mouth, should be provided for and completed successively.

Accordingly this bill carries an appropriation of $1,000,000 for such an improvement between Kansas City and the mouth, a distance of 391 miles, in accordance with the project set forth and fully discussed in the reports of the War Department printed in House Document No. 1120, Sixtieth Congress, second session.

On this reach of the river the maximum draft at mean low water is 4 feet only; yet notwithstanding this small depth, commerce increased during the past year, and it is understood that, in addition to the boats now navigating between Kansas City and St. Louis, liberal preparations are being made and considerable capital is being invested in a new and modern transportation line between these and intermediate points.

With an improved river and reliable and easy navigation established, the growth of water-borne commerce would, it is believed, quickly develop, and the saving to shippers through cheaper rates by water, as compared with railroad rates, would in a few years exceed the cost of the improvement. Taking the shipments of Kansas City alone, and assuming that only 20 per cent of it would seek water transportation, there is abundant authority for the belief that at least 1,000,000 tons annually would soon be accommodated by an improved river. The improvement of the lower river should be undertaken and completed first, for the reason that no growth of commerce on a stream can be expected until it is opened and improved to its mouth, in order to give an outlet.

Moreover, the thorough improvement of this reach of the river would be an advantage, not only to commerce, but large areas of land would be protected and reclaimed. This river is one of the most destructive on the globe. The local engineer reports that every change in velocity or direction of current means new erosion and subsequent partial deposit, causing untold loss in value of land and products. He estimates the bottom land threatened, or to be benefited, on this reach at more than 500,000 acres, worth in the neighborhood of $50,000,000, or two and a half times what the entire improvement is expected to cost. This indicates that cooperation on the part of the local interests may be required, as it has been on the Mississippi below Cairo, and a special board is provided for to reconsider the project with a view to special consideration of the question of cooperation.

Your committee, therefore, are of the opinion that, measured by its capacity for improvement, and the possibility of its use as a highway for an increasing commerce, and considering the advantages and accommodation it would prove to a rapidly growing population, the systematic improvement of this river, in the manner proposed, is most worthy of favorable consideration.

I was very glad yesterday to hear the chairman of the committee state that it is now the policy of his committee to report annually a river and harbor bill. I believe that the conclusion is a wise one, promising, as it does, the return to a policy that I am sure will have the approval of the people. It will afford, as he stated, an opportunity for many projects having merit, to receive consideration which otherwise would be overlooked and neglected, and in view of the concluding statement from the report just read, I am sure that when the committee reports a bill in the next session of Congress it will be disposed to treat the Missouri River very much more liberally, so far as appropriations are concerned, than has been done in the present bill.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may print in the RECORD as a part of my remarks an address delivered at the Missouri Navigation Congress, at Omaha, on December 15, 1909, by Hon. Bartlett Tripp, of Yankton, S. Dak., formerly chief justice of Dakota Territory, and formerly minister to Austria-Hungary. The address deals with the improvement of the Missouri River and presents strong argument and valuable information on the subject, all of which I most heartily indorse and concur in.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE MISSOURI RIVER.

Mr. President and gentlemen of the Missouri River Congress:

No question is of greater interest to the people of the West than the improvement of navigation on our inland lakes and rivers, and no question of more vital importance to us of the Northwest than the immediate improvement and early navigation of the Missouri River. These congresses have been a means of education to our people. They have brought to our knowledge some of the obstacles to be overcome and have presented for our consideration the means to be employed in the opening and establishing its successful navigation, and have taught us the necessity and importance of such action at the present time.

Our friends along the Atlantic coast have never had any accurate knowledge of the size of the Missouri River or of the extent and character of the country it drains. On one of my visits to Maine, my native State, at the time when steamboats were carrying freight to all points of the upper river, in conversation with a former chief justice of the supreme court of that State he remarked: "You live at Yankton; let me see, that, I believe, is at the head of navigation on the Missouri River." And when I replied, "No, judge, steamboats go a long way above Yankton," he asked, "How far?" and to my reply, "About 2,300 miles," he rejoined, "You have learned to tell as big yarns as the rest of those western people." To those who have never visited the West, whose lands in the East are divided into small farms and whose largest rivers do not exceed a few hundred miles in length, it is difficult to give an accurate conception of the immensity of the West, the size of its rivers, the extent and richness of its prairies, and the development and possibilities of its resources. We ourselves scarcely realize the size of this immense river and the magnitude of the country which is tributary thereto. With its branches and tributaries it waters and drains that entire region of country from a south line through about the center of Missouri, Kansas, and Colorado north to the British possessions, a distance of nearly 700 miles, and from an east line through about the center of the States of Iowa and Minnesota west to the Rocky Mountains, a distance varying from 700 to 1,000 miles and containing between 600,000 and 700,000 square miles, or more than one-fourth of the arable land of the United States. This entire region is rich in natural resources; it contains the great cornfields of northern Missouri and Kansas, of Nebraska and western Iowa, the splendid wheat fields of the Dakotas and western Minnesota, while its western prairies have for years furnished a large proportion of the beef that supplies the markets of the world. But a few days ago 8 train loads, containing more than 6,000 head of cattle on their way to eastern markets, passed through the little town of Yankton, where I live, in a single day; and the agent informed me that his road will average during the shipping season from 500 to 1,000 head per day. This is but one branch of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul system, and it is presumed that the other branches of this road, as well as those of the Northwestern and Minneapolis and St. Louis, the Burlington, Great Northern, and Northern Pacific and other roads that tap the great cattle country of this region are each carrying an equal amount. The mineral wealth, too, is immense. Gold and silver abound. The Homestake, of the Black Hills, is the largest gold-producing mine in the world. Copper, tin, and lead are found in abundance. Coal, too, is now believed to exist in valuable and inexhaustible quantities. The Wyoming mines have long supplied an excellent coal for the roads and for manufacturing and mining purposes, and more recent discoveries have very definitely determined that a large portion of the central and western Dakotas is underlaid with an excellent kind of lignite coal suitable for fuel and for manufacturing uses. These great beds are in close proximity to the Missouri River and can readily supply an immense freight for its navigation. Our active and energetic president, the governor of North Dakota, has advertised the merits of this coal by sending a carload to warm the auditorium in which we are assembled. On the north, too, the immense iron fields (a small portion only of which extend into this area), together with the wheat fields of the Northwest, are now sending through the Soo Canal a tonnage six times as large as that of the Suez Canal itself. All of these developments are new; they have been made within the lifetime of many of us comprising this congress. This entire country was classed in our student's geography as the "Great American Desert." If such results have accrued in one or two generations, what may we not expect when irrigation and immigration shall have done their work and made the last trace of the great desert disappear?

This magnificent domain with its developed resources and its future possibilities is cut diagonally from its southeast to its northwest corner by the Missouri River and its great tributary, the Yellowstone. Its length is given by geographers at 2,900 and the Yellowstone at about 1,300 miles; but with their meanderings the entire length is much greater, and their navigation is something about 4,000 miles. A better idea of the size of the great Missouri River is obtained, however, by comparing it with the other tributaries of the Mississippi itself. The length of the Ohio is given at 1,265 and that of the upper Mississippi at 1,330 miles, and the drainage of the entire Mississippi Valley, including all its tributaries—the Red, Arkansas, Missouri, upper Mississippi, and the Ohio—is placed at 1,244,000 square miles, while the drainage of the Missouri alone is given at 518,000, or approaching one-half of the entire amount. Is there doubt that the Missouri is the true source of the "Father of Waters?" That the early nomenclature was determined by ignorance or fraud?

Although these facts present an unanswerable argument in favor of the immediate opening and improvement of the navigation of the river, we are still met by the inquiry, "Why has your navigation ceased? What has become of the fleets of steamboats that used to carry the military, Indian, and mining supplies to the upper forts, agencies, and mines?" This question is easily answered. It is true that in the late seventies and early eighties large fleets of steamboats, comprising the Coulston, Kountz, Power, and other lines, transported an immense tonnage up the Missouri and Yellowstone rivers. The Montana mines and forts and agencies were mainly supplied by this means of transportation. The Dakota Southern Railroad, from Sioux City to Yankton, was at that time the only railroad in the entire territory of Dakota, and but few roads had extended farther west than the centers of Iowa and Minnesota. Yankton was therefore the highest point on the Missouri River reached by rail, and it thus became a busy shipping point during the spring and early summer of each year. It was no unusual thing to see a dozen boats at one time, of the different lines, there loading or waiting to load for all points on the upper river. This continued down to the great flood of 1881. During the winter of 1880–81 about a dozen boats, the finest of the Missouri River fleets, were drawn up on the ways and in winter quarters at Yankton. The breaking up of the river and gorging of the ice below Yankton in the early spring threw the river out of its banks, carried these splendid vessels from their ways, sent some of them miles inland upon the prairies, and broke up and destroyed the entire fleet. Perhaps not a single vessel was saved from the terrible wreckage, and what was true at Yankton was true, in a measure, of the other boats at different harbors along the entire river. It was almost a total destruction of the tonnage upon the Missouri River. Some few of the vessels were repaired and afterwards used in short trips upon the lower river, but nearly all were a total loss. This occurred at a time, too, when railroads had begun to push into the Far West; and from 1881 on for several years more railroads were constructed in this region of country in a single year than have been built in any period of ten years since that time. The Northern Pacific crossed the Territory to Bismarck, the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul to Chamberlain, the Northwestern to Pierre, and what navigation was left on the Missouri River extended from Bismarck north and between intermediate points below. The trend of commerce was from Chicago west. New Orleans, St. Louis, and other cities of the lower river, to whom the commerce of the upper river naturally belonged, never awakened to their opportunity until it was lost. The railroads carrying goods from Chicago made a rate, too, with which no boat stemming the rapid current and hazarding the snags and quicksands of the Missouri River dared or could compete, for the voyage was not only a long and hazardous one, but the boat got no freight back and was obliged to return with empty decks. The Northern Pacific and the Great Northern, too, shortly afterwards extended their lines so as to reach most of the forts, agencies, and mines to which freight had formerly been carried by boats, and as no competition on the part of St. Louis and the cities of the lower river was attempted or offered to the trade which Chicago had established by her rail connection with the West, and as the railroads neither offered nor permitted facilities for connections with river navigation at competing points, there was nothing for navigation companies to do but to quit and remove their boats to the lower river or allow them to lie idle and rot at the wharves. A few boats now have begun again to ply between the larger towns reached by the railroads and those intermediate between the lines of roads, but this has come about within the last few years, since land along the river has been opened up into farms, and large cities have been built, and it has been found that heavy freights and the products of the farms, such as cattle, hogs, and grain, can be shipped to Sioux City and other towns of the lower river at a low rate, and that boats otherwise returning empty can bring back merchandise and farmers' supplies at a rate cheaper than they can be transported by rail. In this way a number of boats have been brought into service within the last few years on the river between Kansas City and St. Louis and above Sioux City and Yankton; and others, I learn, are building for this trade along the upper and lower river.

It is the down freight, however, upon which we must depend to maintain navigation upon the Missouri River, and it is the knowledge of the fact that down-river freight on these western rivers can be transported cheaper than anywhere else in the world that is bringing about the revolution in the trend of trade. Look for a moment at the price at which Pittsburg is now transporting her coal down the Ohio and Mississippi rivers to New Orleans. The tables of statistics tell us that it costs the farmer, on an average, 25 cents per ton per mile to deliver his grain at the elevator. It costs him 7.80 mills to transport the same by rail. On our Erie Canal it costs 3 mills and on foreign canals 2 mills, but on the Great Lakes, from Superior to Buffalo, for coal and iron ore, they have made a rate of 0.3 of a mill per ton, and this has been decreased by a small margin in the rate recently made on coal from Pittsburg to New Orleans. More than 26 times as cheap as freight by rail. Give us a channel, free from bars and snags, and we can duplicate this rate from all Missouri points to the Gulf. Why not? The current of the Missouri River is slightly more rapid than that of the Ohio, and gives us a propelling power of over 4 miles an hour without expense of gas or steam, and we have a still greater advantage which every steamboat man appreciates, that no locks will be required along the entire Missouri as on the Ohio River.

These possibilities of decreased rates of freight; the experiments already made in the shipment of wheat, cotton, and other products from southern points to the markets of the world; the opening of the western route by way of the Isthmus of Tehuantepec and the prospective opening of the Panama Canal has turned the eyes of all commercial men to the South. The owners of great continental lines—Hill, Harriman, and Hawley—have already extended their roads to ports on the Gulf, and enough lines of road are now projected on paper, from Winnipeg and other towns of the North in the direction of the Gulf, to reach every hamlet and cross-roads of the entire West. This is not a mere bubble of speculation, nor mere illusion of frenzied finance. The proposed movement of freight to the Gulf has its origin in good business sense. Heavy freights must move by economical rules along the lines of least resistance, and these great valleys of the Missouri, Mississippi, and Ohio rivers, which for all time will furnish the heavy freights of commerce, have for most of the way a sea level or an elevation not exceeding 1,200 feet, and shippers will not contentedly submit to the long haul by rail over an elevation of 5,000 and 8,000 feet to reach the sea of either coast when by river, favored by its current, they can ship direct to the sea and the markets of the world.

Chicago has studied these problems, and her enthusiastic business men, on the recent trip to New Orleans, created an atmosphere rather warm for some of the conservative statesmen of the present day. It is not wild enthusiasm with Chicago. It is the same good business sagacity that has made that city the metropolis of the West. It is the same good sense she exhibited when she extended her roads to the West and captured the trade and commerce of the great Missouri Valley, and she will make her way with deep water to the Gulf. She will then have an open entrance to her port nine months of the year instead of three months through the frozen river of the North. The cry is now going up from every western valley "To the sea!" It is the same cry that went up from the returning Greeks under Xenophon in the "Retreat of the ten thousand," as they approached the shores of the Euxine. This congress must take up the cry, and from this time on let every town of the Missouri Valley pick up the refrain "To the sea! To the sea!"

In the short time still allowed me I beg leave to discuss the methods and manner by which this improvement can be made.

It can only be done by the Government and at its expense, and as every legislator must take into consideration the interest of his fellow-members, in order to determine who may be counted as friends and who enemies of his bill, so we must naturally look for friends of this improvement to the great valleys of the West. It is not to be presumed that New England, New York, and the Atlantic coast will be enthusiastic for improvement of these great waterways of the West, which will take commerce from and not to their ports. The statesmen of New York can hardly be relied upon to support with energy a measure calculated to build up the commerce of New Orleans, Galveston, and other southern ports in competition with her own.

There are men large enough, like Mr. Hill, who can see that moving heavy freights by the Gulf will not work to injury of his overland roads, for such roads are already congested and he can see that for all time they will be kept busy in carrying light and time freights to the ocean and the West. So some statesmen of the Empire State also may be found broad enough and big enough to foresee that New York will not materially suffer by deflecting heavy freights to the South. New York must and will be for all coming time the great eastern entrepôt through which passengers and rapid freights must enter and depart. And will probably long continue to be, as it now is, the great financial center of our country. But this argument will not appeal strongly to our friends of the East and we must rely upon the great States of the Middle West and South for zealous aid and support.

A friend tells me of a pious lady whose little daughter, attracted by the profanity she had heard upon the street, made such use of it to her dolls and in conversation as to shock the fond parent. In vain she chided, coaxed, and punished, and she finally appealed to her pastor, who, on one of his visits, took the little child upon his knees and having won its confidence with sweetmeats and kind words approached the subject of the naughty language. "I am sorry to hear," he said, "that my little girl sometimes uses naughty words." "Who told you?" she quickly asked. "Oh, a little bird," he said, "whispered it in my ear." When, turning upon him with her frank, glittering eyes she exclaimed "I'll bet it was one of those d—d nasty sparrows." The sparrow is the fighter and standpatter of the feathered race. Chicago has found sparrows among her friends and we shall find them among ours. We must see to this and from the seats in the next House of Representatives all sparrows must be plucked and cast out. The interest of the entire West upon this great question is one and the same. When we help Chicago to obtain deep water to the Gulf we are helping the future navigation of all the tributaries of the great river. The great obstacle we have immediately to overcome is to turn the direction of freights from the East and West to the South, and when Chicago becomes our ally in this great fight the victory is nearly won. She will not only man the lower river with boats and barges but her capital will secure ocean carriage that will transport the products of all these western valleys to the markets of the world. We must see to it that no man hereafter has a seat in either House of Congress who is not broad enough and brainy enough to work for our united interest and who will be so far removed from personal and selfish interest as not to imperil a bill intended for the good of all, in order to be able to attach to it an appropriation for the improvement of some creek or rivulet of the district from which he comes. Such has been too often the governing influence in our river and harbor bills of the past—the pork barrel to which Mr. Taft so properly refers. We must select to build up the commerce of the West such talent as our great corporations select to build up the great business interests of the world.

Let us now discuss for a moment what improvements we are going to ask our Congress to make. We shall never get anything until we ask for it and demand it, and Congress will never know what to grant us unless we ourselves know what we want.

The Missouri River, which rises in the glaciers and eternal snows of the great mountain ranges of the West, has little in common with the rivers that have their source in the hills and lower elevations of the East. It is subject to different natural laws and its improvements must be governed by different rules. The Missouri River is subject each year to two great floods, one in March and the other in June. The first is caused by the early thawing of the snows on the prairies and in the foothills. The second by the melting of the snow in the mountains. It is these floods that cause the damage to farms and property along the upper river and that burst the levees and flood the bottom lands below. They fill the channel with snags, sands, and débris and the falling river seeks a new channel along some portion of the bed covered by the flood or by avulsion rends the alluvial soil of the prairie bank and cuts its way through the cultivated farms and bottom lands adjoining the former bed. Along the entire river extends a strip of land varying from a mile to several miles in width, covered by the river at high water and by sand, willows, and small trees when the floods of spring subside. It is the falling river that does the damage to adjoining lands. It is seeking a new channel and when it can not find a satisfactory one within the flooded land it rends the banks and adds another strip to its neutral zone. The rapidity with which the falling river swallows up adjoining lands can scarcely be comprehended or believed. The rapid current burrows under the alluvial banks and whole quarter sections and even sections of land will disappear in a single night.

The National Conservation Commission, of which Gifford Pinchot was chairman, in its report of January 11, 1909, placed the amount of soil annually carried into the lower rivers and harbors by floods at 780,000,000 tons and the "annual loss to farms alone at $500,000,000." This, of course, is for the entire country, but the bulk of this waste and loss is in these great valleys of the Mississippi. The estimated loss here given does not include losses to forest and uncultivated lands, nor to mills, machinery, etc., nor to indirect losses to navigation by changing channels, destruction of dams, canals, etc. More than $100,000,000 can be conservatively added for such losses, and we would then have an annual loss of $600,000,000, or more than twice the amount needed to complete deep waterways from Chicago to the Gulf and make the Missouri River navigable from its upper waters to the mouth. Is it extravagant to ask the Government to expend for this improvement and to stop this waste one-half of the amount of loss sustained in a single year?

Minds will undoubtedly differ as to how the yearly destruction by these floods may be stayed and this river made available for moving the increasing freights of the great Northwest to the sea. The kindly way in which this Congress was pleased to take my suggestions at its last meeting, however, leads me again to repeat that, in my judgment, the proper method is to erect dams on all the principal tributaries of the upper river and impound these floods of spring in great lakes and reservoirs for the benefit of navigation and irrigation. Dams for this purpose can be erected at an expense of from a few hundred thousand to a few million dollars each, and one or two such dams erected on every tributary of the Missouri River would not cost perhaps one-fourth the damage done to property by these floods in a single year; besides we are not only staying the damage by these floods and improving navigation, but we are storing water which can be utilized for irrigating thousands of acres of otherwise barren and worthless land. In addition to this, as the settlements extend these dams will furnish a power for electricity which can be utilized within a radius of at least a hundred miles, and it is not an idle prophecy to foretell that the revenues to be derived from such source alone within a generation will pay for the expenditure to be made.

The great Pathfinder dam on the Sweetwater and that at the Belle Fourche, though erected for irrigation alone, are found already to have their effects upon the floods of spring. This, in my judgment, is not only the true method of Missouri River improvement, but it is one that will appeal to Congress itself and the people at large. Immigration must be provided for, the lands that can be cultivated without irrigation are nearly exhausted, and the Government has wisely turned its attention to storing the waters of the great rivers of the West and making farms out of the great arid plains for the insistent settler whose eyes are still turned to the great West. We can command no attention from the East to our tales of woe. We can obtain no appropriations to prevent the floods of spring from destroying our farms and forests, but we can interest the entire country in providing homes for the settler upon the national domain, and it is immaterial to us for what purpose the appropriations be made if they accomplish the results we desire. We should then in the Middle West unite to urge upon the attention of Congress the necessity of damming the affluents and tributaries of the Missouri River and storing their waters for immediate use. Maps can easily be drawn showing the amount of water for each stream, the amount of land that can be irrigated thereby, and the cost and expenditure necessary to construct a wall that will hold back the waters of spring, with gates and sluices to turn them upon the land or back into its own channel to improve navigation of the main river in summer and in fall as may be required. The amount of money that has been expended in basket making and levee building along this river in the past ten years would more than build all these storage dams, and we would have been saved these losses of property and have navigation already well advanced along the entire river. You might as well send some old woman with a willow basket to turn the tide of the Missouri River at flood as to place these willow revetments along the temporary bank of last year's channel. At flood tide they are covered from sight, and the new channel of the falling river is as likely to drop outside as inside of the channel marked out for it by the engineer; but when the tributaries of the river are dammed and their spring floods imprisoned at their sources and the spring rise of the main river is dependent upon the melting of snows along its banks alone permanent channels can be established and then revetments and other appropriate means can be employed to make the river bed permanent and deep.

The Missouri River, with its rapid quicksand channel, establishes for itself, as every river man knows, a kind of jetty which clears itself of all obstructions and deepens its own channel as may be required.

We can not do all this at once; it is not to be presumed that we can obtain an appropriation sufficient in amount to impound the waters of all the tributaries at one time, but we can select for each year's appropriation some one affluent, such as the Yellowstone, which sends down each year more red and yellow mud to mark the line of the Missouri from St. Louis to the Gulf than all the others combined. This great river, too, furnishes a splendid field for irrigation. Let us begin by fettering and improving it, and when the experiment shall have proved its success, further appropriations can be easily obtained until the channel of the Missouri River shall have become fixed and permanent and its navigation assured.

In the meantime we must urge immediate navigation of the river as it is. The proof to the world that a river is navigable is to navigate it. Freights can be carried down the river in its present condition, notwithstanding its bars and snags, cheaper than it can be carried by rail, and until the channel can be permanently fixed by staying the floods of spring we must demand from the Government an increased number of snag boats and the use of revertments, not to attempt to maintain a permanent channel, but to prevent cutting of the alluvial and higher banks and thus confine the flooded river to the sphere it has already marked out for itself; and in this way we will obtain a temporary relief and demonstrate to the world that the Missouri River is now and has ever been a navigable stream.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I have a newspaper clipping I would like to have read by the Clerk, and I would like my particular friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], to listen to the reading of this article. During the course of the debate yesterday afternoon it occurred to me that he was unnecessarily critical of the appropriations proposed in this bill for the Mississippi River when he compared that river unfavorably, of course, with projects in which he himself is deeply interested. He referred to the fact that there was a great tonnage on the Delaware and but little on the Mississippi River. I want to submit, first, Mr. Chairman, that the sole test of the value of a waterway to the people is not the tonnage actually floated upon it. We should consider also the capacity of the stream to bear tonnage. This proposition has been so frequently elaborated and is so clearly self-evident that I shall do no more now than restate it.

The tonnage of the Mississippi River is small in comparison with the tonnage of the Delaware, small in comparison with its own former tonnage, but a few years ago its tonnage was twice as great as the tonnage now of the great port of Philadelphia. But in advocating its reasonable improvement in the days of its glory the Representatives from the valley did not point to its then unequaled tonnage in disparagement of further appropriations for the Atlantic seaboard. They simply endeavored to convince the Representatives from the seaboard that the inland waters were necessary adjuncts—feeders—for the ports, and in advocating improvement of these Atlantic ports gentlemen have heretofore come before our committee and endeavored to convince us that the people back inland were deeply interested in the ports, and I believe it.

The great tonnage that passes through the port of Philadelphia, the great tonnage that passes through all these Atlantic ports, could never reach them but for the transportation facilities to the interior which are furnished either by nature or by the enterprise of man. In other words, Philadelphia neither creates her exports nor consumes her imports. They simply pass through her gates to and from the interior. There is no valley in this world comparable in its production to the valley of the Mississippi. In addition to the unmeasurable value of its mines and its forests there are produced in it more than $5,000,000,000 annually in manufactures and the products of agriculture. Would any gentleman ask that that mighty empire be subjected to the monopoly of the railroads in transporting its products to the seashore? If this great river is to be abandoned as a navigable highway that will be the result. The testimony of experts before us has demonstrated by citation of railroad rates now in effect that the Mississippi River controls and regulates railroad rates from the seaboard as far west as the city of Denver. And let me further suggest that the amount of revenue paid at the port of Philadelphia into the Federal Treasury has nothing to do with the case. No one will seriously contend that the citizens of that most important port pay more than their per capita of the imposts collected there. The Federal Government does not levy its taxes on property, and the only basis for calculating the amount of taxes paid it by any city or State is its population. By this test the Mississippi Valley pays one-third of the taxes which go to defray the expenses of the Government to-day, amounting to $1,000,000,000 annually. More than 30,000,000 busy souls are producing wealth in values beyond the dreams of avarice in this great valley, and all statesmen agree that unless their waterways are improved so as to give them proper transportation facilities and reasonable rates they will be seriously handicapped in their activities.

The present water-borne tonnage is small, and the cost of the proposed improvement is great, but the cost of the Panama Canal is many times greater, and its most ardent advocate will hardly venture the opinion that it will ever float the American tonnage now carried by the Mississippi and its great tributaries. Two hundred million for the Mississippi, the Missouri, and the Ohio is a staggering figure, but, Mr. Chairman, if this whole burden were put upon the inhabitants of the valley alone, how inconsiderable it is when we recall that there would be more than 30,000,000 people to pay it, and that the pay day is to run through twenty years. Less than 50 cents each a year! Small wonder, then, that the opposition has been practically withdrawn and the discussion narrowed to the question of how best to proceed. There is but one way, and that is the way recommended by the engineers of the army. They have recommended the same method for twenty years, but until now Congress has not yielded to their advice.

Now, I want the Clerk to read from a newspaper I received this morning the article I referred to a moment ago and which tells the whole story of the decadence of the traffic on the lower river.

I will ask the attention of gentlemen while the Clerk reads.

The Clerk read as follows:

"BELLE OF THE BENDS" MAY BE LOST—REPORT THAT MAGNIFICENT STEAMER IN THE VICKSBURG-GREENVILLE TRADE IS ON A SAND BAR NEAR HAYS LANDING—"FALLS CITY," IN HER PLACE, EXPECTED TO-NIGHT.

[From the Greenville (Miss.) Democrat.]

News was received here last night that the beautiful steamer Belle of the Bends was aground at Hays Landing, just below Mayersville, and may be a total wreck. She is commanded by Capt. Gus Nimps.

It is reported that the Belle ran on a sand bar with only about 2 feet of water. The river is falling rapidly, and it is feared that in a short time her hull will break in two.

The Falls City is on her way to Greenville and will distribute the passengers and freight of the ill-fated boat to their destinations along the line. She is expected about midnight.

The Belle of the Bends is owned and operated by the Morrissey Line and is the only side-wheel boat running on the Mississippi River below Arkansas City. While the chances are reported slim, it is hoped that she will soon be afloat again.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Here, then, is one continuously contributing cause which has helped to destroy the traffic on the lower river during the past twenty years. The banks cave and form these bars, which can not be located until the flood recedes, and so they render hazardous and greatly impair the navigability of the river. We are told by the engineers that the earth which caves into the river between the mouth of the Ohio and the mouth of the Red River is sufficient to fill it bank full for a distance of 30 miles every year.

Another fact: The sediment brought out of the Missouri River and carried into the Mississippi at St. Louis exactly equals the sediment which the river carries at the Head of the Passes. In other words, all the earth which caves into the river between those two points in effect remains there, and there is but one possible way of removing permanently this element of obstruction, and that is by the methods proposed by the engineers and for which the appropriation carried in this bill will be expended; and when that is done, when it becomes a physical possibility for great fleets to float in safety in that river at all stages of its floods, traffic will again appear and the criticism that the river is not a freight carrier will no longer be pertinent, because it will not be true.

Writing of this feature of the problem, Judge Taylor, a member of the Mississippi River Commission, recently said:

It is a disappointment to us all that commerce has not taken advantage of the increased channel depths in the Mississippi from St. Louis to New Orleans, as they have been developed within ten years past. But the reasons are not far to seek. The first is the uncertainty of their permanent maintenance. They depend upon annual appropriations by Congress.

It will take some strong, courageous, optimistic man, or group of men, to make a start in the navigation of the Mississippi below Cairo. Once started on a foundation of confidence it will grow. If there were a channel 10 feet deep from Chicago to New Orleans to-day, with public confidence in its permanence, it would be crowded with boats within ten years. If we postpone work for a "demand" and discover no demand until we see men standing on the bank with money in their hands, there will never be any improved waterways. God Almighty did not wait for a demand from commerce before he made the Great Lakes.

Everybody is afraid of the Mississippi River. The people who live in its alluvial valley are afraid of its floods; steamboat men are afraid of its bars. The inhabitants are just beginning to take courage. The water has been held at bay for ten years. But an extraordinary flood, a few bad crevasses and the inundation of four or five thousand square miles would plunge them into a despair again from which it would take a long time to recover. We have had a 9-foot low-water channel below Cairo nearly all the time for a little less than ten years. But it has not been entirely trustworthy. There have been some slips in the management of the dredges and some bars have gotten ahead of us for a few days a few times. Not often, nor for long, but enough to keep alive the sense of uncertainty. So men who would build big boats to navigate it wait, and keep waiting.

Judge Taylor is a man of such recognized ability, learning, and sound judgment that I quote him with some confidence, although he is not an engineer. During his more than twenty years' study of the problems of the river as a member of the Mississippi River Commission he has acquired such a fund of information on the subject and has digested it all so thoroughly that there is no one to whom the Rivers and Harbors Committee listens with greater interest and confidence. From this same article, "An emergency in the life of a river," I quote again:

To a traveler on the Mississippi at low water the most interesting feature of the landscape is the sand bars piled up along the channel, 10, 20, 30 feet high, miles in length and thousands of acres in area. Where does the material in them come from, and how does it get there? It comes from the caving bends above, from which it is transported only a short distance, to be deposited as soon as and wherever the current falls off in its velocity. The Mississippi River is a great freight carrier. It classifies its freight to a nicety. It carries some fine sediments from the Missouri River to the Gulf of Mexico. Some coarse stuff it rolls along the bottom out of the bend and up the next bar, to leave it there. Intermediate between these it lifts, floats, pushes, or rolls the particles, according to their specific gravity and the velocity of the current at the moment. But by far the greater part of the material which forms its bars is moved only a short distance. If the caving were stopped, the bars would speedily shrink to small proportions. This is the way to a 14-foot channel—revetment of the banks to reduce bar building to a minimum, and dredging for the balance.

After hesitating for many years the committee has at last recognized what the engineers have all along declared, that there could be no permanent work of improvement of the river without revetting the banks so as to prevent caving. Nineteen years ago one of the most interesting hearings ever had on this subject was held by the Senate Committee on Commerce, and some of the most distinguished engineers of the corps appeared and gave their opinions at length. General Comstock, at that time president of the Mississippi River Commission, gave a most interesting and instructive account of the treatment of alluvial streams here and in every part of the world, evidencing the broadest knowledge of the subject. He gave it as his opinion then that the caving banks of the river should be revetted, but the estimated cost seemed too great to justify the committee in undertaking it.

Lieutenant-Colonel Suter, of the Engineer Corps, was also before the committee at this hearing, and his testimony is most interesting. He had been connected with the Mississippi River for about twenty-five years, and was at that time a member of the Mississippi River Commission. His testimony is so illuminating that I will quote it at length:

Senator GIBSON. You stated a moment ago, in reply to a question by the chairman, that if you were improving the Mississippi River, even if it were running through a wilderness, if the country through which it ran was not peopled you would still build levees on the banks.

Lieutenant-Colonel SUTER. Yes, sir.

Senator GIBSON. Why do you hold that opinion?

Lieutenant-Colonel SUTER. Because I consider that the improvement of the stream for navigable purposes; without it is impossible.

The CHAIRMAN. Why?

Lieutenant-Colonel SUTER. I think you have got to retain control over the whole volume of water. The discharge which passes within the banks is less than half of the flood discharge of the river, and the low-water discharge is only about one-tenth of that which passes within the banks, about one-twentieth of the total discharge, and any works that you can put in to control the low-water flow on a stream like the Mississippi are liable to be utterly destroyed and rendered nugatory by this vastly larger volume of water which passes down the river during flood stages. At this season of the year the cut-offs occur, which will upset any plan of improvement, because they change entirely the regimen of the river, its course, its slopes, and everything about it.

Again, the water, being over the works and everything else, has a chance to develop new channels precisely where you do not want them to occur. A still further effect is produced where the levees are down; the water that goes over the banks keeps going out and coming back again. Whenever it makes its appearance in the river it acts like a tributary. It produces entirely new phases, just as any tributary will. Sometimes it entirely reverses the conditions of flow. The influence that levees exert under these heads I believe I have stated as conservative. They prevent the river from doing damage to the works we put in to improve the low-water discharge of the stream.

The CHAIRMAN. If there was no question about protecting the land, and you were simply improving the Mississippi River for navigation, would you have built the levees that are now built?

Lieutenant-Colonel SUTER. Yes, sir.

This opinion of Colonel Suter's was distinctly concurred in by Colonel (then captain) Leach and Captain Kingman, both of the Engineer Corps, in active charge of the improvement of the river.

Colonel Suter was basing his opinion then on twenty-four years' experience and study of the river. Nineteen years have come and gone since then, and, with the lessons they have taught, his opinions have found confirmation. It is not my intention to discuss the question of levee building. I quote from these engineers to show that the levees are necessary to the scientific treatment of the river, if we have in mind only the interest of navigation, and as it is not possible to maintain a levee line without holding the banks, the proposed improvement by revetment will be seen at once to be an engineering necessity. The end of actual levee building, I hope, is in the not distant future. The last report of the Mississippi River Commission shows on that subject that the levees are 78.5 per cent completed. The following shows the details:

The following table, which is similar to that given in last year's report, has been brought up to date and shows the present condition of the levees and the levee operations during the past year, as compiled from the reports of the district officers:

Levee district.	In system.	Built.	Lost or abandoned during the year.	Per cent now built.	Approximate area protected.

I say the end of levee building is close at hand, because we have in this bill definitely determined to undertake this work of revetment and complete it. Without revetment there would never be an end to levee building. We may build and build to the exhaustion of all the resources of all the levee districts, but if the river is to be permitted to cave these levees into its insatiable maw we will be no nearer the end when Gabriel blows his horn than we are to-day.

As the years went by these levees have been raised higher and higher as the flood levels have climbed higher, and this bank erosion has increased proportionately.

Capt. C. H. West, of the Mississippi River Commission, who for the past twelve years has been the chief engineer of the lower Yazoo district, in his report three years ago gave some startling figures as to the extent of this bank erosion. His levee line was 189 miles long, and since 1884, 172 miles—more than 90 per cent—had been abandoned on account of caving banks.

Twenty years, in fact, has been about the average life of a levee line. The Mississippi River Commission, according to Judge Taylor, one of its most distinguished members, in locating the levee line has "placed them, as a rule, far enough from the river to be reasonably safe against caving for twenty years."

It was apparent to your committee that if we were to continue the improvement of this river with any hope at all of ever completing the project, the time had arrived when the dictates of common sense required that some plan be adopted which looked to permanency and stability, even at a greater present cost, as preferable to a perpetual, though lesser, annual appropriation. We have therefore presented the project contained in the bill, which will require $4,000,000 annually for possibly twenty years.

There is much talk of 14 feet from the Lakes to the Gulf. I believe all students of the question of transportation agree that a channel of suitable depth connecting the great cities along the line of this proposed route would be of immeasurable commercial value. A mere glance at the map will convince the most skeptical of the desirability of such a channel, but it can not be had without revetting the banks of the lower river. That this will give the required depth there can be little doubt.

One of the most signal instances of the scouring force of the river when held to its channel by permanent and leveed banks is furnished in that reach of the river along the St. Francis front commonly called Plum Point reach. As Colonel Leach expresses it more clearly than I can, I will quote his statement:

The commission in carrying out the work in the early years at Plum Point had not provided for any levees. In a debate in the Senate on one of the river and harbor bills the point was made by a Senator that the commission was professing to make an experimental application of their system at Plum Point reach, and a part of their plan was a levee. That year an allotment was made and a levee built on the Tennessee side of the reach. The next year an allotment was made for levees on the Arkansas side and those levees were built. A party was engaged all the time in making surveys. The surveys made after the construction of the second line of levees and before the first flood, and again after the first flood, showed that the high bars in the regulated or deepened channel of about 3,500 feet width had had their tops scalped off 8 feet uniformly. Nothing of the kind had ever occurred before, and in the two crossings under control and under improvement the maximum depths had increased in one case 1 foot and in another case 2 feet, and they have remained to this time.

Confirming all that Colonel Leach had said on the subject, the Mississippi River Commission, after constant study and observation of the river, nearly twenty years later says this:

There is another consideration, not of the greatest weight perhaps, but one which, in the opinion of the commission, is worthy to be taken into account. It appears to be highly probable that before very many years the Government will undertake the development of a channel for navigation in the Mississippi River below Cairo of much greater depth than has been so far attempted. The river bed is now in favorable condition for such an improvement. But if the revetments which have been enumerated should be abandoned, or not effectively maintained, or others equally important should be omitted or neglected and the river should be permitted to have its way in tearing down banks and buildings bars for a few years, changes will take place which can never be undone and which will greatly increase the difficulty and expense of securing a deep channel. It is a case in which an ounce of prevention will be worth pounds of cure.

I have said nothing of the incidental benefits to come to those who live in the alluvial deltas of the lower river by having their levee lines made permanent by revetting the banks. I have refrained from discussing that feature, because the unbroken opinion of our engineers, which is fully concurred in by the committee, is that this work is justified if considered solely in the interest of navigation. But putting aside every question of navigation, the preservation of the levee lines alone would justify the expenditure.

Behind these levee lines lie some 26,000 square miles of marvelously fertile deltas—an area, in other words, a little larger than Delaware, Maryland, Connecticut, Rhode Island, and Massachusetts combined. Our people have taxed themselves as few agricultural people have done in times of peace to build these levees, my own congressional district having alone put more than $17,000,000 in their construction and maintenance since 1884. These levees have been built so high in order to meet the increasing heights of the annual floods that it becomes a matter of appalling consequence when any portion of it must be abandoned on account of caving banks.

We naturally feel that even though it be our duty to build these levees this great Government, which represents all the States whose waters are precipitated into it, should so regulate the flow of water which is drained into the river as to at least temper the fury of the flood and so lessen its eroding energy. That is not possible, and the only other way to make us whole is to revet the banks, and in that way prevent the levees from being dashed into the river.

On this point the Mississippi River Commission, in their annual report for 1908, say:

It is the judgment of the commission that these revetment works and some others which will be imperative within a short time are required for the preservation of the levee system. Without them a permanently completed system will be impossible. The increasing height and cost of the levees and the rapid development of the country protected by them greatly augment the disaster of crevasses. A break in an embankment 5 or 6 feet high, resulting in the thin overflow of a sparsely populated country, is a small calamity compared with a break in a levee 20 feet high, discharging over a thickly populated country threaded with railroads and filled with towns and factories. Owing to the increased height now necessary to control the floods the expense of replacing an undermined levee by a new line going far around a lake or impassable swamp is enormous. The point of development has come at which the only economical way to maintain the levees is to hold the banks against caving, not everywhere, but in all places where the special conditions exist which have just been described. This is a distinct stage of the work only recently reached.

The levee lines as they stand to-day have been paid for by the people behind them, every foot of them. I mean that exactly. True the Federal Government has helped us with a generous hand, but the fact is that more levees have been caved into the river than the Government has ever built, and so I repeat that the people behind them have paid for every foot of the levee line now standing. It is suggested that it is their business to build them, since they protect their lands from overflow. There are two replies I might make to that suggestion. The Constitution says that "Congress shall have power to regulate commerce among the several States," and so forth, and the court has said that this carries jurisdiction over all interstate waterways.

This being true, I lay it down as fundamental that where there is power there is also responsibility, and all the engineers have united on the proposition that the way to improve the river solely for navigation is by revetment and levees. Therefore I submit that it is as much the duty of Congress to build levees which incidentally protect the riparian landowner as it is the duty of the riparian owner to build levees which incidentally improve the river. Be that, however, as it may, the people in the deltas have built their levees, and the Government has contributed, so there is no occasion to quarrel. The levee districts have spent, in round numbers, $56,000,000 and Congress has spent $24,000,000 in levee building. Colonel Leach's statement is again quoted:

The CHAIRMAN. Do the levees cave into the river?

Captain LEACH. I may say, generally, with regard to the history of the levee system, that over three-fourths, probably, of the entire sum of money expended by the States in the last ten or fifteen years in the construction of levees would have been saved if the United States had prevented the banks from caving.

Admitting for the sake of the argument that we should build our own levees unaided, there is, nevertheless, a well-settled principle of law, as well as of equity, that one should not use his own to the hurt of his neighbor. We have built our levees and they are strong enough to hold back the biggest floods, but you have cleared your mountain sides, undertiled your farms, straightened your creeks into drainage canals, and so have precipitated your surplus water into the great national drainageway; that when we confine your flood waters—mind you, I say your flood waters—to the river channel by means of levees which you say we ought to build, they rush by with such force that the banks of the river are eroded and cave in, and with them go our levees. We insist, then—and I submit, in all candor, that equity is with us—that you should either store your surplus water and regulate its flow or help us revet the banks, and so save our levees.

I say help us, that is all. We are contributing our part of it now. For instance, a few years ago at a point in my district it became apparent that the levee was going to cave into the river. Our levee-board officials took the matter up with the Mississippi River Commission and offered to put up $100,000 for this purpose. Having no plant we, of course, could not do the work, and so we went to the commission. The proposition was accepted, but instead of receiving the money the commission said "we intended to allot $100,000 for levee construction on this line. We will now devote that sum to this revetment if you will devote your $100,000 to levee building." This was accordingly done, but the books of the commission of course show no contribution by the locality toward revetment. Such instances are frequent, and so I repeat that we have all along been contributing to this revetment work, though the records may not disclose the fact.

I do not know why I have mentioned this fact of contribution, because I think it has very little to do with the subject, but having done so I will let it stand. I have gone much further into this subject than I originally intended, but it is a matter in which I am deeply interested, and therefore I am apt to trespass upon patience. I am quite sure my friend from Pennsylvania has no objection to the proper improvement of our inland rivers and that it was only his zeal for his own project which led him to make the comparison which reminded those of us whose hearts are so much in the development of the great valley that "comparisons are odious."

During my service on this committee, which has extended over a number of years, it has always been my pleasure to support the liberal appropriations asked for the improvement of the harbors along the Atlantic coast, and I hope now that gentlemen interested in those projects will not seek further to criticise liberal appropriations for our inland streams.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, it is with great pleasure that I have listened to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS]. There is absolutely nothing in his statement with regard to the decadence of the tonnage on the Mississippi River and its tributaries to which I do not subscribe. There is nothing in his statement with regard to the need for appropriations in the Mississippi Valley with which I do not agree. Everything said upon this floor yesterday by the distinguished Speaker of this House was responded to, in sentiment, by me, and I am prepared to-day to say that if this bill passes, knowing how earnestly the committee which he appointed to prepare it has labored in the interest of the great interior Middle West from which he comes, there will have been no man since the days of Abraham Lincoln who will have done so much for the upbuilding of industry and commerce in the great Middle West, between the Appalachian chain and the Rocky Mountains, than this same JOSEPH G. CANNON, who yesterday gave his support to this bill. [Applause.]

I have not envied my friends from the southern tier of States the appropriations that have been coming their way, and I watched with peculiar interest yesterday the absence of the "watchdogs of the Treasury" while we are making appropriations for streams in the South, some of them for the removal of the water hyacinth, which clogs the propellers of motor boats, and thus impedes their navigation; and I watched with peculiar pleasure the trend of the reading of the bill as it ran along the Gulf and came up the Mississippi River all the way to St. Paul, leaving its hundreds of millions of appropriations, which must come in through the custom-houses of the country, in its wake.

It was pleasing to me to observe all this, and I want to observe that it was equally pleasing to me to let the people of the Atlantic seaboard know how active, how hustling, how energetic, how earnest the builders of the empire in the Middle West are, and how absolutely indifferent eastern interests have been to their own welfare along the Atlantic seacoast.

Mr. Chairman, there is reason for the people of Illinois to appeal for the deepening of channels leading down to the Gulf. I have not opposed them. I shall vote for the bill, supporting every project which they have put into it. I did object yesterday, or tried to, but the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LAWRENCE] would not permit me to interrupt him. I did try yesterday to object to the passage of an Illinois appropriation in advance of a survey, because we have had surveys without an appropriation and could not get the consent of the committee or the consent of Congress to authorize it.

I echo the demands of the people of the Middle West, whom the Speaker has so characteristically spoken of here. I know they have been surging behind their Members of the National Legislature; I know they have been pushing them forward and sending them to Washington with urgent demands to bring back the appropriations that will deepen their streams and add to the upbuilding of their communities, and I think it is now conceded they will succeed.

[The time of Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania having expired, by unanimous consent it was extended five minutes.]

I concur in all that, but inasmuch as it is admitted upon this floor by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LAWRENCE] and by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] that there is a strong home pressure behind the Members to bring about these appropriations, I ask them to yield to that same home pressure behind the Members that come from the Atlantic seaboard; a home pressure that is crying out for recognition that has been denied, not since Illinois was settled, but for two hundred years—ever since the Pilgrim Fathers first landed at Plymouth Rock. [Applause.]

What of the two hundred years of agitation for cutting through Cape Cod, that would save an outside sailing distance of 75 miles? Cape Cod, upon which not one vessel like that referred to in the article my friend from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] put in the RECORD a moment ago, not one, but upon the shoals of which during the last twenty-five years 1,000 vessels have been wrecked, lives carried down, property destroyed and wasted, with a resultant increase in the cost to the consumer on every pound of tonnage. While you are telling of the pressure behind you, I ask that you give some consideration to the pressure behind my colleagues and myself as we ask you to give us recognition for a project upon which there has been two surveys and reports—that of the Chesapeake and Delaware

Canal—a canal that links up 30,000,000 people engaged in commerce and agriculture along the Atlantic coast and which stands substantially as it was in 1829. I ask you to give consideration to this 13-mile cut, which would cost less than what you propose to spend on the upper Mississippi from the mouth of the Missouri to St. Paul to obtain 6 feet of water, where you have only a limited commerce; I ask you to consider this project, which will enable 90,000,000 tons of commerce to be saved an outside sailing distance, through stress and storm, of 325 miles. Give us a chance.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. I know the gentleman would never wish to be unfair.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not. I am appealing now for a square deal.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Yes; and the gentleman is doing it very eloquently. In stating that there have been two surveys for that Chesapeake-Delaware Canal, does the gentleman not think that in justice to the committee and in fairness to the House he ought to further state that he was very active in securing an additional survey, contemplating, perhaps, an entirely through route from the city of Boston to Key West, and that this committee did not have that first survey before it? Consequently it could not act, as the route may be changed entirely.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It takes three surveys in the East to get action, and one in the West. The chairman of the gentleman's committee said yesterday that God was good to Connecticut. I think God is good to the Mississippi, and I glory in it, and Congress is also good to the Mississippi. The gentleman wants to be fair, and always is eminently fair, and the gentleman will answer me this question: Did we not make application in due form before the committee and obtain a hearing, requesting that action be taken upon the survey and the report to which I have referred for the opening up of the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal, for the saving of life and property and the carrying of these millions of tons of existing and hundreds of millions of ultimate tonnage?

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. I believe the gentleman did, but he was also before the committee last year insisting upon a great through project from Boston down. Now, until the great through project has been acted upon by the engineers and reported to us, the gentleman surely would not ask us to take up that work in piecemeal; it might be changed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. When my friends from Illinois come in and without a survey get an appropriation, I certainly would ask it for a project where there had been two surveys.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. But the gentleman's friends from Illinois have had two very elaborate surveys.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This is a question of a square deal and I am simply asking for our side what the gentleman asks for his.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Missouri River: For maintenance of improvement from the mouth to Fort Benton, $175,000.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 13, page 68, strike out the words "the mouth" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Kansas City."

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, this particular paragraph makes an appropriation for improving the Missouri River from the mouth to Fort Benton, $175,000. In the preceding paragraph $1,000,000 is appropriated for the Missouri River between its mouth and Kansas City. This paragraph covers in part the same part of the river that is included in the preceding paragraph, and, as a matter of fact, every dollar that is appropriated in the paragraph just read by the Clerk could be utilized in the same part of the river that is covered by the appropriation in the preceding paragraph, where, as I say, $1,000,000 was appropriated. It seems to me that it is only just and fair that if a million dollars is appropriated for the Missouri River from its mouth to Kansas City, the balance of the appropriation of $175,000 should be used between Kansas City and Fort Benton, the other end of navigation on that stream.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Where is Fort Benton, with reference to Kansas City?

Mr. NORRIS. It is north of it; it is up in Montana, I think. It is the head of navigation on the Missouri River. Mr. Chairman, if this is left as it is in the bill, as I suggest, every dollar of the appropriation included in it could be utilized between the mouth of the river and Kansas City without any violation of law. Hence we have an appropriation of $1,175,000, to be used between the mouth of the river and Kansas City, but nothing from Kansas City up. That is a small amount as compared with the large appropriations, and it seems to me to be fair and ought to be utilized on that part of the river where the balance of the appropriation of $1,000,000 can not under the bill be used. As I look at it, it is nothing but an act of justice and fairness. The distance between Kansas City and the mouth of the river is less than 400 miles. For this $1,000,000 is appropriated. From Kansas City to Fort Benton is 600 or 700 miles, and but $175,000 is appropriated, and left in such shape that every dollar can be used below Kansas City, thus leaving the longest stretch in such a condition that it may get nothing. This is so manifestly unjust that it cries aloud for correction and should appeal to every fair-minded man.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, the language of the $175,000 appropriation is not different from former bills, and it will practically be expended between Sioux City and Kansas City, since it will be used for snagging, and that work is about completed between Kansas City and the mouth of the river. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. If it is the intention of the committee that this money is to be used above Kansas City, then why not say so in the bill?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Simply because some of it may be expended just above the river's mouth.

Mr. NORRIS. Above its mouth, but that is not above Kansas City.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. True, but there may be some snagging between Kansas City and the mouth——

Mr. NORRIS. But you have a million dollars with which to do that.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. That is not for snagging. It is for the improvement of a permanent channel.

Mr. NORRIS. If the gentleman will yield, I would like to ask him how he can interpret this language in either case to mean snagging or excluding snagging. It does not exclude it in the preceding paragraph, and it is not confined to it in the paragraph under consideration. In one case it is for the maintenance and improvement of the river, and in the other it is for the purpose of securing a 6-foot channel. Does the gentleman mean to say that if in securing the 6-foot channel the man engaged in the work would find a snag he would have to go around it and not take it out?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. If the gentleman will read the provision he will see a marked difference. One is for a permanent improvement of the channel, and the other for its maintenance; one refers to snagging, and the other to revetment work.

Mr. NORRIS. But neither one says snagging or revetment.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. The language is so well understood I hope the amendment will not prevail. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say to the gentleman from Nebraska who introduced this amendment that, as the gentleman well knows, the Missouri River has had an appropriation in the last few bills for the purpose of snagging and maintenance. We have been endeavoring to put the river in a navigable condition as a whole by beginning near the mouth and clearing the channel of the stream. That work has progressed, as the chairman has pointed out, practically as far as Kansas City. There is no objection and will be no reason of which I know why the major portion of this $175,000 will not be spent above Kansas City, between Kansas City and Sioux City. In all probability it will be spent there, because the division engineer who has charge of the work, Major Schultz, at Kansas City, has charge of both divisions, and his work extends above Kansas City as well as below. It will be impractical and contrary to the policy of the committee to limit the division engineer in the application of the work and——

Mr. NORRIS. But I want to ask the gentleman, if he will permit, why is it impracticable? If this money is going to be expended above Kansas City, why is it impracticable to say in the bill it should be expended there?

Mr. BORLAND. For the simple reason, as the gentleman well knows, that we Missouri River people have come to the conclusion that to tie up money to a specific point is an injury to navigation as a whole, and we want to avoid that as far as we can.

Mr. NORRIS. If that be true, why is it in the preceding paragraph the committee has limited the $1,000,000 between the mouth of the river and Kansas City? Why do you let the engineers use it for construction down below Kansas City?

Mr. BORLAND. Because the report before the committee was that report.

Mr. NORRIS. All right; and the report before the committee likewise says that snagging has been done to Kansas City or thereabouts?

Mr. BORLAND. The report before the committee is a report on the permanent improvement on the banks and the 6-foot channel and does not relate to snagging.

Mr. NORRIS. Where does the gentleman get the information that snagging has been done as far as Kansas City, and where does the chairman get it?

Mr. BORLAND. I take it, on his recent trip down the river, which he made in November.

Mr. NORRIS. He did not see any snags and came to the conclusion they had been removed.

Mr. BORLAND. He was on a government boat with the division engineer.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me, in justice and fairness, that it is proper that the appropriation ought to be limited to above Kansas City.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I am constrained to believe that a great deal of the interest manifested in these items springs from local interest; therefore I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska. I will be in favor of an amendment making it $1,000,000 from Kansas City to Sioux City, the same as it is from Kansas City to the mouth of the river.

It is the greatest distance. It is of vastly more importance to the commercial interests of this country than that reach of the river from Kansas City to its mouth. I call the attention of the committee to a few figures that will be found in House Document No. 1120, taken from census report of 1900. They are very instructive upon this point and ought to carry some weight in the decision of this question. Between Kansas City and the mouth of the river, a distance of 400 miles, there is but one town or city that has any manufacturing product that they put upon the market at all, and they give to that stretch of this river $1,000,000. That town is Jefferson City, and if it was not for the penal institutions of the State of Missouri located there, there would not be any manufactured products between Kansas City and the mouth of the Missouri River that would need any transportation facilities.

Now, you take the river from Kansas City north and west to Sioux City, and there are two cities that have more products to ship on this great river than has Kansas City, Mo. The committee must not confound Kansas City, Mo., with Kansas City, Kans.

Let me call your attention to the figures I find here, on page 16 of House Document No. 1120, Sixtieth Congress, second session. It tells a lesson, but it does not explain why the Committee on Rivers and Harbors refused to appropriate any money to put the river north and west of Kansas City in a navigable condition. Let me take first the manufactured products in Kansas City, as shown by the census records for 1900. I am referring to Kansas City, Mo.

The records show that the manufactured products of that city amounted to $36,000,000, the manufactured products of Jefferson City to $3,600,000, making a total of $39,600,000 that receives in this bill a million dollars appropriation. Let us go out West and see what we have. Sioux City, Iowa, had manufactured products of $15,000,000; Council Bluffs, $2,600,000; Omaha, $43,000,000—$7,000,000 more than Kansas City has; St. Joseph, Mo., $32,000,000—almost as much as Kansas City has. Go on down to Atchison, Kans., $2,600,000; Leavenworth, Kans., $4,700,000; Kansas City, Kans., $36,000,000, exactly the amount that Kansas City, Mo., has. Yet above the mouth of the Kaw River, above Kansas City, there is not a single dollar appropriated in this bill.

Now, I would like to know why the Rivers and Harbors Committee have neglected this reach of the river that is 200 miles longer; that has more commerce upon it, or would have if it could be put upon that river, than the reach from Kansas City to St. Louis can possibly have.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in five minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I wish you would make it ten minutes. I would like to have five minutes myself.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I would like to have three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. ALEXANDER] asks that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in ten minutes.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I ask that the time be extended to twenty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOOHER. To meet the statements that were made by the chairman of the committee and others that this money might all be expended above Kansas City, if that is true, why not adopt this amendment? There can be inserted one word in the paragraph preceding that will permit the use of a part of this $1,000,000 appropriated for Kansas City to maintain the work below that point. That is, just insert, after the word "improvement," in line 8, the words "and maintenance," and then such part of the $1,000,000 that is appropriated for the river between the mouth and Kansas City can be used for maintenance as may be necessary. There can be no reason, in my judgment, why all this sum of $175,000, if no more is to be given, should not be used on the river above Kansas City, Mo. There is a great agricultural country there. The four great States of Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, and Missouri furnish more food products of this country than all the balance of the country put together, and you shut off from the benefits of water transportation nine-tenths of these four States. You keep them out of this water transportation by refusing to make a single dollar of appropriation to improve this river above Kansas City. When is it to be done? There is no statement in this bill anywhere when the work will be begun on that reach from Sioux City to Kansas City. There is not a single statement made that they intend to make any improvement on that part of the river or that they intend to do anything there now or hereafter.

I insist that the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska ought to be adopted. It is but fair and right that if you appropriate for improvement of the river $1,000,000 from the mouth to Kansas City, that you ought to be willing to give $175,000 on that reach west to Sioux City, a distance of 600 miles. It is as little as you can give. There are many sand bars and snags that could be removed and that would enable transportation to be given from Sioux City to St. Louis, as it is now given from Kansas City to St. Louis. In the report made by Captain Schultz, referred to by my colleague, he says boats were put upon the river from St. Joseph to Kansas City, and they finally had to be removed because of the sand bars which formed opposite the bridge at Atchison, Kans., and stopped the boats. Sand bars are allowed to remain there until navigation of the river from St. Joseph to Kansas City is stopped. This $175,000 ought to be given to remove the sand bars and snags above Kansas City. The bill permits the use of this money north and west of Kansas City, but it also permits the use of absolutely every dollar of it between the mouth and Kansas City, as the engineer in charge may direct. It can be used wherever the commission or the engineer say it shall be used.

If the river is to be improved west of Kansas City, now is as good a time as any to begin the work. The people in that section of the country need it, and you can not do it any better than by permitting them to have this $175,000. I do not want to take the million dollars from my good friends of Kansas City, neither do I want Kansas City to hog the whole pie. I want my people and the people of Nebraska and Iowa and Kansas to have their share of the favors distributed in this bill; $175,000 is little enough out of the $1,175,000. I submit that the amendment ought to be adopted. [Loud applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I want to congratulate the Rivers and Harbors Committee on bringing in this bill. It is the first fruition of the hope that some of us have entertained here for the last seventeen years. I have been working ever since I came here, in 1893, to get these western rivers improved, especially the Missouri River. I am in favor of improving the whole river.

I want to congratulate the committee on going out there and getting an object lesson in my congressional district, on that stretch of the river from Jefferson City to Gasconade City. Improvements there have stood for fifteen years as an object lesson of what can be done by improving this stream, which the chairman [Mr. ALEXANDER of New York] calls an alluvial stream; and if that system were pursued, I will venture the opinion that the Missouri River would be navigable and have a great deal of commerce on it. I say that the money is well spent if never a passenger or a pound of freight goes up or down the river. [Applause.] It fixes railroad rates. I am not going to take any part in this $175,000 squabble, except I want to correct my good friend from St. Joseph. His statistics are wrong. I do not know who got them up for him. He says there is no shipping of products anywhere from Kansas City to the mouth of the river. Why, in the little town of Hermann, in Gasconade County, on the south bank of the Missouri River, which has about 1,800 or 2,000 people in it, they made last year 2,900,000 gallons of wine, which had to be shipped somewhere.

Mr. BOOHER. They drank it. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No; they did not drink it. [Renewed laughter.] They drank their part, no doubt. The little city of Washington, on the south bank of the Missouri River, furnishes a very large commerce. All the cob pipes used by the civilized world are made there. It is a very large industry.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. The gentleman is not undertaking to say that the entire appropriation should be used for the Missouri below Kansas City?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am perfectly willing for you to have part of the money for the upper river.

Mr. NORRIS. Then you ought to vote for my amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Then there is one other thing. There is one factory in St. Charles, on the north bank of the Missouri River, in my district, that employs 2,400 men. It would look as if they might have something to ship of the things which they produce by their labor.

Mr. BOOHER. They are on the Mississippi?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. They are on the Missouri River.

At this very minute they are putting in a steel plant in that town that will cost millions of dollars. They have factories of every kind that are springing up in that western country, and if they ever get the Missouri River so that it is navigable, it will have an immense traffic on it; and the Speaker was exactly right yesterday when he stated that in his agricultural districts there is no prejudice against river improvements. He might have truthfully extended his remark to all agricultural districts, because the people there read the newspapers more than the city people do, and are better informed than the city people are. [Applause.] They understand that anything which looks to the betterment of commercial facilities in this country helps the man who is 100 or 200 or 300 miles away from the river as much as it helps the man who lives upon the banks of the river. Nobody need labor under any misapprehension as to the intelligence of the agricultural population of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, has the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] an amendment pending?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Does it propose to strike out the words "the mouth," in line 13, page 68?

Mr. NORRIS. That is the amendment; yes.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, it should be a matter of gratification to us all that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has at last brought in a bill which is, as I understand, the forerunner of a permanent policy for the improvement of the Missouri River. In former years that great stream was navigable and one of the main avenues of commerce. Under the policy now being adopted it will become so again. The difficulties have been different in that stream from the usual difficulties in navigable streams. The ordinary dredging proposition does not apply to the Missouri; but it is nevertheless not an extremely difficult thing and certainly not an impossible engineering proposition, and I believe that when proper principles are applied to it, it will be found to be one of the easiest streams to control and to continue navigable.

As to the particular amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], I desire to support it. It seems to me there is no reason, even in the view given by the committee of the purposes that are to apply to the use of this fund, why it should not be definitely stated. This $175,000 should be used for maintenance between Fort Benton and Kansas City, and not continued on down to the mouth of the stream. In the language of the preceding paragraph, which is, "For the securing of a permanent 6-foot channel, $1,000,000," there is no reason whatever why any portion of that amount may not be used for the maintenance of that 6-foot channel below Kansas City down to the mouth. There is every reason why this $175,000 should be used for a like purpose above Kansas City. I trust that the committee will not seriously oppose this amendment. It is right in line with what they say is the engineering purpose. Let it be definitely stated. This stream, in a peculiar sense, should be improved throughout its entire length at one and the same time. It is, as I have said, not a question of dredging out a channel; it is a question of preserving the channel in its natural and proper position, and it is as necessary to preserve that channel above Kansas City and above Sioux City on up to Fort Benton, the limit of navigation, as it is to preserve it below that point. I earnestly recommend that the House in its impartial disposition of this amendment will allow the use of the entire $175,000 above Kansas City.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. NORRIS) there were—ayes 42, noes 50.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 68, line 13, strike out "one" and insert "two;" and add, after the word "dollars," line 14, a proviso, so that the paragraph shall read:

"Improving Missouri River: For maintenance of improvement from the mouth to Fort Benton, $275,000: Provided, That $100,000 of this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used for work between Kansas City and Sioux City, and that in carrying on the same experiment may be made with devices and methods fitted to the character of the river."

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Let us have a vote.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, this amendment as proposed by me——

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, debate has been closed on this paragraph.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The time has not yet expired.

The CHAIRMAN. There are yet six minutes remaining.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, this amendment proposed by me deprives Kansas City of no part of the $175,000 provided for maintenance.

It pledges no part of the million dollars appropriated for below Kansas City to be used for maintenance. It simply permits the engineers of the Government to use $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary in their opinion, to be used for experimental work suited to the peculiar character of the river between Kansas City and Sioux City.

I want to draw attention to the fact that while the appropriation provided by this committee for the 20 miles below Kansas City amounts to $50,000 per mile, this $100,000 which I have provided in this amendment is to be used over a great stretch of river amounting to nearly 400 miles. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the committee in charge of this bill should not be so wedded to old methods and so devoted to the schemes and devices that have largely failed in the past on this part of the river, as not to be willing to give the engineers an opportunity to experiment with work which has been tried by private interests, by communities and corporations along this part of the river.

I stated a while ago on the floor that the South Omaha Stock Yards Company, a large corporation having important interests to protect, had succeeded by spending comparatively a small amount of money in the use of a modest and homely method of protecting the banks where the sewer empties into the river, just as permanently and just as satisfactorily as the more expensive work could protect it which has been used below Kansas City. If that is a fact, and I believe the engineers will, by proper examination, find it to be a fact, it seems reasonable that the committee should permit the engineers to experiment with the economical devices that have been tried so successfully with a small outlay by private concerns.

My amendment does not make it obligatory to try devices; it does not require the expenditure of $100,000; it simply permits them to make the experiment on the long stretch of river from Kansas City to Sioux City with the cheap devices that heretofore have only been used by private corporations or individuals. I trust, Mr. Chairman, that the committee will be willing to accept the amendment, and if not, that the House will vote it into the bill, as it deprives no other community of any benefits that may come to them.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Does not the gentleman understand that the engineers can try those experiments now?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not think they can.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. They can as the law now stands.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. As it is provided now $175,000 is appropriated for that great reach of the country from the mouth of the river up to the source of navigation, something like 2,000 miles, and that makes it impossible to make any experiment, because it will require all of the money to pulling out a few snags. I think it is reasonable for favored communities that have received such large benefits to give this stretch an opportunity to experiment with devices and not shut us out altogether.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Under the law now the engineers can resort to any manner of bank revetment which commends itself to their judgment and skill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Missouri River at St. Joseph, Mo., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 824, Sixtieth Congress, first session, $75,000: Provided, That no part of this amount shall be expended until the city of St. Joseph, or other agency, shall have deposited to the credit of the Secretary of War, in some duly recognized United States depository to be designated by him, the sum of $75,000, to be expended by said Secretary of War, together with the amount herein appropriated, in the execution of the plan of improvement recommended in the report herein referred to.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all after the word "dollars," in line 18, page 68, to the end of the paragraph, in line 2, page 69.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, in support of the amendment I desire, first, to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole to the document mentioned in the paragraph, namely, Document 824, Sixtieth Congress, second session. Gentlemen will notice on the first page a provision of the law of March 2, 1907, which reads as follows:

Provided further, also, That the Secretary of War shall, as soon as practicable, cause a survey to be made to determine the necessity of continuing the improvement of the Missouri River at St. Joseph, Mo., to prevent a diversion of the waters of said river through Lake Contrary and other contiguous lakes, and to determine the effect of such diversion, with an estimate of the cost of the improvement, and shall also report whether the same is directly and necessarily required in the interest of navigation.

Now, I am quite sure that if each Member of the House present had a copy of that document with this map and understood it and would examine it thoroughly, he would vote for the amendment I have offered. Now, why the city of St. Joseph, or some other agency, should be required to devote any money toward the improvement of the Missouri River, or any other river, is something I can not understand. This work is about 3 miles from the city of St. Joseph. It does not belong to the city of St. Joseph, and where St. Joseph is mentioned in this law, it is simply mentioned as a continuation of the work at St. Joseph, Mo. Something has been said here about the work done upon the Missouri River, from Jefferson City down to the Osage River, as being substantial and having been completed within the last fifteen years. There is revetment work, and it is the first revetment work ever done on the Missouri River, and it was done on the Kansas side of the river a little above the city, begun in 1880, and it stands there, 3 miles of revetment work, the river on both sides of it, as substantial as it was the day it was done. There have been about $5,000 for maintenance expended on it since that time. This appropriation of $75,000 is for the purpose of continuing the improvement already begun. It is to begin at the end of 3,900 feet of revetment work, and to be continued, according to the report of Captain Schulz, who made this report and who made the survey. It will take 1,650 feet more of revetment work to go by this place and prevent the river from being diverted into this lake and destroying not only the lake and probably the surrounding country, but cutting a new channel for 20 miles through a string of lakes and destroying a vast amount of property. If this improvement is necessary to preserve the navigation of the river, then the Government ought to make the improvement without calling upon the people to subscribe a single cent toward it. I know something is said in this report about a pleasure resort down the river, and it is said to be of immense value. It is used by the people as a pleasure resort. Many people visit it in hot weather—go down and spend an evening there.

The street car line runs to it. It is in the neighborhood of 3 miles from the city of St. Joseph, and if the river cuts through into the lake at the point where it is cutting it will do great damage. It does not interfere one particle with the pleasure park down there at the lake or its improvements. It does not touch them, but it does destroy the lake. Is that any reason why, if this is an improvement for the navigation of the river, the people should pay anything for it, why anybody should be taxed for it? Where in this bill do they ask any other community where they are improving the navigable waters of the State to subscribe one-half of the money toward doing it?

[By unanimous consent the time of Mr. BOOHER was extended for five minutes.]

I want to call attention to some extracts from the report of the engineer upon this subject, and I will read it. Speaking of this place on the river, Captain Schulz says:

Unless some measures are taken to prevent further erosion it appears only a question of time when the river will cut into Lake Contrary; and at the present rate of erosion this may possibly happen in eight years. The result of such action can not be completely foretold. * * * In any event it will be decidedly shortsighted to allow any such condition to come about.

Further on he says:

The navigation interests likewise demand that the river be kept in its present channel.

Now, it is in the interests of navigation.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOOHER. Yes.

Mr. HARDWICK. The gentleman invited some statements as to whether there is anything else like it in the bill. We have exactly the same proposition in my district, and we are paying $125,000, and doing it gladly.

Mr. BOOHER. The gentleman can pay all he pleases. I have not found any such provision in the bill.

Mr. HARDWICK. It is at page 30 in the bill.

Mr. BOOHER. As the gentleman calls my attention to it, I will look it up. Continuing, the engineer says:

The regulation of the Missouri River and the revetment of its banks at St. Joseph and above Lake Contrary, is the most complete and systematic work done near any city front on the river.

That is simply to be continued and carried out and provided for. It is not a new project. It is simply carrying out the work that has already been done, finishing the project that was started for the express purpose of completing the work done beyond this point, where the river is about to change its channel:

The completion of this work now requires about 16,500 feet of bank revetment.

Now, I desire gentlemen to listen. This is the opinion of the engineer:

It is my opinion that the work of preventing the threatened diversion of the waters of the Missouri River into Lake Contrary is directly and necessarily required in the interest of navigation.

Now, that is the language of the engineer. If this work is required to be done directly in the interest of navigation, then I undertake to say that Congress has no right to ask the people of any locality to pay any part of the money necessary to make the streams of this country navigable; and if the gentleman from Georgia or any other place has a like project and his people are wanting to do it, that is up to them to do, and it does not cut any figure in this case. I have not seen any report——

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOOHER. I can not yield. I have not seen any report from any engineer or anybody else where attention is called to it, and if there is such a matter as this it would be well to produce it. There can be nothing wrong about this. I do not intend to ask this committee for a single dollar more than the bill carries. I do not ask them to add one single dollar to this appropriation. All I ask them to do is to strike out from this bill the provision that says the city of St. Joseph, which is nearly 3 miles away from the point, or some other agency, shall pay this money.

Now, the other agency simply means that the farmers living along these lakes will be called upon to pay one-half the expense of improving the river for purposes of navigation, because such improvement would preserve their property. They are not able to do it and can not do it, and it simply denies them any relief at all, and they ought not to be asked to do it. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that if a river is to be made navigable the people of all this country, not only on the Missouri River, but on the rivers in Georgia, that all the people ought to pay, and not one portion of the people should be compelled to pay one-half of the expense for the benefit of all. It is not right even if the people in the district of my friend from Georgia does it. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will be adopted.

Mr. HARDWICK. I want to say just a few words in answer to the position the gentleman from Missouri takes on this matter. I have exactly a similar project in my district. We came and asked $125,000 to be expended in keeping the Savannah River at Augusta within its banks, to be used in connection with our money to be spent for flood protection of the city of Augusta. Of course this appropriation of the Federal Government was entirely in the interest of navigation, but we agreed and gladly agreed that if the committee would give this amount we would pay a like amount, and if the gentleman will look at page 30, top of the page, he will find that this committee recommended an exactly similar appropriation in exactly identical language to his. Now, in my case we have gladly agreed to this provision, because we thought it was right——

Mr. BOOHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. I will.

Mr. BOOHER. But you came to Congress with the proposition that if they would do that you would do this work opposite your city.

Mr. HARDWICK. Exactly. Now let me ask the gentleman, in turn, Did not the gentleman's district agree to do that also?

Mr. BOOHER. No, sir.

Mr. HARDWICK. They did not ask for that?

Mr. BOOHER. No.

Mr. HARDWICK. Well, I do not know of the facts in your case——

Mr. BOOHER. I do not know; the men who may have come here——

Mr. HARDWICK. I want to say to the committee that it is my information that there are 21 projects like this in the bill. The committee has, I think, adopted a wise policy, because where projects like these are entered into and there is guaranteed a similar amount of local expenditure, there is no possible danger that the Treasury of the United States will be mulcted, because no Member of Congress will come and ask for thousands of dollars to be expended by the Federal Government unless his project, on which his own people have to expend a like amount, is a meritorious one. That is exactly what happened in my case, and, I think, in other cases—some larger in amount than mine.

Mr. BOOHER. Do you not, in your bill, state that the people living along this shore of the Missouri River from Kansas City to St. Louis shall put up a million dollars? It is that same kind of work exactly.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not know the merits of the gentleman's proposition.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. If the gentleman will refer to that provision, he will see what cooperation there shall be.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not know whether the information is accurate or not, but I am informed that the people down there agreed to this.

Mr. BOOHER. I have received many dispatches since this bill was reported, saying that the city of St. Joseph was not interested and would not raise any of this money.

Mr. HARDWICK. I want to say this, however, that, so far as I am concerned, I approve this policy of the committee as adopted. I was glad to have my people pay an equal amount to the amount appropriated in this bill, and they are glad to do it, because not only will the navigability of the river be improved, but the city of Augusta and the adjacent country will secure much-needed protection from the floods that have for many years devastated them, destroying both life and property.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Last spring while formulating the bill approved March 3, 1909, a gentleman came to me with a proposition, as I now recall it, that St. Joseph pay half the cost of this revetment, because bank caving threatened to open a new channel into a lake some 700 or 800 feet inland. We could not do it in that bill, limited as it was to maintenance and operation of government plant, and so told him. Thereupon he went to the Senate and secured an appropriation. When the bill came into conference we substituted another survey for the appropriation. The survey of 1907 provided that the people should pay one-half, and we are now giving them what we could not give in the last bill. They understand that they are doing nothing more than is done in a number of other places over the country. As has been stated, there are 21 items in this bill where there is cooperation of the same nature as this. It is entirely proper, I think, that the United States should do one half of it. It is entirely proper also, and is so admitted by the people themselves, that they should do the other half.

Mr. BOOHER. Will the gentleman yield to let me ask him a question? When was that delegation of people from St. Joseph?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I can not at this moment recall the name of the gentleman. You undoubtedly know him.

Mr. BOOHER. Is it not a fact that the survey of that project was made in 1907?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. No; I think it was last spring. I beg the gentleman's pardon; it was made in 1907. The report was made last spring, but the survey was made before. This is the survey of 1907.

Mr. BOOHER. Now, at that time, if the gentleman will examine the records, he will see that Captain Schultz is the party who made the proposition that the people should pay one-half—the surveyor, and not the people of St. Joseph. They have been laboring ever since to get that part of his report set aside.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. The proposition came from the St. Joseph people themselves, and it has been before us all the time and is before us by this report.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the House to that part of the report of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors which refers to the improvement of the Mississippi and Missouri rivers, found on pages 5 to 11 inclusive. Some extracts from the report are of interest at this time, and I shall insert them at this point in my remarks without reading them in full:

For the past few years caving banks which concerned merely the value of the land destroyed by the advancing river have not been revetted, but only those where a river cut-off was imminent or a levee about to be destroyed at points where the river would overflow into large areas of low ground and be lost to the ever slackening river current, or where boat landings and wharves would be destroyed without opportunity for replacement at other points in the vicinity.

* * * * * * *

The cases of extreme urgency, such as those to prevent cut-offs and breaks, are even now sufficient below Cairo to require constant work by nine revetting parties, while the commission has only plant enough to keep six parties busy. The revetment plant necessary to keep the other three parties busy will require at least one year to build, so that at the best it can not be utilized before 1911. In order to allow immediate commencement of work on the construction of this plant, some of the proposed appropriation in the pending bill will be used. There is no known method of river improvement which can give any permanent benefit to the navigation of the Mississippi River below Cairo unless it makes provision for the revetment of caving banks, and the sooner such work is completed the more quickly will assured navigation be obtained.

MISSOURI RIVER.

This river has a continuous navigable length of 2,283 miles from its mouth about 17½ miles above St. Louis, Mo., to Fort Benton, Mont., and has been used for over two hundred years. It has been actually navigated by steamboats for ninety years, and between 1820 and 1880 it was the main factor in the development and building up of the western country, being of incalculable value and importance for transportation purposes during the greater portion of that period. In 1867, 43 steamboats cleared from St. Louis for the upriver trade, the freight both up and down being large and valuable, the passenger traffic alone being over 10,000. In the same year 28 clearances were made for the middle river and 212 for the lower river. During the year 1877, 25 steamers arrived at Fort Benton, and in 1878 there were 46 arrivals at that point. This commerce increased up to 1885, at which time there were two distinct boating sections—Sioux City, Iowa, being the dividing point—19 boats traversing the upper river and 18 being devoted exclusively to the lower. About this time, however, the commerce began to decline, and has continued to do so.

Owing to the difficulties attending navigation and the great expansion of the railroad system throughout the adjacent territory, the commerce that utilized the river for transportation was diverted to the railroads, so that the use of the river as a highway is at present almost insignificant. That this decrease is primarily due to the difficulties of navigation is plainly inferable when one considers the vast increase in population and production of this territory, an increase that has become so enormous that the capacity of the railroads is inadequate to move the commodities seeking transportation. The territory naturally tributary to this river comprises an area of more than 300,000 square miles, equal to the whole of the New England, Middle, and a large part of the Southern States.

The crop production alone of this area amounted in 1907 to 25,000,000 tons, with a value of $500,000,000, while the meat products of four cities located on the river amounted to about 800,000 tons. In addition to this the manufactures of four States through which the river flows, or touches, approach nearly a billion dollars in value. That a large percentage of these commodities does not seek transportation by water, especially when the various railroads are unable to handle it expeditiously, must be due to the fact that existing conditions do not permit of the river's economical utilization.

The four States mentioned are Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, and Nebraska, and with the exception of that part of Missouri lying south of Kansas City the whole area is neglected. With all its vast possibilities the committee utterly ignores it. Of course they use the specious and fallacious argument that the improvement of the river east of Kansas City will be of great benefit to the States mentioned; that it will of necessity give them cheaper freight rates. Just how this will be accomplished does not appear. Perhaps the committee believes that the shippers west of Kansas City will pay railroad rates to that point and then transfer their freight to boats on the river. If that be the argument, a moment's reflection will show its absurdity. Transportation by water must have a starting point as well as a terminal.

The condition set forth by the committee applies to the Missouri River from its mouth to Fort Benton, as well as to the Mississippi. Take that reach of the Missouri River from the mouth of the Kaw to the northwest corner of the State of Missouri, a distance by river of 204 miles—not a dollar appropriated to do the identical kind of work that is to be done on the river from Kansas City to the mouth, a distance of 390 miles, and to this reach of the river is given the sum of $1,000,000. With a string attached, it is true, in the shape of a board of three officers, to be appointed by the Secretary of War, which board will make a report, "in which report consideration shall be given to the subject of cooperation on the part of local interests in the work of said improvements." Just what meaning can be attached to that part of the report to be made I am at a loss to determine. But when the bill comes down to that reach of the river above Kansas City there is no uncertainty about the provisions of the bill. On page 68 we find this provision:

Improving Missouri River at St. Joseph, Mo., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 824, Sixtieth Congress, first session, $75,000: Provided, That no part of this amount shall be expended until the city of St. Joseph, or other agency, shall have deposited to the credit of the Secretary of War, in some duly recognized United States depository to be designated by him, the sum of $75,000, to be expended by said Secretary of War, together with the amount herein appropriated, in the execution of the plan of improvement recommended in the report herein referred to.

The committee not only makes it a condition precedent to the expenditure of this money by the Government that some agency shall raise an equal amount, but it requires that the money shall actually be raised, and not only that, but it must needs be deposited to the credit of the Secretary of War in some recognized United States depository.

In order to ascertain why any appropriation whatever for this work is made, we are referred to House Document No. 824, first session Sixtieth Congress, and when we turn to that document we find a condition to exist that meets every requirement of the committee report for the revetment and protection of the banks of the Mississippi below Cairo. I quote from page 6 of the report of the committee:

The cases of extreme urgency such as to prevent cut-offs, and breaks, are even now sufficient below Cairo to require constant work by nine revetment parties, while the commission has only plant enough to keep six busy. * * *

Then follows this statement on page 7:

There is no known method of river improvement which can give any permanent benefit to the navigation of the Mississippi River below Cairo, unless it makes provision for the revetment of caving banks, and the sooner such work is completed the more quickly will assured navigation be obtained.

If this be true of the Mississippi River, it is equally true of the Missouri, and it is as true of that part of the river north and west of Kansas City as it is of that portion of the river east of Kansas City, for which $1,000,000 has been appropriated without demanding that a single dollar shall be raised by the people that might be benefited by the improvement of that reach of the river; and why should they pay a dollar?

The work near St. Joseph, spoken of in the bill, is not new work, as one might be led to believe from reading the report, but a continuation of work already begun. By turning to House Document No. 824, we find that the river is rapidly cutting its way into a lake, will change its course, and destroy a large amount of farm lands. The document also says:

The navigation interests likewise demand that the river at this point be kept in its present channel.

Now, listen to what the document referred to further says of the work at this point:

At this point the regulation of the Missouri River and the revetment of the banks at St. Joseph and above Lake Contrary is the most complete and systematic work done near any city front on the river. The completion of this work now requires about 16,500 feet of bank revetment, estimated to cost $150,000.

So I say this is not beginning a new project. On the contrary, it is the completion of a project that has been under way for ten years. To refuse an appropriation sufficient to complete the work is, in my judgment, shortsighted, and will, if the river is permitted to cut its way into this lake, result in the destruction of much of the work already done by the Government, and will wash away many thousands of acres of farm land, ruin hundreds of people, who are as much entitled to consideration at the hands of Congress as the people of any other section of this country.

If the Missouri River is a navigable stream, it is the duty of Congress to put it in condition so that it may be navigated, and that, too, without demanding of any of the people who may be benefited by reason of the money expended that they pay one cent of the cost of such improvements. In these days, when Congress is besieged from within and without to appropriate large sums to subsidize steamship lines, when every great interest of the country seems to get easily all the protection they demand at the expense of all the people, including the ultimate consumer, why should Congress demand that the farmer, who may be benefited by the Government taking care of its own property, be required to pay any share or part of the expense? If these river improvements are necessary to protect or make navigable the great rivers of the country, then it is the duty of Congress to make the necessary appropriations to carry on the work. Why make the people who live in the bottoms of the Missouri River bear one-half the expense of improving the navigation of the river? The answer is, Because they are benefited by such improvement. If people who derive a benefit from the legislation of Congress are to pay one-half the cost, why not say to the manufacturers and other protected interests, You shall pay one-half of the cost of the protection given you. It is just as fair and reasonable to demand it of these interests as it is of the farmers who live along this river and are taxed from the cradle to the grave to build up the protected interests of the country.

Now, they do not seem to possess the influence necessary to secure their just proportion of the blessings so lavishly distributed upon the few favored classes of the country. But, my word for it, the day is not far distant when there will be an equalization of the burdens now borne by the many for the benefit of the powerful few and a more equal distribution of the benefits resulting from congressional legislation.

The amount it is proposed to give in subsidies to steamship companies—or, to put it more properly, the amount it is proposed to take out of the pockets of a people already overburdened with unjust and unequal taxation and put in the pocket of some wealthy corporation—would more than pay for all the work necessary to be done on the Missouri from the mouth of the Kaw River to the northwest corner of the State of Missouri, to revet the banks and save to the people living along its borders their homes and make the Missouri River what an All-Wise Providence intended it should be, a great commercial highway, carrying upon its bosom the products of the richest agricultural region in the world. Between the points last mentioned are 300,000 acres of rich, productive farm lands that could easily be made of the value of $100 per acre. But year by year it is being washed away because the Government refuses to do that which the report of the Rivers and Harbors Committee says should be done in order to secure navigation.

I desire again to call attention to the language of the report. I want the people living along the Missouri River in the district I have the honor to represent to know just what kind of work is necessary to make the river navigable and at the same time protect their farms from destruction without the outlay of a single dollar extra for the protection given them. Here it is:

There is no known method of river improvements which can give any permanent benefit to the navigation of the Mississippi River below Cairo unless it makes provision for the revetment of caving banks, and the sooner such work is completed the more quickly will assured navigation be obtained.

Do not overlook the fact that the same work that will make the Mississippi River navigable and protect its banks will make the Missouri navigable and protect its banks, and consequently protect every farm lying in the great valley.

Of course we can get a little protection, provided the farmers pay one-half the expense. This is not a square deal. It is not a fair distribution of favors. It is placing an unequal and unjust burden upon the backs of the people who can not bear the burden.

If the farmers of the Missouri Valley could organize, come to Washington, maintain a lobby, besiege the committee rooms as we have seen the favored few do when legislative favors were to be bestowed, it would not be many years until some attention would be paid to their demands.

In behalf of every resident in the valley of the Missouri north and west of Kansas City, I ask of this Congress that they be treated with the same fairness in the matter of river improvements that other and more favored portions of our country receive.

North of Kansas City and within a distance of 80 miles are the cities of Leavenworth and Atchison, in the State of Kansas, and the city of St. Joseph, in the State of Missouri—Leavenworth, with a population of 26,000; Atchison, 20,000; and St. Joseph, 125,000. These three cities, with a commerce and trade greater in volume than that of Kansas City, Mo., and all the towns combined from there to the mouth of the Missouri, are just as much entitled to the advantage of cheap transportation rates as any other part of the valley of the Missouri. Why are they wholly neglected? There may be some good reason why this discrimination should be shown, but it does not appear upon the face of the report.

The improvement of the Missouri River and other water courses of this country would be of far greater benefit to our people than the digging of the Panama Canal, that will cost before completion $750,000,000. One-fifth of this sum would make of the Missouri River a navigable stream for 2,300 miles, its entire navigable length, and save to the people in freight alone in five years more than the money expended.

President Roosevelt in his last annual message to Congress, in speaking of the great waste of our natural resources that was constantly going on, used this language, which I commend in a spirit of humility to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. He said:

But there are certain other forms of waste which could be entirely stopped—the waste of soil by washing, for instance, which is the most dangerous of all wastes now in progress in the United States, is easily preventable, so that this present enormous loss of fertility is unnecessary.

This recommendation received scant consideration at the hands of the Sixtieth Congress, and may meet the same fate here; but the day is not far distant when consideration will be given it and the relief pointed out will be granted. May some guardian spirit hasten the day, even if it brings about the early return of the man from Africa.

Let us consider for a moment the commercial importance of that section of the great Missouri Valley that has been entirely ignored by this bill. It is of great importance in the discussion of a measure of this kind that the interests to be served or benefited shall be pointed out. House Document No. 1120, second session of the Sixtieth Congress, gives the following figures:

CROP PRODUCTION.

The crop production is given in the following statement, showing not only for the entire States bordering the Missouri, but also for the portion in the 100-mile belt; the total grains produced in 1907 was: Corn, 25,000,000 tons; wheat, 7,000,000; oats, 4,300,000; barley, 1,400,000; rye, 122,000; buckwheat, 4,000; flaxseed, 562,000; potatoes, 1,200,000; hay, 15,000,000; being a total of nearly 55,000,000 tons, valued at over $1,000,000,000. For the 100-mile belt the total values are over 25,000,000 tons and nearly $500,000,000.

It will thus be seen that an enormous tonnage of grain must seek transportation at present by the railroads, transportation which should by all means seek the cheaper water rates of the Missouri. The corn production alone of the United States is about 80 per cent of the world, and that of the seven Missouri River States in 1907 was 33 per cent of the whole United States. The export trade of the United States in corn alone was 4,000,000 tons, and in total foodstuff products nearly 7,000,000 tons. It is thus seen what splendid opportunities for export trade are available by means of the Missouri and Mississippi rivers via the Gulf, or eventually also via Chicago and the Lakes.

Nor is this all. The meat products rank first among all manufactured products in the United States in net production and second in gross production, and are valued at over $800,000,000 per year, estimated to be over 3,200,000 tons, of which about one-quarter is produced in the cities of Sioux City, Omaha, St. Joseph, and Kansas City.

The manufactured products in 1900 of the four States from Sioux City to the mouth are as follows:

Iowa	$164,618,000
Nebraska	144,000,000
Kansas	172,000,000
Missouri	385,000,000
Total	865,618,000
And of the cities—
Sioux City	$15,000,000
Council Bluffs	2,600,000
St. Joseph	32,000,000
Atchison	2,600,000
Leavenworth	4,700,000
Kansas City, Kans	83,000,000
Kansas City, Mo	36,000,000
Jefferson City	3,600,000
St. Louis	234,000,000
Total	456,500,000

Between the mouth of the river and Kansas City, Mo., we find, according to this document, one city only that appears in the lists of cities with manufactured products that need transportation. The figures follow:

Kansas City, Mo	$36,000,000
Total	39,600,000

These two cities are magnificently remembered in the bill with an appropriation of $1,000,000, and as much more of the $175,000 appropriation for maintenance as the engineer may see proper to expend, even the whole of it, and if we judge the future by the past—said to be a good rule—the lion's share will be thus expended.

Now let us take the manufactured products of the cities that have been denied recognition by the bill:

Sioux City	$15,000,000
Council Bluffs	2,600,000
St. Joseph	32,000,000
Atchison	2,000,000
Leavenworth	4,700,000

The business interests of these cities receive not one dollar of the $42,000,000 carried by the bill. Nay, they do not even get the promise of a dollar in the future. The business men of the upper Missouri should get awake to their interests and demand that in the distributions of these favors that their rights and interests be considered; that in the same way they be given as cheap transportation rates as communities with one-fourth the commercial importance.

But there is another interest, a much larger business man interested in the matter of river improvements and cheap transportation than the business man of the city. I refer to the farmer, the man who produced the enormous crops mentioned in Document No. 1120. He performs the labor and pays the freight to get his product of that labor to market. Yet if he happens to live west of Kansas City, he can continue to pay exorbitant freight rates to the railroads, while his more fortunate brother engaged in the same line of business, residing in regions more favored by the committee, is given all the advantages of reduced rates that we have been told over and over is sure to follow the policy outlined in this bill. If it is a good thing, why not have a square deal and give this great producing part of the country its fair share of benefits bestowed?

Time and time again during the debate have we heard the remark that the States of Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, and Iowa were the breadbasket of the world—a meaningless phrase. I deny they are the breadbasket of anybody's world, or any portion of the world; they are the bread producers and the balance of the country stands ready with their breadbaskets to have them filled with the products of their toil and labor, and while partaking of their substance you deny them the same privileges given other sections of the country.

The farmers of these four States have just cause for complaint, and if I mistake not they will in their own good time and in their own way resent the slight that has been put upon them. They now know that they can be taxed without limit to improve the waterways, great and small, east of the Mississippi River, but not one dollar for their protection unless they are willing to pay one-half the cost of obtaining it. They are under no obligation to pay a single dollar toward the improvement of the Missouri River, and I hope and trust they will not be cajoled into doing it.

It has been suggested that the remarks made by the Speaker in the second session of the Fifty-fifth Congress may throw some light on the treatment accorded the upper Missouri. I will insert them for the benefit of those who are interested in this reach of the river:

Mr. CANNON. I want to say to my friend that those of us who know something of the Missouri River know there have been a great many millions spent upon it, and ten times as much more may be spent, and then a hundred million may be spent by mandamus to get commerce upon that river, and it would not come.

These remarks may explain why, as Speaker of the House, the same gentleman did not put upon the Committee on Rivers and Harbors a Representative whose district borders the river; but, in my judgment, it is not a sufficient reason for the refusal of the committee to make an appropriation for that part of the river. Besides, it is generally understood that the gentleman has repented and now takes the view that this river can be made of great value to the people for transportation purposes. While the light holds out to burn the greatest unbeliever has the right to repent. Let us hope they take advantage of the opportunity.

In the States of New York and New Jersey alone the bill appropriates more than $240,000 for the improvement of creeks, not rivers, and the people who live on their borders and perchance might be benefited are not required to pay a single dollar of the expense—more fortunate than the people who live along the borders of the Missouri.

In conclusion, I repeat that if the Missouri River is to be made a navigable stream, to be controlled by the Government, it is the duty of the Government to furnish the money necessary to carry on the work, and if in the doing of the work, whatever plan may be pursued, benefits may arise to the farms bordering the river, the Government has no right to demand contributions from the farmers to pay the expense of the improvement. If, on the other hand, the Missouri River is not a navigable stream and can not be made so, what right have we to spend the money of the Government or demand contributions from the people to carry on any kind of improvement of the river?

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Oakland, Cal.: For maintenance, and continuing improvement under the existing project, or, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, in accordance with the new plan of improvement printed in House Document No. 647, Sixty-first Congress, second session, $250,000: Provided, That the three bridges heretofore built by the United States in connection with this improvement may be turned over to the local authorities to be maintained and operated by them upon such terms as to transfer and control as in the discretion of the Secretary of War may be equitable and just to the United States and to said local authorities: Provided further, That of the appropriation herein made so much as shall be necessary may be expended for such alterations and repairs to said bridges as in the discretion of the Secretary of War may be essential to meet the terms of said transfer.

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order on the paragraph for the purpose of asking in reference to the turning over of these three bridges to the local authorities. It is clearly, I think, subject to a point of order.

Mr. KNOWLAND. What information does the gentleman desire?

Mr. MANN. I should like to know why they should be turned over?

Mr. KNOWLAND. Well, these three bridges are a part of the project adopted by the Government for the improvement of Oakland Harbor. The tidal canal was included in this project.

In constructing this tidal canal three public highways were cut off between the city of Alameda and Oakland, and the Government built these three drawbridges. They have been a source of constant expense to the Government to maintain. They have not been operated because the Government has not felt justified in incurring the additional expense of hiring bridge tenders in view of the commerce that now passes through the bridges. The county of Alameda, however, feels that the prospective commerce will justify them in accepting these bridges, keeping them in repair, and also operating them for all future time. They are willing to assume the responsibility of future operations and repair after the Government places them in working order. They have been a constant expense to the Government ever since their erection, as already stated, and the Government will annually be saved quite a considerable amount.

Mr. MANN. Were these bridges built by the Government out of river and harbor appropriations?

Mr. KNOWLAND. They were.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Sacramento and Feather rivers, California: Continuing improvement and toward the controlling of débris and floods, in accordance with the recommendations of the California Débris Commission in its report dated June 30, 1907 (printed in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, for 1907, pages 2262 to 2269, inclusive), $400,000: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended unless the State of California shall appropriate for the prosecution of said project a like sum of $400,000 and deposit the same in the Treasury of the United States: Provided further, That the Treasurer of the United States is hereby authorized to receive from the State of California any and all sums of money that have been or may hereafter be appropriated by said State for the purpose herein set forth; and when so received the said sums are hereby appropriated for said purpose to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers: And provided further, That the work herein provided for shall not be begun until all rights of way needed for levees and spoil banks have been furnished the United States free of cost.

Mr. McLACHLAN of California. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that that paragraph be passed for the present without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the paragraph be passed without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Columbia River, between the foot of The Dalles Rapids and the head of Celilo Falls, Oregon and Washington: Continuing improvement with a view to completing said improvement within a period of six years, $600,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of getting a little advice from the Rivers and Harbors Committee. I reported in a bill here a day or two ago for the construction of a railroad bridge across the Columbia River and Celilo Canal, which seemed to us perfectly proper to report. But we, of course, would have to give to the Secretary of War authority to permit the use of the land upon the sides of Celilo Canal, so far as necessary for the construction of the bridge. I would like to inquire if anyone can tell me whether there can be any possible objection to the railroad at this place constructing a bridge across Columbia River and then touching on land between the canal and the river and across the canal?

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have been at the location of this proposed bridge a number of times, and the banks of the Columbia River there are very high, and I would not think there would be any interference with navigation by the railroad bridge.

Mr. MANN. Well, of course, the War Department would not permit the erection of a bridge there that would interfere with navigation on the river, but there is no navigation at that point.

Mr. HAWLEY. Not until the canal is completed. I do not know how high the banks are, but they are very high.

Mr. MANN. Very well; I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Kahului Harbor, Hawaii, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 593, Sixty-first Congress, second session, and subject to the conditions relative to cooperation on the part of local interests, as set forth in said document, $150,000.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 80, lines 7 and 8, strike out the words "relative to cooperation on the part of local interests, as."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause preliminary examinations and surveys to be made at the localities named in this section, as hereinafter set forth, and a sufficient sum to pay the cost thereof may be allotted from the amount appropriated in this section. In all cases a preliminary examination of the river, harbor, or other proposed improvement mentioned shall first be made, and a report as to the advisability of its improvement shall be submitted, unless a survey or estimate is herein expressly directed. If upon such preliminary examination the proposed improvement is not deemed advisable, no further action shall be taken thereon without the further direction of Congress; but in case the report shall be favorable to such proposed improvement, or that a survey and estimate should be made to determine the advisability of improvement, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to cause surveys to be made, and the cost and advisability to be reported to Congress. And such reports containing plans and estimates shall also contain a statement as to the rate at which the work should be prosecuted. Such examinations and surveys shall be reviewed by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, as provided in section 3 of the river and harbor act of March 2, 1907: Provided, That every examination and survey report submitted to Congress, as provided for herein or as may be provided for hereafter, in addition to full information regarding the present and prospective commercial importance of the project covered by the report, and the benefit to commerce likely to result from any proposed plan of improvement, shall contain also such data as it may be practicable to secure regarding (first) the establishment of terminal and transfer facilities, (second) the development and utilization of water power for industrial and commercial purposes, and (third) such other subjects as may be properly connected with such project: Provided further, That in the investigation and study of these questions consideration shall be given only to their bearing upon the improvement of navigation and to the possibility and desirability of their being coordinated in a logical and proper manner with improvements for navigation to lessen the cost of such improvements and to compensate the Government for expenditures made in the interest of navigation: And provided further, That the investigation and study of these questions as provided herein may, upon review by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors when called for as now provided by law, be extended to any work of improvement now under way and to any locality the examination and survey of which has heretofore been, or may hereafter be, authorized by Congress.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman if the provision on page 85, which provides that in future examinations and surveys that the engineer shall report upon "(first) the establishment of terminal and transfer facilities, (second) the development and utilization of water power for industrial and commercial purposes, and (third) such other subjects as may be properly connected with such project," is new legislation? I will ask if that was carried in a prior bill?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I regret that the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS] is not here to notice this part of the bill to which he has directed his remarks. It has been part of the construction of these bills since I have been on the committee, twelve years.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Chairman, this is simply a repetition of the language contained in the law of 1909, our last river and harbor appropriation bill. It is the identical language given in that bill.

Mr. SMALL. Was it first inserted in the law of March 3, 1909?

Mr. LAWRENCE. It is my understanding that it was first inserted then.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I think it is of great importance that in further appropriations for river and harbor improvements some steps should be taken by Congress to make them contingent to a certain extent upon the providing of proper terminals, because such terminals are absolutely necessary for the promotion of commerce, particularly upon our internal nontidal streams. Possibly in some sections of the country a hard and arbitrary condition would prevent any expenditure of the appropriation or the improvement of a stream; but I do believe that a gradual increase in the limitations upon river and harbor improvements for the proper provision of terminals, particularly upon nontidal streams, should be had in mind both by the Rivers and Harbors Committee and by Congress, in order that these expenditures which are made shall be utilized in the best way for the promotion of our commerce, because while we may improve the streams, yet if analogous to railroads we do not at the same time see to it that terminals are provided, then no sufficient water-borne commerce will be built up as the result of these appropriations.

The Clerk read as follows:

The surveys of navigable streams herein or hereafter authorized shall include such stream-flow measurements and other investigations of the watersheds as may be necessary for preparation of plans of improvement and a proper consideration of all uses of the stream affecting navigation, and whenever necessary similar investigations may be made in connection with all navigable streams under improvement. Whenever permission for the construction of dams in navigable streams is granted, or is under consideration by Congress, such surveys and investigations of the sections of the streams affected may be made as are necessary to secure conformity with rational plans for the improvement of the streams for navigation.

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order on that paragraph, and desire to ask whether it is not new?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes; it is new.

Mr. MANN. Just what is the reason for it? Bills pending before the House for the construction of dams go to the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. I do not quite understand the theory of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors making provision for a survey, when the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce have under consideration a bill for the construction of a dam.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. This is based on a recommendation of the National Waterways Commission, that engineers when making surveys of streams can just as well obtain the stream-flow measurements and enter them in their reports. It is simply to have information that is not always obtainable from the Geological Survey.

Mr. MANN. Possibly that is true, but I think it is also true that the Geological Survey now makes these stream measurements. Here is a proposition to duplicate that work and have the government engineers do it. I do not quite see the force of that. So far as Congress is concerned, the effort generally is to keep from duplicating the same work in different departments. Of course the different departments are always endeavoring to duplicate work, because they lap over.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. This would hardly be a duplication of work, from the fact that this refers only to navigable streams, whereas the Geological Survey largely confine their work to the nonnavigable mountain streams.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; the gentleman is mistaken about that. The Geological Survey make stream measurements of navigable streams.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Not to any great extent.

Mr. MANN. The great majority of streams in the country are navigable streams.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. If the gentleman will permit me, I suggest that there are a number of streams in this country which are investigated by the engineers where the Geological Survey have never entered upon any work at all, and in this way we can get the information from the engineers of the army corps, and it is entirely unbelievable that subsequently the Geological Survey would go in and duplicate work already done.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think it unbelievable, when the Geological Survey has done the work, that the government engineers will do it again?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Then he wants to change the language of this provision, because this requires them to do it over again.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. It will not require it, if it is already done. This would get information that we would not otherwise get.

Mr. MANN. This says—

The surveys of navigable streams herein or hereafter authorized shall include such stream-flow measurements—

And so forth. If that is not obligatory, I do not know what the English language means.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Oh, that is true, but if the measurements are already made, if they can obtain them by reference to the records in the office of the Geological Survey, I take it the gentleman himself would not construe the law to mean that they would have to go out and remeasure.

Mr. MANN. I do not know how I would construe the law if Congress enacted it, but it says so, and that is the reason I think we ought not to endeavor to have a department construe the law directly contrary to what the law says.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Take the division of irrigation and drainage in the Department of Agriculture. They go out and make these surveys very frequently, and when the Geological Survey come to make a survey of the identical area they always consult the records of the Department of Agriculture, and vice versa.

Mr. MANN. That is under the existing system?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. MANN. They do that now?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman proposes to change that?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. No; I do not change that at all. It just provides another agency in addition, not a change of it.

Mr. MANN. They now have the authority to obtain all the information necessary to make a report to Congress; but this is a deliberate purpose to have the government engineers enter upon the work of gauging streams throughout the country.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that appropriations are now made in the river and harbor bill for gauging the waters of the Columbia River and measuring tidal and river volumes. He will notice that on page 74, lines 22 and 23.

There is also a general appropriation for gauging the waters of the Mississippi River and its tributaries. Now, this paragraph simply indicates to the engineers that Congress desires complete investigation made in connection with streams under improvement and whenever plans are in preparation for new improvements. It will be noted that this provision applies to surveys only.

Mr. SMALL. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to me?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. SMALL. I would suggest that the principal difference is one of purpose. The stream measurements made by the Geological Survey are primarily for ascertaining the water power, while stream measurements provided for in this bill are for the purpose of ascertaining the conditions as affecting navigation.

Mr. MANN. What difference does it make if they ascertain the fact? It does not make any difference whether it is for the purpose of navigation or to ascertain the water power.

Mr. SMALL. The stream measurements made by the Geological Survey might have no relation to the problems of navigation, just as these investigations as to the navigability of the stream might not discover any water power. So I think it is one of purpose. While there may be some repetition of the work, it is one that is necessary.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman propose to have stream measurements under the provision for the Geological Survey and then again here because the particular measurement made in one case will not do the work in the other?

Mr. SMALL. If the stream measurement made by the Geological Survey would not answer the purposes indicated or to be accomplished in this bill, you need further legislation in order to have the stream measurement applied primarily to the question of navigation.

Mr. SHERLEY. It may be that they do not make measurements at all places necessary, but the gentleman's statement that their measurement would not be available for this purpose is not accurate. If the measurements are made, they are sufficient for this purpose as well as for any other.

Mr. SMALL. It might be, but it might not be complete.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is mistaken as to the nature of the measurements made. I happen to have investigated this subject at some length, and I know it is claimed as one of the justifications for the geological work of measuring streams that it can be used for this purpose.

Mr. SMALL. It might be used in part, perhaps.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to call the attention of the Chair and also the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to what is included in this provision. I congratulate the gentlemen of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors that it is not a matter that was evolved from this committee, but from a commission never authorized by law. There has been a constant effort of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to prevent the government engineers from making surveys of rivers until they are authorized by Congress. Every river and harbor bill contains a provision that the engineers shall not make a survey unless it is authorized by Congress, and yet this provision absolutely overturns the other provisions of the bill in that respect, because under this provision any Member of Congress, by the introduction of a bill to authorize the construction of a dam over a stream, can compel the War Department to make a survey of that stream and a plan for its improvement. The language of the bill is:

Whenever permission for the construction of dams in navigable streams is granted or is under consideration by Congress—

That means the introduction of a bill—

such surveys and investigations of the sections of the streams affected may be made as are necessary to secure conformity with rational plans for the improvement of the stream for navigation.

A proposition which completely destroys the other proposition of the bill and the policy of the committee, that these surveys shall only be made when ordered by Congress.

Mr. Chairman, the language is complete new legislation; it is not legislation in connection with the improvement of rivers and harbors in all its particulars. The great majority of the dams that are authorized by Congress have no relation to improvement of rivers or harbors, and it seems to me that the provision is subject to the point of order.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, this is making a mountain out of a molehill. The only purpose of this paragraph is to authorize the Secretary of War, when called upon by Congress to make a survey, to include the stream measurement in the investigations. It is to report upon the general proposition of constructing a dam across a navigable stream at a given locality, to cause such investigations to be made as are necessary to pass on this general proposition intelligently. This will rarely, if ever, call for a formal survey. Whenever the construction of a dam is actually authorized, the Secretary of War can cause such surveys to be made as are necessary to determine important details of the dam, notably its height and definite location, so that it will not interfere with the subsequent improvement of the river. But such surveys and investigations would not involve the actual preparation of plans for the improvement of the river. Any dam that had no relation to the improvement of a navigable river would require only the investigation necessary to establish this fact.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Suppose the bill is introduced for the construction of a dam across a navigable stream and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce——

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. That is where it should go.

Mr. MANN. And that committee addressed the Secretary of War or the Chief of Engineers and requested them to make an examination for the improvement of the river in connection with rational plans for the improvement and construction of a dam. Would they not be required to make the survey?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. You always ask for a report on the bill. If a dam is to be constructed, the first thing done is to refer the bill to the Secretary of War and he refers it to the engineers, who do not always have sufficient data to determine whether or not a dam at the locality would be objectionable. When, later, a dam is authorized, a survey is often required to pass upon the plans intelligently when they are submitted for approval.

Now, all that is intended in this paragraph is to indicate that Congress desires complete investigations made and authorizes the engineers to expend the money required in making them.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to suggest a word on the point of order. I understand that a river and harbor bill may carry new legislation, if it is relative to the general subject.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Certainly. There is no point of order raised here. The gentleman from Illinois simply wanted to call attention to this paragraph and reserved the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I made the point of order, but not, of course, on the ground of new legislation. I make the point of order on the ground that the committee is not privileged to report a provision of this sort, which is not a part of river and harbor improvement.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I have quite carefully read the paragraph to which the point of order is directed, and it seems to me that every provision in the paragraph relates to the question of the improvement of navigable streams for the purpose of promoting navigation. It is all relevant to the general subject of the improvement of rivers and harbors for the purpose of promoting navigation. It occurs to me that it is clearly relevant to the general subject, and the remarks of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] have more reference to the question of policy than the question of power. The river and harbor bill may carry authority for the improvement of a river or a harbor without any regard to a recommendation on the part of the War Department or without having the matter referred to the War Department at all. It is true that bills have carried provisions prohibiting the Secretary of War from improving streams or harbors until there has been an investigation, but this bill, being different from the ordinary general appropriation bill, may change legislation of that kind. It may even be inconsistent. It may confer upon the War Department powers that may now be exercised by the Department of Commerce and Labor, if the power it confers on the War Department is for the promotion of the improvement of streams and harbors for purposes of navigation. This provision in relation to surveys respecting the construction of bridges directly bears upon the effect the bridges may have upon navigation of the stream, a subject-matter that is clearly within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and the whole paragraph is directed to the subject of the improvement of streams for purposes of commerce and navigation, a subject that I think the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, under the rules, clearly has a right to report legislation upon.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the Chair's attention to the first section of the paragraph, from line 4 to line 10, inclusive, and to suggest that at any rate it is not subject to the point of order. The language there is that surveys of navigable streams may be made "and shall include such stream-flow measurements as may be necessary for preparation of plans of improvement" of navigation, etc. I submit that that particular portion of the paragraph comes clearly within the rules which give the Committee on Rivers and Harbors jurisdiction over the improvement of streams.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, just a word. The language of the provision is:

> And other investigations of the watersheds as may be necessary for preparation of plans of improvements—

And so forth.

If the Committee on Rivers and Harbors is authorized to report in a privileged matter to make an investigation of the watersheds, that carries with it, of course, an investigation of what is on the ground, it carries with it an investigation of forestry, whether those watersheds ought to be planted with trees in order to retain the water; it carries with it the authority to make an investigation as to whether you can raise crops upon the ground and cultivate the ground, thereby lessening or increasing the flow of the water to the stream. If it be held that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, as a matter of the improvement of rivers and harbors can investigate water which flows upon the watersheds and the rate of flow from the watersheds, that would authorize the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to take jurisdiction of everything in relation to the Appalachian Mountains or the Rocky Mountains or any other place in the country from which water can eventually get into navigable streams.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. When speaking before I did not know a point of order had been made. Referring to the National Waterways Commission, of which I spoke earlier, I wish to recall to the gentleman from Illinois that it was created in the last river and harbor appropriation bill, approved March 3, 1909, so that it is a creature of law.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I thought the gentleman referred to the old commission.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Referring to the point of order, Mr. Chairman, it is manifest if a survey is ordered by a river and harbor bill the engineers would have a perfect right to include in their report whatever is called for in this paragraph.

Mr. MANN. I think there is no doubt about it.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Likewise if the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee refers a bill to the War Department respecting the location of a dam an engineer should have the same authority to make these investigations in the interest of navigation.

What difference does it make, Mr. Chairman, whether the bill be referred to the War Department by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee or by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors? The purpose is to have an investigation or a survey to protect a navigable stream against dams detrimental to its improvement, and therefore certainly the survey is in the interest of navigation. Such being the case this bill can properly appropriate for the expense incurred. I submit that the paragraph is here rightfully and ought to stay.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman answer an inquiry? What is meant by "other investigations of the watersheds?"

Mr. MADDEN. Everything pertaining to the survey; everything pertaining to information on which to base the construction of the channel.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman's answer be made public——

Mr. MADDEN. Everything which may be necessary for the ascertainment of information on which to base the construction of the channel.

Mr. SHERLEY. Without regard to how remote it may be.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman consider under this language the engineers who were making the survey would be warranted in conducting experiments in regard to forestation in order to determine——

Mr. MADDEN. No; that would have no reference whatever to the construction of the channel.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, yes; it is contended, and seriously contended, by quite a number of people that the very question of forests and forestation does determine the flow of water and the condition of the channel, and that really it is one of a dozen things directly involved.

Mr. MADDEN. That is in case of mountain streams, the channels of which are not adapted for use for navigation.

Mr. SHERLEY. But I call the attention of the gentleman to the word "watershed," which contemplates just these kinds of mountain streams; we do not find watersheds except in the mountains.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] makes the point of order on the paragraph on page 86, which provides for two things. First, in the case of an authorized survey, such surveys and investigations as may be necessary for preparation of plans of improvement of the streams in question and, second, for a similar investigation where there is either authorized or is likely to be authorized a dam on the streams in question. Now, of course, the point of order does not lie to this paragraph upon the ground that it is legislation, for the reason that it has been uniformly held that a river and harbor bill is not a general appropriation bill and is not subject, therefore, to the restriction of the rules which prohibit legislation upon general appropriation bills. A river and harbor bill may legislate, providing the legislation is germane to the jurisdiction of the committee. Rule XI provides that legislation with respect to the improvement of rivers and harbors shall go to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. Very clearly, to the mind of the Chair, the first part of this paragraph is within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, because it provides for such investigations as will enable the improvement of rivers and harbors; and it seems to the Chair that the second part of the paragraph is also within the jurisdiction of the committee for the reason that a certain method of improvement might be proper in case of a river that is not obstructed by a dam or does not contain a dam or other structure, while a different sort of treatment may be required where there is a dam in such river. It is equally the province of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in both cases to provide for such investigation as will enable the improvement of the river to be made consistent with conditions as they may be found to exist. The Chair thinks, therefore, that both parts of the paragraph are in order, and overrules the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of calling the attention of the committee to what seems to me, although perhaps it may not be, a contradiction. On page 83, lines 16 to 18, is the provision:

> That no preliminary examination, survey, project, or estimate for new works other than those designated in this or some prior act or joint resolution shall be made.

Now this apparently requires that there shall be some connection in this with some prior act in order to make the survey, while the paragraph under consideration directs or authorizes the survey and investigation upon a substantive introduction of a bill in Congress without even its being passed. Of course, I do not care whether the gentleman changes it or not. If he wants a contradiction in the law as it passes from his committee, that is satisfactory to me. This contemplates a report to the committee that asks for it, and if the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce sends a bill for the construction of a dam to the War Department under this provision, they will make the survey, notwithstanding the provisions in your bill that they shall not.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. That is the intention.

Mr. MANN. That is what I want to know. You have a flat contradiction in your bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Oh, no. Let me show you. This is for the purpose of improving the river. This survey that is asked for by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, if you please, allows the engineer force to make such investigations at that time as they may deem necessary to make a proper report on the dam. The interdicted surveys are those which contemplate a report to Congress to be used as a basis of an appropriation for improvement.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit a question there?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Are you not aware of the fact that the Engineer Department of the War Department now has that power and for years has been exercising it?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Oh, yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then why is it necessary to include it here?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. In order that the engineers may have both the authority and the necessary funds. Moreover, this paragraph would relieve the corps of the necessity of other appropriations. They have this power to measure water on the Mississippi River and its tributaries. We have here on one of the pages a thousand dollars to enable them to gauge water on the Columbia River. This would bring the several appropriations together and do away with special appropriations.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph beginning on line 4 and ending on line 16. I make that motion, first, because the authority, so far as the first part of this paragraph is concerned, is now possessed and exercised by the War Department. It is therefore unnecessary. The matter of gauging streams is a matter that has been discussed upon this floor a great deal in the last few years. There is another department of the Government engaged in doing this work on interstate streams all over the United States for the purpose of determining the average water flow and determining whether or not it would be advisable to improve streams so as to make them navigable. This work is also done to determine questions in relation to navigation and water supply. For several years the department, other than the War Department, has attempted to secure the enactment of a bill expressly authorizing the gauging of streams by that department. I refer to the Geological Survey. But the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has never until now given a favorable consideration to their proposition. I can readily see how it would be possible under this provision for two departments to enter into an agreement that the gauging of the streams under this provision should be done by the Geological Survey for the benefit of the Engineer Corps of the War Department.

I do not know whether the present Committee on Rivers and Harbors have pending before it the bill I refer to, but I know in the last Congress the bill was referred to that committee and considered by that committee as to whether or not this general proposition of clothing any department of the Government with general authority for the gauging of streams everywhere or anywhere in the United States should be granted or not. When before the Committee on Appropriations two years ago, General Mackenzie, former Chief of the Engineer Corps, speaking on this subject, said this:

> The CHAIRMAN. Does the War Department avail itself of the Geological Survey in the matter of gauging of streams in making these river and harbor improvements? In other words, to what extent, if at all, does the War Department avail itself of the matter collected by the Geological Survey?
> General MACKENZIE. So far as the records of our office go, they might not show completely. There are undoubtedly occasions when our district officers may make use of published information. A few cases have come to my knowledge in which district officers asked for information, knowing that it was accessible.
> The CHAIRMAN. Does the work of the Geological Survey in the gauging of streams influence the action of the War Department in the matter of making river and harbor improvements?
> General MACKENZIE. Not necessarily. In ordinarily devising plans, very frequently the discharge of the river at different times at high water and low water would be quite an important thing. Such plans, for instance, as are now having the consideration of the Geological Survey. Such information, if already available and known to be reliable, might be used. If not available, however, we would make the necessary observations as a part of the improvement, the latter being the method usually found necessary.
> The CHAIRMAN. Is the gauging done on the rivers that are navigable that come under the jurisdiction of the War Department?
> General MACKENZIE. To tell you the truth, I do not know very well to what extent the gauging work of the Geological Survey is done. We make a great many gaugings in connection with our work.
> The CHAIRMAN. You make systematic gaugings yourselves in connection with the river and harbor improvements?
> General MACKENZIE. Yes, sir; such as may be necessary and where the information is not at hand. Of course if it is in a published report we would avail ourselves of that.

Now, Mr. Chairman, all of the authority to obtain information regarding the flow of streams necessary to the completion or carrying on of any river and harbor improvement authorized in this bill exists to-day and is vested in the Engineer Corps of the War Department, and that authority has been exercised in the past. Then what is the necessity of incorporating this provision, unless it is for the purpose of giving some other department of the Government that has not been able to secure express authority of law for the doing of that which they are doing an opportunity to obtain such authorization in connection with the work they are doing. I submit that inasmuch as it is not necessary to carry on the work of improving rivers and harbors by the War Department, inasmuch as that department is engaged in doing work herein provided, there is no necessity for taking the chance of authorizing this work to be done by some other bureau in some other department where this work is being done without authority of law.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I say to the committee, there is a necessity for retaining this paragraph. It is not here by accident. It is not here because it has had no consideration; it is not here because we are ignorant of its purpose in being here. It is here because it is in the interest of rivers and harbors, and nothing else. [Applause.] It is true, as the gentleman from Minnesota says, that when there is a survey ordered, then the Engineer Corps has a perfect right to take the gauge of the waters and measure the flow, and all that sort of thing, provided the money is available; but when they are asked by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee to indicate the location of a dam for purposes of rational system of improvement, the authority to make any considerable expenditure has been questioned, and, at any rate, very strictly construed by the Engineer Department. This compels them to go to some report of surveys published by some other department of the Government, if such reports are available.

Mr. TAWNEY. Why, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. General Mackenzie says they do not.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Oh, no; oh, no. He does not say anything of the kind. He says they get it when they can; but he does not know how often they can get it. There is nothing sure about it. Do the gentlemen of this committee desire to compel the great Engineering Corps to take their information second hand? [Applause.] I do not believe you do. I think this is economy run mad. The Engineer Corps ought to have the right clearly stated to make such measurements and get such information as are necessary when called upon to report in regard to dams, and funds in sufficient amounts should be made available.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman whether it is contemplated that the stream-flow measurements are to be measurements made by the engineer to determine, for instance, the discharge of a stream, or whether it contemplates measurements from year to year, because on that, to my mind, would depend largely whether the matter ought to be with the engineers or with another department.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. The purpose of this paragraph is simply this—not to compel the Engineer Corps to take their information secondhand. Whatever information is needed, they ought to have the privilege of securing it properly and not be compelled to rely upon some other branch of the Government or some book or report, the accuracy of which they do not know. If there is any one branch of this Government that reduces its work to the most scientific accuracy, it is this Engineer Corps

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, I am in accord with the gentleman in his admiration of the corps; but what I would like to find out is whether the gentleman contemplates the continual taking of stream measurements by this corps, or whether it is intended to take these measurements only at the time they are considering a river improvement and think it important.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. At a time when they are considered important, of course.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, they have authority now to take these measurements.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Not when a bill is sent to them by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. It will be done when money is provided for that purpose and Congress clearly indicates that it wants complete investigation made. As it is now, money is not always considered available, and unquestioned authority does not exist.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman really think they do not get their pay?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I shall not unduly delay the bill, but it seems to me that this matter is of sufficient importance not to permit our eagerness to pass the bill to induce us to agree to it without consideration.

There are two kinds of stream measurements, and they may serve the same or different purposes. Usually the stream measurement that is made by the Engineer Corps is the stream measurement looking to obtain simply the data at a particular time as to the discharge of the stream, whereas the stream measurements that are undertaken by the Geological Survey extend over a long period of time, and for their value depend upon the length of time over which they have extended, and are for the purpose of determining, among other things, the causes of floods and the average quantity of water passing through a stream.

It is perfectly manifest that the Engineer Corps of the Army could not, without departing from all the work it has ever done heretofore, maintain these measurements continuously and over a long period of time. If that sort of measurement is to be of value, it must be done as it has been done heretofore by the Geological Survey. So far as making a particular stream measurement at a certain time to determine the flow of that stream, the Engineer Corps of the War Department, whenever it has found it necessary, has always made such a measurement. Now, I have no sympathy with the much-applauded statement that the Engineer Corps should not get their information secondhand. If the information is accurate, and they can get it without spending the money over again to do the same work, they ought to get it secondhand, and they are not so superior to every other branch of the Government that they must do everything themselves that need be done. I have an exceeding great admiration for the Engineer Corps of the Army, but if these measurements can be made, as I believe they ought to be made, over a long period of time, in order to be of value, then they should not be made under the Engineering Corps, and that corps should, if you please to put it in that way, get its information secondhand. Therefore I asked the gentleman the question, which he has not yet answered, what character of stream measurement it was that he expected to have done under this provision. If it is only the kind that has heretofore been performed by the Engineer Department, then they do not need the authority. If it contemplates that they shall continually have these measurements from year to year, then I do not think they are the proper department to do the work.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. It seems to me that the language of the bill itself settles that question very clearly. These measurements are confined to "surveys of navigable streams herein or hereafter authorized." They are to be made when surveys are authorized in this bill or hereafter, and they are to go so far only as it is necessary for the engineers to determine upon the plan of improvement. It seems to me that that language could not be any clearer, that no words could be found which would make them more certain, that it was not intended that the engineers were to enter upon a system of determining the flow from day to day, from week to week, and year to year.

Mr. SHERLEY. Unfortunately the gentleman's statement of the language is only a partial statement. If it was limited to what he has quoted, that might be true; but the language says:

The surveys of navigable streams herein or hereafter authorized shall include such stream-flow measurements and other investigations of the watersheds * * *—

Now, there you are leaving the navigable stream entirely—as may be necessary for preparation of plans of improvement and a proper consideration of all uses of the stream affecting navigation.

Now, I will tell you how this comes to be in here, and its purpose. I realize that there is now a movement on foot looking not only to the improvement of the rivers for purposes of navigation, but in improving them for navigation to consider all of the other questions that are embraced in the general subject of the conservation of our resources.

Against that movement I have no criticism. I believe the plan ought to embrace that wide scope. But I submit, to accomplish what the movers of this amendment intend, you have got to have continual measurements, and this was expected to bring about that sort of measurement, not at the time you were preparing improvement of the particular river for navigation, but measurements covering a series of years, in order to determine all the collateral questions of flood, of rainfall, of discharge, and the effect of vegetation and forestation upon the flow of streams.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice in this section, page 85 of the bill, in the provision relative to the examination and survey of rivers by engineers, a clause to this effect, beginning in line 5:

In addition to full information regarding the present and prospective commercial importance of the project covered by the report, and the benefit to commerce likely to result from any proposed plan of improvement—

And so forth. I wish to direct attention, especially the attention of the chairman of the committee, to that provision in the bill. I have in mind a number of rivers that drain sections consisting of immense undeveloped natural resources, such as coal, timber, oil, stone, and other resources of great value if developed. I have also observed that some engineers when engaged in this work of preliminary examination of such rivers have refused to give proper or serious consideration to their prospective commerce with respect to their possibilities if an outlet were furnished for the transportation of these natural resources after their development. Any Member will agree that we have many sections of the country now, as we have had, that have not been developed and may not be developed unless some means of transportation is afforded.

Now, if our department of engineers adhered strictly to the policy of considering present commerce or the present volume of business done, without keeping in view the amount of tonnage that the river would afford when its natural resources shall be developed, their estimate would naturally retard or prevent the improvement of many rivers.

I wish to inquire of the chairman what objection there is to inserting in the bill an amendment requiring the engineers to consider as one element of their estimates the question of future development of natural resources drained by a particular river or rivers?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, the language of the bill includes prospective as well as present conditions.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. But the engineers do not consider that element in many instances on account of the broadness and indefiniteness of the language.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I have not discovered that weakness or omission in the engineers' report.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I have discovered it very forcibly in dealing with the engineers, and have specially called their attention to it. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Mr. Chairman, something has been said upon the floor of the House to-day about the watchdogs from the South sitting quietly by——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. MACON. Before I get started, yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It happened that I have just read the proceedings, and the reference was not to watchdogs of the South, but to "watchdogs of the Treasury."

Mr. MACON. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will modify my beginning by saying that something has been said about the watchdogs of the Treasury sitting quietly by and allowing this bill to go through without objection. I know nothing about the watchdogs of the Treasury, I do not know who they are, but I undertake to say that I do not believe that there ever was a watchdog of the Treasury who had so little gumption about him as to oppose a meritorious proposition, an intelligent, economical improvement of the waterways of our country. [Applause.]

I think the pepie are taxed for the purpose of getting money into the Treasury to be used for the building up of the country, and I can not conceive of any more advantageous way of building it up than by improving its waterways and its harbors.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACON. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Did the gentleman hear an address made by me a little while ago in which I subscribed to all the appropriations made for the Mississippi River, including the gentleman's territory?

Mr. MACON. If I did not hear it, I am satisfied from my knowledge of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he would have the good judgment to do so if he spoke upon the subject at all, whether I heard him or not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman do me the kindness to answer this question, because the gentleman always tries to be fair? Will the gentleman subscribe as readily to the proposition which I shall have to advance at the next session, if I come here, as I do now subscribe to his?

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I will say very frankly to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that if he has a proposition to improve an important waterway, be it the Delaware or any other stream, within the confines of this Union, he shall have my earnest support and humble vote for the proposition.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then, if I am for the Red River or the Arkansas River this year, the gentleman will be for the Atlantic-coast project next year?

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I am for any improvement of the waterways of the country wherever they have been examined and passed upon by an intelligent examination board of engineers duly authorized by this body for that purpose.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then the gentleman removes all suggestions of sectionalism and permits the discussion of the last two days to end in perfect good humor as between all parts of the country, north, east, south, and west?

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I abhor the word "sectionalism." Actually, it is a stench in the nostrils of all true patriotic Americans at this time. There ought to be no North, South, East, or West when it comes to improving this great Union of ours. We ought to know no individual party section when its comes to matters of this kind. [Applause.]

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Then, Mr. Chairman, both these distinguished watchdogs of the Treasury will agree to the proposition once before made on this floor under similar circumstances that—

> 'Tis sweet to hear the watchdog's honest bark
> Bay deep-mouth'd welcome as we draw near home.

[Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. All is well that ends well.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. MACON. I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to continue for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand the significance of the poetry that my friend from Mississippi has just quoted, in view of what I have just stated, that there ought to be no sections when it comes to improving this great country. That carried with it the idea that there is no home for any of us to approach where a watchdog could give us deep-mouthed welcome as we drew near. I think the waterways in the State of Pennsylvania are entitled to as much consideration as are the waterways in the State of Arkansas or the State of Texas or elsewhere. [Applause.] We ought not to stop to think whether the appropriation is going to our next-door neighbor, to our homes, or elsewhere. The great Mississippi, I undertake to say, is not only the Father of Waters in the United States, but I believe is the mother of them—both the father and the mother [laughter]—and hence I think it ought to be improved first, not because I live upon it, but because it is the greatest river in the world, and its improvement would mean more than the improvement of any other river in the world.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman thinks the Mississippi is the father of waterways?

Mr. MACON. And the mother also.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then where does the Speaker come in? Is he the godfather of all? [Laughter.]

Mr. MACON. The Speaker? Why, he belongs to the whole country.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. He belongs to the whole country?

Mr. MACON. And he can take in the Mississippi as well as he can the Delaware, and ought to be able to do so.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Which we hope he will.

Mr. MACON. But Mr. Chairman, in conclusion [laughter], let me say that there are no watchdogs——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman intend that for the gentleman from Pennsylvania or for the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. MACON. What?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. "In conclusion."

Mr. MACON. For both.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will, if you will.

Mr. MACON. For both, that is all. Mr. Chairman, the only purpose for which I rose was to state that when we come to improve the waterways of the country we ought to join hands and do our very best to improve them in the most advantageous and harmonious manner possible. When it comes to constructing public buildings to do the business of the Government in we ought to all join hands and construct them where most needed and without regard to locality. But when it comes to appropriating money for wine junkets, for the construction of military roads in Alaska, where no military operations are ever had; when it comes to that kind of expenditures, I am opposed to them, no matter to what locality the appropriation is to go. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in support of the argument for recognition of worthy inland projects in commercial areas along the Atlantic coast I desire to reproduce the address delivered by me as president of the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association at the December (1909) convention of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress in the city of Washington, which, as stenographically reported, was as follows:

"Mr. President, ladies and gentlemen:

"When the country took account of its stock in 1900, it found that the population had been tending rapidly westward. The old original States along the Atlantic seaboard, from which the energy and the enterprise of the whole country had sprung, discovered that they had been outstripped west of the Appalachian chain by an excess of nine millions of people. While not perhaps a matter of general surprise, these glowing western returns showed there was something that needs to be driven into the minds of some of our self-satisfied eastern business men; they showed that 'something was doing' in the great Middle West between the Rocky Mountains and the Appalachian chain, and along the Pacific seacoast, that needed a little attention upon the part of the Atlantic seaboard.

"It developed that while we had been building up our industries, and our population had been increasing, and our activities had been giving us a world-wide reputation for two hundred years, the activities of the people of the Middle West and of the Pacific slope, though of recent origin, were so much more vigorous that the younger men of the West, wrapped up in their own enterprises, with their own opportunities confronting them and attracting all of their attention, had forgotten a little bit of the history of that section of the country which sometimes they are inclined to regard as the 'effete East.'

"When in 1906 and 1907 that memorable car shortage struck this country that caused an agitation throughout the Middle West and along the Pacific slope; an agitation that was heard in all the offices of the great railroad magnates of this country, and which came surging down over the roads and waterways to the halls of Congress in the Capital City at Washington, there was an awakening along the Atlantic seaboard to the fact that the West was moving, was hustling, was pushing, both in the matter of railroads and waterways, and was demanding increased facilities for the transportation of its tremendous output from the fields, from forests, and from factories, which latter were then rapidly rearing their heads the country over. It was then that many of us learned that whereas in New England we were largely bottled up and depending upon one or two railroads—similar conditions prevailing along the Atlantic coast and in the Southern States—on the other hand, our western booming friends were not only securing the capital to build one, two, and three railroads, but that they were demanding increased facilities by rail and by water as well, and insisting that their grain should not rot in the fields and their apples should not fall to waste in the orchards, but that they should have the right to get to market.

"Then we began to think along this seaboard that perhaps we ought to move in a similar direction. So in 1907 we organized an association; not for the purpose of obtaining an appropriation from Congress for one stream that ended nowhere; not for the purpose of obtaining an appropriation for one stream in one State; but for the purpose of adopting a policy that should be in line with the policy of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress, to go forward with that policy, representing a project which would be continuous and would connect up the waterways of the South with those of the North, and in a commercial as well as a fraternal sense wipe out state lines. [Applause.] That association was formed. It declared itself in the city of Philadelphia two years ago, and its purposes were pushed as vigorously as its officers and members knew how to push them, until the whole coast responded at the convention in Baltimore last year, and resolutions that were there adopted, being presented to Congress, were enacted into law, so that authorization for a survey was obtained to ascertain the cost of a project which would connect the 13 or 14 States along the Atlantic seacoast in one link, which would be protected from the storms and perils of the sea. [Applause.]

"In the city of Norfolk one month ago, following as swiftly as possible upon that remarkable campaign down the Mississippi River which has been the subject of reference here, the President of the United States, in the presence of a vast multitude of people, declared the same policy that he announced yesterday with regard to the accumulation of funds for expenditure before the project was agreed upon. He said substantially this:

"If you want Congress to act upon a project, if you want it to make an improvement, if you desire it to appropriate money, then show Congress first that you have a case.

"In this respect we have asked for nothing more, for we had been looking along our shores and we knew that we had a 'case' in harmony with the President's declaration and in harmony with the policy of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress.

"We had observed that the great volume of appropriations made by Congress for the improvement of rivers and harbors, notwithstanding our two hundred years' growth, had been going during the last quarter of a century into the Middle West. We had no envy for those who were more fortunate than the Atlantic coast in obtaining the recognition of Congress, but we began to look along the coast to see just where we came in under this general policy of the improvement of the waterways of the country. Our railroads had become incapable of carrying the products of industrious men, and we had not yet come to recognize that the productive power of the people should be limited to the carrying capacity of the railroad alone. [Applause.] As we observed how our brothers of the Middle West and along the Pacific coast were moving forward, how they were making their own claims upon merit, how they were obtaining recognition from Congress, and how they were able to make two Presidents of the United States join them in memorable trips down the Mississippi, we looked first of all upon that little spot of land that juts out from Massachusetts and is known as Cape Cod; and we said, 'Around this strip of land for the last two hundred years vessels have been coming and going, lives have been lost, and valuable property has been wrecked; and yet for two hundred years, while money has been going elsewhere, there has been no shorter and safer cut across which would afford a better passage for the mariner;' and as we looked into the facts we ascertained that during the period of twenty-five years last past there had gone upon the shoals upon that part of the coast no less than a thousand vessels, carrying with them vast cargoes of enormous wealth and 500 precious lives.

"And then we looked into the reason why nothing had been done, and we could form no other conclusion than that the people of Massachusetts and New England were satisfied with the conditions of to-day and were not as wide-awake as their brothers of the Middle West, who were not satisfied with the conditions of to-day, but who insisted upon building for the future. [Applause.]

"We observed that if we could secure a cut of about 8 miles, at a cost possibly of $10,000,000, across the neck of Cape Cod, we could save an outside sailing distance from Boston to New York of 148 miles and, avoiding fogs and shoals, reduce the risk and safely deliver lives and property.

"We found, as we looked farther down the coast, that there was already a waterway cut between the city of New York and the city of Philadelphia across the State of New Jersey, a distance of 31 miles—an existing canal under the present control of a great railroad—and we saw that New York wanted to build toward Philadelphia and Philadelphia toward New York. Great industries were there with large amounts of capital ready to make investment. Labor was ready to be employed; and we said: 'Why is it, when we are willing, have the capacity, the brain, the brawn, and the genius to do greater things, we can not get to market with the product that we are capable of producing, have but one means to get out, and all other means forbidden us?' We looked into the question of that canal, we discovered that while it was operated in working condition, it had remained substantially as its founders left it seventy-five years ago, and with its depth of 7 feet was incapable, only one month ago, when we put it to test, of carrying upon its bosom a Dutch replica of the Half Moon, built in 1600 and brought to this country upon the deck of an ocean liner. We found that it was incapable, because of its width and depth, of allowing passage for the model of Robert Fulton's first steamboat, designed in 1807 to carry 14 through passengers on the perilous journey (?) up the Hudson River [applause], and this in a section of the country where the greatest volume of commerce comes and goes and where the greatest revenues of the country are produced—revenues that are absolutely essential to the distribution of appropriations throughout this country not only for the improvement of rivers and harbors, but for the maintenance of the army and navy, for the payment to the pensioners of the country, and a thousand other things to which the public money is applied. [Applause.]

"We looked further into the reasons why nothing had been done along our coast; we took the map from Philadelphia to Baltimore, the link to the South, and observed that to-day there is a canal connecting the Delaware River with the Chesapeake Bay, a cut across solid ground, 13 miles, but that cut is of such minimum depth that the vessels which I have described could little more pass through it than they could through the Delaware and Raritan Canal; and we said, 'Why is it that in this great center of population and activity we must sail out of the Delaware River and waste 318 miles in an effort to get to Baltimore, when, if we could have this short cut from the Delaware to the Chesapeake widened and deepened sufficiently we could reduce the distance as a bird flies to 90 miles?'

"It is truly surprising that the people of the Atlantic seaboard have never fully realized the tremendous inconvenience they suffer. Remarkable indeed is it that they should have permitted these conditions to remain all these years—disgraceful, in the light of the opportunities that are being sought by the younger generation and the provision which should be made by the present for the future; remarkable indeed that we should have been burdened so long with the conditions of long ago.

"To a certain extent we have aroused the people of the Atlantic seaboard. We have started them to thinking, and we have made them understand—through this commendable agitation throughout the West for a deeper Mississippi and along the Pacific slope for better waterways there—that there is something for them to do along the Atlantic seaboard. We have made comparisons as between what has been done elsewhere and what has been left undone here. We have said to ourselves, 'What indeed, if there is no further awakening than this? Are they willing to permit their streams to fill up and their canals to fall into decay? Are they willing to say that the creative power of man along the seaboard has reached its limit and that we can produce no more? Have they reached the point where there is no incentive to have two blades of grass grow where but one grew before?'

"The Chair admonishes!

"In two minutes I must finish. [Many voices, 'Go on! Go on!']

"The CHAIR. You may have three minutes.

"The chairman has kindly extended my time three minutes. During the last two weeks there have been terrific storms along the Atlantic coast. Vessels have gone ashore upon Cape Hatteras; they have gone ashore upon Cape Cod. Is it not worth the while of the Government of the United States to give some consideration to the lives of men and to the value of property lost? Is it not worth while that in the event of war we should be enabled to pass vessels out of the navy-yards of the country, vessels charged with our armament and our fighting men, without having them stick in the mud of our streams because the Government has not sufficiently deepened them? [Applause.]

"Only a year ago, in a time of peace, the Secretary of the Navy announced that he proposed to send outside a fleet of torpedo boats—boats upon which the country had spent a million dollars; that he proposed to send them from the Philadelphia Navy-Yard south to Charleston. I had the temerity, if not the foresight, to write to the Secretary and request that inasmuch as we had inland canals from Philadelphia to Norfolk and from Norfolk to Beaufort, below Hatteras, that he send this valuable property, with the precious lives aboard, by the safe inside passage. He replied politely, as I had expected he would do, saying that wherever possible the navy used inside waterways, but that unfortunately the depth of such waterways as we had along the Atlantic coast was not sufficient for these vessels, although they were of small draft, and so they were sent outside. In one week there were flaming headlines in the newspapers of the country announcing that a storm at Hatteras had broken over these small craft as they were proceeding to Charleston, and that they had been driven back day by day, and finally had to crawl into Norfolk for repairs; and it was related that many of the men had been sent to hospitals to have treated the personal injuries they had suffered. Is it not worth while that the Government should give consideration to its own property and the lives of its own employees?

"That 13-mile cut across the State of Delaware to link up the Delaware River with Chesapeake Bay, according to all naval experts, possesses great value in a strategic way for the use of the army and the navy.

"We hope there will be no war with any foreign nation. We hope there will be no war upon the seas; but if there should be a war, it will mean war upon the Atlantic seaboard and our own vessels might have to run for shelter. We might have to employ the tactics that are universal in warfare. If we were compelled to meet or to drive back an enemy or ourselves to fall back, the Delaware and Chesapeake Canal would give an advantage to any American fleet that would be absolutely necessary in conflict with a foe of our own size upon the waters of the broad Atlantic. [Applause.]

"The President, in his address at Norfolk, spoke of the unprotected nature of our coast and of the necessity of putting an island in the middle of the Chesapeake in order that that region might be amply protected in time of war. If the mouth of the Chesapeake is to be protected, then afford an outlet to the north, else the protection proposed may be to 'bottle up' an American fleet just as Cervera's fleet was bottled up in Santiago Harbor. Apart from its commercial advantages, the connecting link with the Delaware would seem to be of the very greatest military and naval significance. If war were upon us we would immediately realize its importance. Why should we not provide for it now?

"My friends, the East is not effete; but it has been necessary to state a few plain truths with regard to appropriations and in respect to the activity of our friends elsewhere to make our own tremendous population of 30,000,000 along the Atlantic seaboard understand that they have been lagging far behind in the matter of waterway improvement. We are not done yet. We have not yet done our best.

"The opportunity is open for us all, and for our children for generations to come, and the means must be provided by which their energies may be employed to the full; and the development of waterways is one way in which the youth of the country may find new avenues of employment by which their enterprises and their ability may receive a profitable return." [Applause.]

NORFOLK CONVENTION RECALLED.

Mr. Chairman, in addition to these hurried remarks before the Waterways Congress, over which my distinguished colleague [Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana] presides, there were others, perhaps a little more specific, in the annual report to the Atlantic Deep Waterways Convention at Norfolk, in November last, which, it seems to me, in view of the great interest shown in the convention, I may be pardoned for reproducing, in part:

"The condition" (increase of tonnage over railroad carrying capacity), it was there contended, "is one which affects not only the congested centers along the Atlantic coast, or in bottled-up New England, but prevails in the Middle West and on the Pacific coast, where only recently, during the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, the limited carrying capacity of the railroads was painfully evident to travelers who failed to make their reservations in advance.

"In Southern States, where the spirit of progress has again invited attention to the rich and varied resources of the country, where it is proudly contended as, for instance, at the recent National Farmers' Congress at Raleigh, that 'North Carolina is now equipped with manufactories to consume her entire crop of cotton,' there is no variation from the general trend. The presentiment of hopefulness, of renewed commercial activity, of returning prosperity, is omnipresent; it manifests itself in orders placed with the workers in iron and steel; with the car and locomotive builders, and in appeals for capital to build new roads, to enter new fields and create new markets; but, notwithstanding it all, the specter of the car shortage of 1907 is again in evidence—indeed, has passed beyond the spectral stage.

"From all quarters the indications are that the tremendous productive power of our 90,000,000 of people in factory, farm, and mine, aroused to a full appreciation of their opportunities, will soon bear down upon the railroad system of this country, mighty as it is, until it shall stagger under the weight of its terrific load.

"In large measure the people have awakened to the menace of this impending situation. What if the railroads can not move the product of industry and of agriculture? What if the crisis comes and the railroads are again limited in their capacity to move the freight? Under the pressure of 1907 the railroads groaned and crops perished in the field. The producer of 1909 and of the future must get to market, and if the railroad shall be incapable of serving him, he must find relief in some other way. The preparation of the waterways for public service in this respect can not be regarded as hostile to the railroads, unless it be assumed that the railroads have the right to limit to their own carrying capacity the productive power of the people. So far as I have observed, the best railroad thought of the country does not contend for such a doctrine, but, on the contrary, welcomes the use of waterways for transportation purposes as a measure of relief, particularly with respect to the separation of bulky matter from the passenger and high-grade freight service. If, as is the fact, every ocean-going vessel must bring to or take from the railroad new business, and every connecting inland barge or steamer must feed it, there would seem to be small ground for railroad opposition to the opening up of the country's waterways.

"THE PROBLEM A CENTURY OLD.

"The problem of the Washingtons, the Gallatins, and the Monroes was to provide the earlier settlers of this country with waterway transportation. They had no railroads. The Clintons and other active spirits of a century ago were the waterway executors of our colonial forefathers. They were the promoters and capitalists who made it possible by canal construction to get to the Great Lakes, to reach the interior along the southern rivers, and to connect up the cities of the seaboard. In the third decade of the last century the railroad made its appearance and the decline of the canal set in. From that time on the inland waterways of the east coast have remained substantially as they were in the beginning or have fallen into disuse. As some new method of public utility presents superior advantages over the old, it is but natural that the latter shall give way to the general convenience, and so it was with the eastern waterways. But coincident with eastern approval of the railroad was the gradual drift of population to the Middle and extreme West—a drift that continued so steadily that in 1880 it had outstripped the population of the original States. Few eastern people of to-day, living their lives in old, familiar settlements in any one of the original States, have any conception whatever of the amazing growth of the new area west of us, which, when the census of 1900 was taken, was found to contain a population exceeding that of the original area by more than 9,000,000 souls. That increase of western population has been fully sustained during the past nine years and is expected to show a greater proportionate advance when the census of 1910 shall have been completed.

"DRIFT OF POPULATION WESTWARD.

"In many ways the drift of population westward asserts itself. In men and money and enterprises, in agriculture and manufactures, the West has grown to giant size. In national legislation it has come to be a powerful if not a dominant factor.

"There are more than 30,000,000 people along the Atlantic seaboard; we have been first in commercial and industrial importance; in four of our custom-houses alone we collect 80 per cent of all the customs revenues of the country; and it is fair to assume that we should have given attention to our harbors and inland waterways, upon which so much of our strength depends. This we should have done, if only to save life and property; if only to aid our navy in the event of war; if only to open up new territory for the promotion of industry and the relief of our congested centers of population. But an inquiry into the conditions as they exist does not show this to be the case. We have gone on with our great enterprises, but we have not built for the future as our more wide-awake friends of other sections of the country have been doing. Our eastern waterways have remained much as their founders left them. Cape Cod Canal, with its prospect of saving hundreds of vessels and thousands of lives, has only been commenced by private enterprise after an agitation of two hundred years. The Delaware and Raritan Canal, with its vast possibilities in linking up points beyond New York and Philadelphia, remains substantially as it was in the days when the first railroads made their appearance in this country. The Chesapeake and Delaware Canal, a 13-mile channel, which saves an outside sailing distance from Philadelphia to Baltimore of 325 miles, is in practically the same condition it was when in 1829, before the days of the modern steam shovel, it was completed by hand labor and turned over to its stockholders. The Dismal Swamp Canal, a dream of the 'Father of his Country,' and in which he was a stockholder, has substantially the same width and depth it had before the use of steam as a motive power.

"WESTERN HUSTLE ADMIRED.

"It is with no spirit of envy, but rather in admiration of the aggressive qualities of our western brethren, that attention is called to relevant facts. The Pacific country beyond the Rockies is growing by leaps and bounds. In its coastal needs and relations it has much in common with the Atlantic seaboard, but its total population at the present time is probably not in excess of 5,000,000. The greater proportion of our national population to-day is in the Middle West, that prosperous and fertile area drained by the Mississippi and its tributaries east of the Rocky Mountains and west of the Appalachian chain. Included in this area are the approaches to the Great Lakes and the Gulf of Mexico. It is to this section that in recent years the attention of the Government has been largely drawn. It is here that from one-third to one-half of all the national appropriations for rivers and harbors have been spent, while the Atlantic coast has obtained but one-fourth of the total from the beginning.

"The patriotic red blood of every true American must tingle at the prospect of a deepened Mississippi, with its possibilities for commercial expansion north and south. With its tributaries the great 'Father of Waters' drains all of the area of the Middle West, as it has been described. Once opened and deepened and in operation to the full extent of its carrying power, it would seem to furnish the one great excuse for the construction of the Panama Canal, but before it is undertaken in its entirety it is only reasonable that we should inquire into the effect of so stupendous a work, as it affects the development of inland waterways along the Pacific and Atlantic coasts. The people of the Middle West are alive and aggressive. They believe in great undertakings and are not afraid to assume them.

"COLUMBIA AND DELAWARE COMPARED.

"Neither is the Pacific coast oblivious of its necessities. The single instance of the Columbia River, an historic stream which drains the 'Northwest empire,' is sufficient for illustrative purposes. The four rapidly growing States that drain into the Columbia, or its tributaries, are possessed in the aggregate of a population not greater than that of the single city of Philadelphia, and yet, while the Government has been making appropriations to improve the Delaware River and its approaches since 1836, the Columbia River, the improvement of which began along about 1871, has secured from the Government larger appropriations on its annual commerce of 4,000,000 tons than Delaware has for its tonnage in excess of 27,000,000. The difference in collections at the custom-house is as between $1,000,000 and $20,000,000 per annum. What the Government has spent to improve the Columbia River and to provide for the future of its commerce has been equal in the last quarter of a century to all the money that has ever been spent by the Government upon all the rivers of New England, with the Hudson above New York thrown in.

"THE MISSISSIPPI PROJECT FORMIDABLE.

"We have watched with public-spiritedness the progress of the President's trip along the Mississippi from St. Louis to New Orleans. In spite of an adverse finding of the army engineers, the advocates of a 14-foot channel from the Lakes to the Gulf have renewed their demand for the improvement, and they believe they have the power to obtain it. A recurrence to the report of the engineers is most illuminating, as it contrasts the activities of our friends of the Middle West with those of the Atlantic seaboard. Not the whole project from the Lakes to the Gulf was reported upon by the engineers; not the full length of 2,500 miles from mouth to source, but merely that important 1,200-mile section from St. Louis to New Orleans. The cost of that section, according to the engineers, would be no less than $128,600,000—as much as the Government has spent upon the whole Atlantic seaboard from the beginning. They said the maintenance cost would be $6,500,000 per annum. This is three times as much as has been spent in improving the harbor of Norfolk, and is sufficient, if we view it in another way, to deepen an inside passage for coastwise trade from Norfolk, south through the Carolinas to the Atlantic Ocean, safe below Hatteras, a link of our hoped-for inland chain that would open up for cultivation and investment as fertile a country as the sun ever shone upon. One year's maintenance of the lower Mississippi at the cost suggested would wipe out the cost of carrying Jacksonville via St. Johns River to the sea, and would nearly square the Government's Savannah River appropriation account back to the early period of 1828.

"The present importance of the Mississippi as a commercial proposition was indicated by the engineer's report. Quoting the figures of 1906, they found 'the entire commerce of the Mississippi River system, including all tributaries except the Ohio,' to amount to 4,304,288 tons. This tonnage of the entire Mississippi River system, barring the Ohio, is about equal to that of the Columbia River, but it is woefully less than that of either of the Atlantic ports of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, or Norfolk, and is hard pressed by Savannah and Jacksonville. It is about one-third the extent of the commerce upon the Harlem River, an 8-mile stream connecting the East River with the Hudson, and about one-quarter the extent of the commerce in 1906 (the same year for which the Mississippi River figures were taken) of the Arthur Kill, a 12-mile stream which separates Staten Island from the State of New Jersey. The Harlem River has had spent upon it about $1,500,000, and the Arthur Kill had been improved by the Government up to June, 1908, at an expense of $341,000. The annual maintenance cost for this small channel, doing four times the business of the entire Mississippi system, is etimated at $5,000 per annum.

"AN ILLUSTRATION—EAST AND WEST.

"Let us take another illustration. In the last session of Congress our wide-awake friends of the Middle West presented, amongst other bills for waterway improvements, one that contemplated the appropriation of $20,000,000 for continuing work upon the upper Mississippi from the mouth of the Missouri, a distance of about 800 miles, to St. Paul. The commerce of this part of the Mississippi River is not extensive, much of it is for the encouragement of the logging trade, and yet under the continuing contract system consideration of this project has been approved. If $20,000,000 were appropriated by the Government for the taking over of the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal, in accordance with the report of the Agnus commission, the Government would provide a channel of sufficient depth to accommodate inland the vast commerce of the Atlantic coast; to permit of the passage of ocean liners via the Delaware into the Chesapeake Bay, or from Hampton Roads north; it would provide for itself the best avenue for war vessels of the greatest depth and beam that the strategy of our naval experts could desire. If it is fair that one section of the Mississippi River shall be considered for enough money to take over and modernize the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal, why should we not place the facts fairly before the country and ask for simple justice?"

THE COASTAL CHAIN WAITS.

Mr. Chairman, in the pending rivers and harbors bill it is proposed to complete, under the continuing-contract system, the great project of the Mississippi for which our brethren of the Middle West and the South have been contending. The expenditures will be enormous. They will not stop short of hundreds of millions. Nor have the fertile Gulf region and the territory of the Great Lakes failed to obtain recognition for many of their most ambitious projects. The Columbia River, too, and that Pugent Sound country, which is rapidly becoming the Mecca of enterprising America, are fairly—yes, in proportion to population and commercial importance—liberally taken care of in this bill. The people of the South, the West, and the Middle West are entitled to know what their Representatives have been able to accomplish for them in this bill. In its far-reaching benefits it is perhaps the greatest of all waterways bills since the enactment which authorized the construction of the Panama Canal.

But its chief tendency has been southward and westward; it has made good the hopes and expectations of the dwellers along the Ohio and the Mississippi and its tributaries; it has not yielded to the East the long-merited boon of connected inland waterways safe from the perils of the sea. Surely, if it is good for all the people that the Mississippi shall be deepened and controlled, it is equally good that life and commerce, which is precious to all the people, shall be safeguarded along the coast. All hail, Mr. Chairman, to the Mississippi and its glorious possibilities, but "in the fullness of time" let us have an improvement of the God-given channels along the Atlantic coast, which, linked together by Congress, will develop trade, encourage agriculture and industry, and provide for an enterprising and productive people a safe, convenient, and competitive method of transportation. We have the men and the commerce to use these great inland waterways. Our existing transportation facilities are limited and in some respects a check upon the agricultural and manufacturing development of our people.

Whatever arguments hold in the Mississippi country with regard to river improvements regulating rates of freight, hold with equal force along the seaboard. We want to get to market under favorable conditions and upon the best terms. In this there is no difference between the Middle West and the coast line. The longer restrictions of transportation are imposed upon trade along the coast, the longer the period of increased prices to the consumer, wherever found. The earlier the improvement of coastal inland opportunities the earlier and surer the increase in commerce and manufactures generally. Held in reserve since the forefathers planned the country's growth in advance of the railroads, it is earnestly hoped the day is not far distant when Congress, in its wisdom, will authorize this great undertaking, for which the people of the Atlantic Seaboard States have waited so long and so patiently.

The Clerk read as follows:

ARKANSAS AND TEXAS.

Channel connecting Red and Sulphur rivers by way of Texarkana.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make the point of order against the paragraph just read. I am willing to reserve it if the chairman of the committee desires it, but I would like to know of the chairman whether it is the policy of the Rivers and Harbors Committee to confine these proposed surveys purely to rivers and harbors. I am willing to await an answer, but if the gentleman does not desire to make it I will state I find a great many very meritorious provisions not involving rivers and harbors in combination sometimes with rivers and harbors and with improvements for canals. I find this item, to which I propose to make the point of order, belonging to the latter class. I do not make the claim myself, if the committee does not, that we may not have surveys of rivers and harbors with a view to the utilization of the waters by connecting canals and improvements of that character. I do not deny but what the Committee on Rivers and Harbors may have jurisdiction for that purpose, but does the gentleman propose to make the point that you can not do it except when the committee thinks it ought to go into the canal field and do a little here and there; if so I think we had better clean up the whole bill on that subject and then come to a bill relating to canals. I do not see very well how we are going to separate the matter of improvements that involve canals entirely, but I understand, and I expect the committee can tell me, whenever they, in their judgment and their supreme wisdom, think the time has come to cut out surveys for canals. I know in the last river and harbor bill surveys were provided for, including an expenditure of several hundred thousand dollars for canals, that had little or no connection with rivers at all, and little or no connection, in major part, with canals, and I was told then, and I expect to be told now, that a proposed improvement for the utilization of the waters of the Maumee River and the Big Miami, in connection with a canal, was not germane to a river and harbor bill, and they had no jurisdiction——

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEIFER. I will be glad to do so; I was trying to invite it.

Mr. MANN. This proposition to which the gentleman reserved the point of order is that for a survey for a canal?

Mr. KEIFER. Survey for a canal between two places; that is, it is a coupling canal, and that is all I am contending for.

Mr. MANN. It does not say canal, but says "channel."

Mr. KEIFER. Well, that is another name for it.

Mr. MANN. Well, I do not understand——

Mr. KEIFER. What is the use of surveying a channel if not for information with a view to an improvement for navigation?

Mr. MANN. I want information as to the facts, because, if it is for the construction for a canal and the gentleman does not insist upon his point of order, I shall. I want to get at the facts, which I do not know myself, and I did not learn from reading the proposition in the bill, because it seemed to me it might possibly and probably be a mere improvement of the Red and Sulphur rivers.

Mr. KEIFER. Yes; but what is a channel connecting the Red and Sulphur rivers by way of Texarkana?

Mr. MANN. I assumed there was a channel, and this was a survey of the channel which connected the two rivers.

Mr. KEIFER. Yes; but it is an artificial work.

Mr. MANN. That is what I wanted to get at. Is it an artificial work?

Mr. KEIFER. Undoubtedly, and it is an improvement of that connecting channel primarily for the purpose of navigation I submit.

Mr. MANN. I simply asked if the gentleman had personal information.

Mr. KEIFER. That is the way I understand it, but if anybody knows to the contrary, they ought to state it. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to going into the matter of making surveys for important things, and I believe myself that when it is essential that rivers should be improved they can be connected; and if the utilization of the water of these rivers is used for the purposes of navigation, that is in effect an improvement of rivers, and where harbors are involved, harbors likewise. I am trying now to find out whether or not I am mistaken about that view. I find in this bill surveys of streams hardly known on the maps, a very large number of them that never had dignity enough to get on a map in the world unless it was some local one. Lemon Creek and various creeks are to be improved on the theory that they are to be improved for the purposes of navigation.

The river and harbor provision of our rules authorizes the reference of all matters relating to the improvement of rivers and harbors, but it does not in terms constitute a river and harbor committee an appropriation committee at all. Everything that it has taken within its jurisdiction in the way of appropriation or authorization has been by implication and long usage.

Mr. Chairman, as you stated recently from the chair, it is held that it is not a general appropriation bill, or the committee has no general appropriation authority whatever; but I agree that, under the rules, it has grown up here to be the custom of making appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors and for their survey as preliminaries to their improvement. I believe myself any fair interpretation of this whole subject now as dealt with should include the right to make channels, if you choose to call them such, or canals—something that is of utility and something of great practical benefit to the people. I am in favor of water improvements. I know that there are some provisions in this bill, and recent ones that we have passed, for the improvement of rivers and harbors and streams that we have been improving from time to time by appropriations for nearly one hundred years, and we have not gotten any improvement for navigation and we have had no commerce or trade upon them.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Chairman, the project referred to is not subject to this point of order at all, as I conceive it. The Red River makes a bend just above Texarkana and runs away off to the left, then turns down, where the Sulphur River connects with it and runs out within a few miles of Jefferson. Now, this proposition contemplates a survey from a point opposite Jefferson to the Sulphur River, a distance only of about 13 miles, and if this survey is made, it would save from 80 to 100 miles in the navigation of the Red River, both to those above as far as Denison and those below who desire to go to Denison. That is the proposition. I think it is similar to a cut-off. Suppose a river winds around and makes a bend and comes back here where it is. I know of many such cases where the cut-offs are made in aid of navigation. Now, the fact that a town of considerable importance is located there only makes an additional reason for doing it. It is not a canal in any sense of the word. It is not such a canal as the Maumee at all. The two projects are not on a par. I trust this statement will make it clear.

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BURGESS. Yes.

Mr. KEIFER. Is not the proposition to construct a canal to be 13 miles in length, connecting the Red River with Sulphur River, for the purposes of navigation by way of the artificial channel?

Mr. BURGESS. In part it is.

Mr. KEIFER. Is not that the principal reason?

Mr. BURGESS. No; there is a creek now which makes most of the way of this canal. There are only a few miles that cut across.

Mr. KEIFER. Thirteen, I understand.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Only seven or eight, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. KEIFER. It is only a question, then, of a small baby?

Mr. BURGESS. That is all.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I fail to get the committee to tell me what their plan and purpose were in reference to this, and I assume it is what I have already stated; that is, the committee determined the jurisdiction from time to time and asserted it against the project they do not care to encourage.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no doubt a provision in the river and harbor bill for a canal would be subject to a point of order. But so far as up to this time informed, the Chair does not say that principle is applicable to this paragraph.

Mr. KEIFER. If the Chair will allow me, I do not think it necessary to discuss that after the admission that the part of this proposed channel or work is purely artificial for the purpose of navigation. I take it that that part of it is subject to the point of order. They agree that 5 or 6 miles of this is to be purely an artificial channel.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that there is a very marked distinction between this case and the construction or the proposed construction of a canal. Here is a river that winds around. It has bends in it. No one has ever contended that if you cut across a bend that was not an improvement of the river. It is not the construction of a canal. It is the improvement of the river. The gentleman from Ohio very naturally is seeking a peg upon which he can hang his claim; but this is not the proper peg. Here a statement is made to the chairman that this river makes a long wind about, and that the purpose of this channel is to avoid a long improvement of the river in order to make a less expensive improvement of the river.

Mr. SHEPPARD. May I state that it will save about 120 miles in navigation, and a very considerable saving in expense.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Texas says that it will save about 120 miles of river channel. Now, this improvement, as suggested here, is an improvement of this river in a common-sense manner, and is in no wise the construction of a canal as we understand the use of the term canal.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I am sure we have been illumined by the great argument which has just been made by the gentleman from Illinois. But there is no proposition to change the channel of either the Red River or the Sulphur River. The proposition is, however, to make a canal by a short cut, a very desirable thing, no doubt, from one river to another river, and not change the river at all any further than it will be changed by the quantity of water that will flow through that artificial channel. Now, let me say, I am going to relieve the chairman of any embarrassment, if any there will be in this matter. I will withdraw my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

FLORIDA.

Apalachicola Bay and St. George Sound, with a view to determining the best location for a deep-water harbor with entrance channel from the Gulf of Mexico by way of East Pass, West Pass, New Inlet, or by an artificial cut across St. George Island, consideration being given to the respective needs of the cities of Apalachicola and Carrabelle for increased harbor facilities.

Mr. KEIFER. I reserve the point of order against this paragraph, and even the most refined argument of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois will not be able to show that it is not subject to it. This is a provision to provide for a channel, a new name for a canal; deep-water harbor with entrance channel from the Gulf of Mexico by way of East Pass, West Pass, New Inlet, or by an artificial cut across St. George Island.

This is a purely separate matter from rivers and harbors altogether. It is a new improvement, and it is subject to the point of order, if any point of order is good, simply because it is an artificial channel, or a canal, if you please, utilizing the water of two harbors or a river and a harbor or two rivers; whatever it is it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, this is in no sense a canal, even if that should make any difference, nor will the improvement be in the nature of a canal. From start to finish it goes through and will go through navigable waters, unless it be that at some place, when it reaches a point near what is known as East Pass, the engineer shall come to the conclusion that it would be better to cut for a short distance through an island between the bay and the Gulf of Mexico, which is not at all likely. But if that should happen, it will only be doing what Congress has heretofore authorized to be done many times. It will be for the purpose of shortening the channel or of furnishing a better outlet to the Gulf. But my judgment is that it will go through East Pass, the present outlet to the Gulf and already an excellent channel of more than 20 feet in depth. This pass is near the eastern end of St. George Sound, opposite Carrabelle, and some 15 or 20 miles from what is known as West Pass, opposite Apalachicola, the latter being the main entrance to Apalachicola Bay from the Gulf. Now, the survey starts at the mouth of the Apalachicola River, near the city, goes through Apalachicola Bay and St. George Sound to East Pass, which will doubtless be the route of the improvement, if any is recommended, unless, as I said a moment ago, the engineer shall consider it cheaper and better to cut through the narrow strip of land between St. George Sound and the Gulf at some point short of the pass. This proposed improvement is all in tidal water, if that makes any difference. I do not suppose it does. But with the exception of that one cut that may possibly be made, the improvement will all be through the waters of Apalachicola Bay and St. George Sound, practically a part of the Gulf of Mexico. Certainly the survey is not for a canal in any sense, and hence not subject to the point of order, even admitting, which to my mind is not clear, that the point would be well taken if it were a canal connecting two bodies of navigable waters.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I did not make the point of order against this paragraph, because I am familiar with the situation there, having made a personal visit to this place with the distinguished Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and I remember very distinctly much of the situation there. This clearly is not a canal. It is no more a canal and no more the construction of a canal than it was when we made a new entrance to New York Harbor. It is simply, as I understand, making an entrance from the Gulf of Mexico to this city where there are now large bodies of water, much of which is shallow, and where it may be desirable in making the entrance rather than run away around an island to cut through that island, which is a small island, in order to make a direct channel.

Mr. KEIFER. I understand the proposition then is that if you cut from a bay to a great gulf, not more than 10 or 15 miles, it is not subject to be called a canal; but if you are to cut from the Lakes to the Ohio River, a distance of 100 or more miles, that would be a canal.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. You are right.

Mr. KEIFER. That is the argument.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. You are right.

Mr. KEIFER. And that is the proposition that is submitted here. It is a question of length, or a question of the views of the committee, whether it is a canal or whether they call it a channel. When they construct a channel from a bay to the great Gulf of Mexico, and it is not very long, it is not a canal any more.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that if there was a good stiff southwest breeze, and he was standing on that part of St. George Island, he would be afloat in about two minutes, at the point where it is proposed to make the artificial cut.

Mr. KEIFER. I understand then that the gentleman thinks that if the wind blew off the island, so as to make everything there dry land, you could cut a canal through and it would not be subject to a point of order under the rules of the House.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Chairman, just a word. The purpose of this survey is to see if the cities of Apalachicola and Carrabelle can have a deep entrance to the Gulf of Mexico. There are three channels which the engineers are instructed to investigate, and then there is this cut across St. George Island. It is a channel, the outlet of a harbor, and no more of a canal than any other of the deep-sea channels from harbors all along the Atlantic coast.

Mr. KEIFER. Is it for the purpose of navigation?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Yes.

Mr. KEIFER. Of course it is not a canal.

Mr. LAWRENCE. No; not a canal at all. It is simply for the purpose of providing an outlet from these two harbors.

The CHAIRMAN. From the information contained in the bill and the explanation given on the floor the Chair is unable to reach the conclusion that this item is out of order on a river and harbor bill. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. LONGWORTH having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 15816) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved February 20, 1907, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DILLINGHAM, Mr. LODGE, and Mr. DAVIS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 2828. An act for the relief of William Martinson.

H. R. 18364. An act to amend section 8 of an act to provide for the thirteenth and subsequent decennial censuses, approved July 2, 1909.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 863. An act to correct the military record of John M. Miller;

S. 1531. An act to grant medals to survivors and heirs of volunteers of the Port Hudson forlorn-hope storming party;

S. 3253. An act providing for guides in the District of Columbia, and defining their duties;

S. 3501. An act providing for the taking over by the United States Government of the confederate cemetery at Springfield, Mo.;

S. 3889. An act to amend an act to incorporate the Masonic Temple Association of the District of Columbia;

S. 3890. An act to amend an act entitled "An act making it a misdemeanor in the District of Columbia to abandon or willfully neglect to provide for the support and maintenance by any person of his wife or of his or her minor children in destitute or necessitous circumstances," approved March 23, 1906;

S. 4653. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to allot all the remaining unallotted lands within the Makah Indian Reservation, and to provide for the conservation and the sale of timber on such reservation;

S. 4778. An act to reimburse W. B. Graham, late postmaster at Ely, Nev., for money expended for clerical assistance; and

S. 5926 An act making available certain lands on the former Uinta Indian Reservation under the reclamation act.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 3544) "to grant right of way over the public domain in the State of Arkansas for oil or gas pipe lines."

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Waterways from Louisville to Savannah, including cut-off or canal from Ogeechee River to Savannah River or Harbor with a view to providing a more direct route between said cities than that afforded by existing channels.

Mr. KEIFER. I make the point of order against that paragraph just read. This is a proposition to construct what is called a "cut-off" or canal from Ogeechee River to Savannah River or Harbor, with a view to providing a more direct route between said cities—that is, the cities of Louisville and Savannah, Ga.—than that afforded by existing channels.

Perhaps it will be argued that if they have some existing channels, some way, a crosscut from the Gulf to the Atlantic, that it does not make any difference, or if they build a canal from one river to the other. My proposition all along has been that you may build from one river to another or from the Lakes to a river; but I make the point of order against this paragraph.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. This is a proposition to secure a survey from the Ogeechee River to the Savannah River. I will say for the benefit of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] that there is a cut-off or short canal already built between the Ogeechee River and the Savannah River, and what I am after in this bill, and I think what it is proposed to do, is to get a survey of the Ogeechee River through that point, and therefore have connections between the cities of Louisville, Ga., and Savannah, Ga., down the Ogeechee River, and to this point where the canal connected. I hope the gentleman will not insist on his point of order, or that it will be overruled if he does insist on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not see much distinction between this and the case just ruled upon. There is a difference in the wording, one being "canal" and the other "cut-off," but the substance is what is to be looked at, and the Chair overrules the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Satilla River, above Burnt Fort.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Page 89, between lines 5 and 6, insert the following:

HAWAII.

Harbors of the island of Kauai, with a view to determining the best location for a port.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 18808. An act to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the White River, at Augusta, Ark.;

H. R. 18807. An act to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the St. Francis River near Parkin, Ark.;

H. R. 7900. An act for the relief of Thomas B. Pope;

H. R. 18806. An act to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the Black River near Paroquet, Ark.;

H. R. 18695. An act to revive an act to authorize the construction of a bridge across Tug Fork of Big Sandy River, West Virginia;

H. R. 18592. An act to amend an act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at Kansas City, Mo.; and

H. R. 18411. An act to authorize the Thacker Coal Company to construct a footbridge across Tug River, at Thacker, Mingo County, W. Va.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

MINNESOTA AND NORTH DAKOTA.

Red River of the North and its headwaters in Minnesota and North Dakota, with a view to determining whether storage reservoirs are necessary in the interest of navigation; and also whether such reservoirs are desirable for the purpose of preventing floods and developing water power in coordination therewith.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that paragraph so that we may ascertain the fact whether this has anything to do with rivers and harbors.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Chairman, the gentlemen particularly interested in this survey, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] and the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. HANNA], appeared before the committee and stated that this river flowed through a country of great natural resources, and they believed that if the river could be improved so that it would be navigable during a part of the year there would be a constantly increasing amount of commerce upon it. They seemed very hopeful that the river might be made navigable, and that it would then accommodate the people of that section of the country in getting their enormous crops to market. They wished to have an investigation as to the proper depth of channel, the matter of storage reservoirs, and the development of water power.

Now, when surveys are ordered engineers are expected under the law to take these matters under consideration.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire of the gentleman whether these proposed storage reservoirs are considered as a part of the possible improvement of the river itself?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Storage reservoirs, if authorized in any river and harbor bill, are authorized because they are in the interest of navigation; it is because by such reservoirs water can be held back and then during the dry season be allowed to go down into the river.

Mr. MANN. I fear the gentleman falls into the error which the Chief of Engineers often falls into, that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has jurisdiction of matters pertaining to navigation. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors has jurisdiction of improvements of the rivers and harbors, but the general subject of navigation does not belong to that committee.

I am perfectly willing, as far as I am concerned, that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors shall retain an item that affects the improvement of the rivers. If these storage reservoirs are for the purpose of improving the river, very well; but if their purpose is something entirely different, that is a different proposition.

Mr. LAWRENCE. There need be no doubt in the gentleman's mind as to the purpose of the committee in authorizing the investigation of the storage reservoir; it is to show that they are in the interest of navigation and nothing else.

Mr. MANN. That is the first part of the paragraph. May I ask the gentleman in what way it affects the improvement of rivers and harbors, or even affects the interests of navigation, to determine whether these reservoirs are desirable for the purpose of preventing floods and developing water power in connection with floods?

Mr. LAWRENCE. I will say to the gentleman that these reservoirs are created for the purpose of storing water which might escape through floods, and if we can prevent in that way the escape of the water it can be stored for the purpose of maintaining a uniform flow of the navigable streams. It is to save the water so escaping and use it in maintaining the river at a proper depth for navigation. As to the water power, it is a part of the law now that when we order a survey the engineer shall also report upon the question of the development of the water power.

Mr. MANN. I think I will take a ruling of the Chair on line 25, page 91, and lines 1 and 2 on page 92. The gentleman from Massachusetts explains that the storage reservoirs provided in lines 22, 23, and 24 are necessary for the improvement of the Red River. Very well, I do not make any point of order as to that. I make a point of order on the language which says that they shall make these surveys "for the purpose of determining whether such reservoirs are desirable for the purpose of preventing floods and developing water power in coordination therewith." I assume that the coordination of the water power is in connection with either the flood or the reservoir, and has nothing to do with the improvement of the river.

Now, it seems to me that is going a long way beyond the improvement of rivers and harbors. There is no pretense that that is any improvement of either a river or a harbor. It is very true they may construct a reservoir, but when it comes to determining what effect the constuction of the reservoir shall have in preventing floods and what use may be made in connection with that power, that is entirely, it seems to me, beyond the province of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and opens up a field which is unlimited.

If every river improvement is to be considered in connection with the prevention of floods which may damage other property, we have taken an entirely new tack as far as river and harbor improvements are concerned.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Chairman, just a word relative to the point of order. If by storing water in reservoirs and preventing floods we are able to maintain the regimen of streams, that surely affects the question of navigation and——

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit, I made no point of order against the reservoirs that affect the navigation at all. The point of order I make is confined to the subject-matter of the last line on the page and the first two lines on the next page, which has nothing to do with the construction of reservoirs that affect navigation.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I would like to call the attention of the Chair to the existing law, which provides that every report submitted to Congress in pursuance of this section—that is, the section authorizing the surveys—in addition to full information regarding the present and prospective commercial importance of the project covered by the report and the benefit to commerce, local and elsewhere, from any proposed plan of improvement, shall contain also such data as it may be practicable to secure, first, as to the establishment of terminal and transfer facilities; second, the development and utilization of water power for industrial and commercial purposes; and, third, such other subjects as may be properly connected with such projects.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks there is a manifest distinction between the first part of this paragraph down to as far as the end of line 24 and what follows. The first is clearly within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, but it seems to the Chair that the additional provision relating to the matter of the developing of water power is hardly within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order as to lines 25 to the end of the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mouth of Pascagoula River, with a view to securing increased depth in a continuous channel from the upper limits of the present project in Dog River to deep water in the Gulf of Mexico.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, since the time on this bill is so limited that I can not get time to discuss it, I ask that I may present some facts in reference to the importance of improving the Yalobusha River in the State of Mississippi. The river flows southwest and runs into the Yazoo River just north of the city of Greenwood. It rises up in the northeastern part of the State, in the county of Chickasaw, and flows through the county of Calhoun. In Calhoun County you find the best belt of hard-wood timber in the Union. The town of Derma and the town of Calhoun City are located on this river and are the centers of this magnificent hard-wood timber belt. The improvement of this river would greatly facilitate reaching this timber, and would enhance the value of it to the owners because of the great reduction in freight that would follow. These two thriving towns are also the center of a good farming section, and will handle in the near future thousands of bales of cotton as the country is settled up. Calhoun City is the terminus of a branch of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, and if the river can be improved from there to the city of Grenada, it would be in direct communication with the main line of the Illinois Central Railroad, which would be of untold value to the country.

The city of Grenada is located on the main line of the Illinois Central Railroad and also on the Yalobusha River. The city of Greenwood is just 33 miles west of Grenada and is on the Yazoo River, immediately south of the mouth of the Yalobusha River. The improvement of the Yalobusha River would make the city of Grenada a competitive point in the freight rates, and would place it on an equal footing with the city of Greenwood. The rates are much lower for Greenwood than for Grenada; for example, the freight rate on coal to Grenada is $1.80 per ton, while the rate to Greenwood is $1.25 per ton from the same mines. One oil mill in Grenada last year used in crushing seed over 2,100 tons of coal. If this mill had the Greenwood rates it could have saved $1,500 in coal alone. This same mill crushed last season 7,000 tons of seed, the greater part of which was shipped in by rail. It shipped out 6,058 barrels of oil of 375 pounds each, 2,800 tons of meal, 2,550 tons of hulls, and 261,000 pounds of linters, all of which paid the high rate, and it is safe to say that this one oil mill alone could have saved to itself and to the community at least $5,000 in freight rates. The other oil mill handled 14,800 tons of seed, and shipped out 12,653 barrels of oil, 6,171 tons of cotton-seed meal, 5,221 tons of cotton-seed hulls, and 740,000 pounds of linters. All of this was shipped out at the high rate. These two institutions are handicapped greatly in the high freight rate, while their competitors in Greenwood enjoy the low rate.

The compress at Grenada handled during the year ending July 1, 1909, 43,784 bales of cotton, all of which was shipped out at a high rate. The freight on cotton from Grenada to New Orleans is $2.75 per bale and from Greenwood is $2.10 per bale, a loss to Grenada of over $29,000 on this one item. If you add to these all of the enormous saving on freight shipped into the city of Grenada from all over the country to the 50 mercantile firms, the foundry and machine shop, the 2 large brick plants, planing mill, wholesale grocery, sand and lime plant, hotels, feed and sale stables, and other enterprises the reduction in freight rate by the improvement of the Yalobusha in one year would be an enormous sum. Just out of the city limit is located a large tie plant for treating cross-ties, telephone poles, bridge timber, and so forth, and also a large paving-block factory which would be benefited by a low freight rate.

I will ask to read a letter which I received from Hon. W. C. McLean, one of the leading lawyers of the Grenada bar, a few days ago, which states clearly what the improvement of this river means to our country:

Hon. T. U. SISSON, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: In reply to your favor of recent date in reference to the navigation of the Yalobusha River:

Until 1860 all cotton raised in this section of the country was brought to Grenada on wagons and thence shipped by boat down the Yalobusha River to New Orleans.

Up until the completion of the railroads to this point the people of this section obtained all of their supplies and made all of their shipments via the Yalobusha River.

I remember of seeing at one time, in 1865, as many as 12 steamboats lying at the wharf at this place.

Before the coming of the railroads there were one or two regular lines of steamboats with regular schedule beginning about the first of December and continuing until late in the spring.

The opening up of the Yalobusha River for steamboat traffic would not only greatly benefit this immediate section but the surrounding territory, including Grenada, Carroll, Montgomery, Webster, Calhoun, and Yalobusha counties.

The saving of freight would be enormous to this section of the country.

Very truly, yours, WM. C. MCLEAN.

These facts not only warrant this survey, but warrant the Government, under its present policy, to improve this river for navigation.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ship canal with depths of 30 to 35 feet extending from a point in the city of Newark, below the junction of the Pennsylvania and Lehigh Valley railroads, through the Newark Meadows and Newark Bay to deep water of the Kill van Kull.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph just read.

Mr. PARKER. I hope the gentleman will reserve his point of order until I can make a statement.

Mr. KEIFER. I will reserve it.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, this is not with the idea of making the United States Government pay for a ship canal. The meadows of the city of Newark run down to Newark Bay, and it has been a Newark project for many years to dig a channel through those meadows up to the city with the depth the channel would have across the bay if constructed by the Government. The city has appropriated $1,000,000 toward the construction of the land portion of this channel, and at the same time information is desired before going into digging as to what the whole will cost, and as to whether the United States would consider a project for a channel in the bay such as would be available for making this wet dock or basin belonging to the city available from the bay. The word "canal" perhaps ought to be changed to "channel," but the survey is only to get the estimates of the Board of Engineers and to advise the city as to how far it can go in aiding the Government in the improvement of this harbor, which now has a tonnage of the value of very many millions of dollars a year. The city desires to have that survey made so that it will know what it can do. Under those circumstances, as the United States Government has always encouraged the independent action of towns in enlarging their commerce, the point of order in this case ought not to be made. It is merely an enlargement of the present harbor. The survey is not for a canal, but for a wet dock or basin about 2 or 3 miles long, from the bay up to the city, containing piers and a full depth for commerce. The city has 300,000 population.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PARKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is this to be constructed where there is now salt water?

Mr. PARKER. Yes; as far as the United States Government is concerned; but the city is proposing, and has appropriated $1,000,000, and has purchased meadow ground for the purpose of digging this basin from the salt water up to the city, so as to have a dock there. Engineers do not agree as to the cost, and there is a difference of opinion as to whether the Government would furnish the channel in the bay at the end of this basin, and I respectfully submit, first, that this being a survey for the enlargement of an existing harbor by the construction of this wet dock, or wet basin, it is not subject to the point of order; and second, that under the circumstances, as it is for the benefit of the Government and the enlargement of commerce, the point of order ought not to be made. If there is any doubt about it, the word "canal" might be changed to the word "channel."

Mr. KEIFER. Do I understand that this proposition is simply to provide for a survey which comes under the head of improvements for this ship canal for a depth of 35 feet, and is simply for the purpose of getting the required information upon which the city of Newark may construct a canal?

Mr. PARKER. In order that it may construct the land portion of a canal through the meadows connecting with the water portion.

Mr. KEIFER. What is the land portion but an excavation for the purpose of a channel?

Mr. PARKER. We expected to excavate wherever there is land or meadows; we expected the Government in the Newark Bay to bring deep water up to it. We want to know what we would have to expend, and as I drew this proposition to the committee I asked for a separate estimate on both of these matters, but the committee found under the general provision where estimates will be made we will have to get the engineers to divide it, which can easily be done. This is for information for the city in doing this.

Mr. KEIFER. According to my view in this matter, I think this is a proposition that is subject to the rule that we have been talking about here, but in view of the remarks of the gentleman from New Jersey I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. PARKER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to make the point of order, but I would like to inquire of the gentleman from New Jersey what a "wet dock" is.

Mr. PARKER. A wet dock is a well-known term used in regard to practically all the docks abroad. The great docks of London are called "wet docks." They are inclosed openings into the high ground. You might say they are slips, but they are more than slips, because they are larger.

The Clerk read as follows:

Cuyahoga River, from its mouth to a more southerly connection with the Ohio Canal, with a view to eliminating bends and securing a navigable depth of 21 feet, with suitable width; with a report on any proposition for cooperation by localities affected thereby.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment to this paragraph which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

And Maumee River from at or near Toledo, Ohio, along the channel thereof as far as practicable, but conforming to the line of the Miami and Erie Canal, to the waters of the Miami River, and thence, still conforming in like manner to said canal, southward to the Ohio River at or near Cincinnati, Ohio, with a report as to the practicability, utility, and feasibility, including an estimate as to the cost of widening and deepening said canal, if improved, into a ship or barge canal connecting, for the purpose of trade and commerce, the waters of Lake Erie and the waters of the Ohio River.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman reserve it?

Mr. MANN. Certainly I will reserve it.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I have followed the practice of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors by proposing to amend this paragraph by adding that which has been just read. I find under the head "Arkansas," on page 86 of the bill, that that rule has been followed, and it has also been followed in some other places. Now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I may fairly state to the gentleman that one of the points of order I shall make is that the gentleman's amendment is not germane to the paragraph.

Mr. KEIFER. I was stating that it was germane to the bill, and it is immaterial in regard to that. It is germane to the bill. You may connect it by the conjunction "and," but that does not affect the question.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman offers his amendment as a new paragraph, that is one thing, but the amendment the gentleman offered is an amendment to the paragraph in relation to the Cuyahoga River.

Mr. KEIFER. No; in relation to a canal.

Mr. MANN. Well, I simply——

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman is right in understanding my amendment; it is to be an amendment offered to this paragraph. I do not dispute that. The paragraph to which the amendment is offered is a paragraph for the purpose of having an improvement made in the Cuyahoga River and in connection with the Ohio Canal, an existing canal now. It is to be so improved as to add to and connect with this canal. The importance of this, Mr. Chairman, is that it would come within, if there is any real objection to it, the rule that it would not be in order; no point of order being made against it, it stands either subject to amendment of the same character exactly whether the amendment would be germane in a general sense, and it comes within another very familiar parliamentary rule.

This is a proposition to amend a paragraph of the bill that relates to the improvement of a river and a canal. That is the situation, and my proposition is to so amend that as to do likewise.

Mr. CASSIDY. Mr. Chairman, if I may interrupt the gentleman for a moment——

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly; for a question.

Mr. CASSIDY. My colleague states that this proposition which is under discussion, the Cuyahoga River, relates to the improvement of a river and a canal. I desire to correct him on that point and to say that the item in the bill refers simply, solely, and only to the Cuyahoga River, and has no relation to the Ohio Canal, except that the survey is to extend to a point where it is adjacent to the canal, the same as many streams provided for in this bill are surveyed up to a certain point. There is no intention, thought, or desire to have the Ohio Canal surveyed in connection with this proposition for the survey of the Cuyahoga River.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman doubtless understands the matter as he states, but the bill says just the other thing, to wit, that it is to connect with the Ohio Canal in a different place than it connects now and be a part of it in that connection. It is a part now of the Ohio Canal, and they are proposing to further connect that and the canal, and the language states that it is to extend from its mouth to a more southerly connection with the Ohio Canal. That is the language of it. It does not say it is adjacent to it, but connected with it—to furnish the water for it. Now, Mr. Chairman, what my amendment proposes is to utilize the waters of the Maumee River—make these diversion channels that the gentlemen talk about and do not call canals. I want to call a spade a spade. It is the canal that I am looking for. We go up the Maumee River and we pass over a certain divide, and come to the headwaters of the Great Miami River, following that down to the Ohio. We have simply improved the waters to the Maumee, the Great Miami River, and such other rivers as may be touched as we pass along.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEIFER. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman give us an idea of what this project will cost? It will be interesting to us laymen to have an idea of that.

Mr. KEIFER. If my amendment stands, I will try to do it; but I want to say that for the present the very question the gentleman asks my amendment provides shall be answered by the survey. The survey is to report the cost, and that is an answer that would be better than I could make now.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman might have an idea.

Mr. KEIFER. It would be a very cheap canal compared to many others.

Mr. BUTLER. What will be the length of it?

Mr. KEIFER. I do not believe I can give the exact length from memory, but it is a little over 200 miles. But there is a canal there now—the Miami and Erie Canal—and it is to improve that, widen and deepen it, if the survey warrants it. We are asking nothing but an ordinary survey, and are not authorizing it at all. This was recommended, this kind of canal, to be built shortly after this country was organized. When the great George Washington looked over the map of the country he said the place to build a canal was from a point on the Maumee River to the Ohio in order to connect the waters of the Great Lakes of the north with the Ohio River, and then connect with the Gulf of Mexico. And Thomas Jefferson, the third President of the United States, made a like recommendation. But our distinguished appropriation committees have not been willing to allow a few dollars to be expended for the purpose of making a satisfactory survey and report.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] has criticised the Committee on Rivers and Harbors because it has not included in this bill an authorization for the survey of a canal from Lake Erie to Cincinnati. Let me remind him, and let me remind the distinguished occupant of the chair, that when the river and harbor bill of 1907 was before the House the gentleman from Ohio offered this provision as an amendment. A point of order was made against it, not by a member of the committee, but by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], his point being that it was not a subject within the jurisdiction of the committee; and the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, a man who has had a great deal of experience in presiding over the committee, the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. CURRIER], promptly ruled that the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois was well made, and the amendment was held not to be in order.

Certainly that was notice to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors that this specific project, at least, was not in order upon a river and harbor bill; and we have not included it here. Then, I want also, if I may be permitted, to call the attention of the committee to the fact that according to the gentleman from Ohio himself we are not yet ready to take on this project. I quote from a speech made by the gentleman in the House only a short time ago. He said eloquently:

> The interior of our country is now much like an unhatched egg, ready to burst its shell, needing only vigor to do so. The ship canal I advocate will become an artery for the circulation of the now stagnated business life of the Nation, and it will contribute largely to that vigor essential to its early bursting forth and to giving a new prosperity and a full-fledged life to our constitutional union of States.

Now, listen to this:

> A few words only as to how the expenditures for such improvements are to be provided for and I am done.
> Already a bill has been introduced for the issue of $500,000,000 of 2 per cent coupon or registered bonds of the United States as required and necessary, not exceeding $50,000,000 per year in denominations of $20 or some multiple thereof, payable after ten years and to mature thirty years from their date.

I think I agree with the gentleman from Ohio that to provide for a work of this kind it will be necessary to issue bonds for a very great amount, and to that point we have not yet come.

I noticed, Mr. Chairman, in the morning papers that Professor Lowell, of Flagstaff Observatory, Arizona, has discovered that a canal a thousand miles long was constructed on Mars during the present year, between the months of May and September. [Laughter.] If the gentleman from Ohio would only move to Mars he might get his hoped-for canal built very speedily; but in this benighted world of ours, I believe he will have to wait. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I did not know until now that we had such celestial members on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. [Laughter.] I thought they were inclined to go into the mud and mire of muddy streams, harbors, and bottoms, and all that; but now, for the sole purpose of making a point of order against my amendment, the committee sails off to the planet of Mars for an authority. [Laughter.] A few moments ago I was unable to state the exact length of the proposed canal. Looking at the speech which the gentleman compliments, I find it is 244 miles; that it has had sufficient investigation for the purpose of building a canal of the old type, and there is one built along the entire line. That canal could be in operation, but it is not large enough for the present day. It did not cost but about $3,000,000 in its original construction and would not cost half that much now.

The gentleman tries to scare both the Chair and Members upon the subject of the great cost of this canal that is to be constructed. We have made improvements since the gentleman was on the River and Harbor Committee, not since he sailed off to Mars. We have made improvements in the matter of excavation and in the building of canals. We can build canals where we have but earth excavations at one-fourth of the former cost, although done in a cheap time. The great steam shovels that remove earth do it with great rapidity, do it thoroughly well, and the cost of the canal need not be magnified, because it would be cheaper now to construct than at any other time. But I am off the question. I beg the Chair's pardon for talking about that. This is a project for the improvement of the waters of the Maumee and the Miami rivers by building a canal that utilizes the waters of both streams.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio offered his amendment as an amendment to the paragraph contained in these lines 19 to 23, evidently thinking that that paragraph might be subject to the point of order and therefore permit the gentleman to hang an amendment upon it. There are two answers to the gentleman. The paragraph is not subject to the point of order. It does not provide for the improvement of a canal at all. Even a casual reading of the paragraph shows that it is solely the improvement of a river. But, second, if the paragraph had been subject to the point of order, the gentleman's amendment would not be in order, because it is not germane to the paragraph. While he may claim his amendment is germane to the bill, it is necessary in offering an amendment that it may be germane to the paragraph. Would an amendment be germane to a paragraph that proposed to do something for John Smith, to offer an amendment for the purpose of doing something for James Jones? That would not be a germane amendment.

And this proposition to improve the Cuyahoga River, or even to improve the Ohio Canal, would not authorize the improvement of this canal, becaues it is not related and is not germane to the proposition to improve the Ohio Canal.

In view of previous decisions, I suppose it is not necessary to discuss the question as to whether it is in order to introduce an amendment for a canal upon a river and harbor bill. It has been decided so often, and in this particular case has been ruled out of order.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The paragraph of the bill under consideration provides for a survey of the Cuyahoga River. The gentleman proposes to amend by adding another river. Certainly the proposed amendment is not germane to the paragraph, any more than the proposition to add one private claim to a bill providing for the payment of another private claim would be, or an amendment to a bill providing for the admission of one Territory as a State proposing the admission of another Territory as a State. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Sandusky River, from its mouth to Fremont, with a view to securing a navigable depth of 10 feet, with suitable width.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I now offer an amendment to come in after line 26 of page 94, leaving out the word "and."

> Insert on page 94, at the bottom of the page, the following:
> "Maumee River from at or near Toledo, Ohio, along the channel thereof as far as practicable, but conforming to the line of the Miami and Erie Canal to the waters of the Miami River, and thence still conforming in like manner to said canal southward to the Ohio River at and near Cincinnati, Ohio, with a report as to the practicability, utility, and feasibility, including an estimate as to the cost of widening and deepening said canal, if improved, into a ship or barge canal connecting, for the purpose of trade and commerce, the waters of Lake Erie and the waters of the Ohio River."

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order against the amendment. It is, I think, clearly subject to the point of order. It provides for a survey for a canal upon a river and harbor bill, and is practically identical with the proposition that was offered three years ago by the same gentleman, to which I made a point of order, which point of order was sustained by the Chair and has been frequently ruled on.

Mr. KEIFER. I care to occupy but a moment in reply.

First, this is not the same proposition that was ruled upon. That was a proposition specifically to provide for a survey of a canal and to make the appropriations for that survey. This comes within and under the head of surveys as provided in this bill, and is exactly in line with the numerous provisions in the bill, some of which I have called attention to.

By the very terms of the proposed amendment it is proposed to improve the Maumee and Miami rivers; to control the waters of both rivers, of course, in this way. It is a proposition to improve these two rivers. It is true it is to improve them in a substantial way. The two streams come nearly together. The headwaters of the Miami extend close to the Maumee. There is no 5-mile limit, there is no short cut, except that it is a short cut that is to allow the trade and commerce from the Great Lakes to pass to the Ohio River and to the Gulf, and in the opposite direction. And if it is subject to the point of order, it is because of its greatness and not because of its difference in character to other proposed improvements.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, just a word. The proposition is not to improve the Maumee River or the other river.

Mr. KEIFER. That is what it says.

Mr. MANN. Wait a moment. It provides for the improvement of these rivers, and a canal across the divide to connect the waters of the two rivers. It is the proposition to construct a canal across the divide that is subject to the point of order, and being coupled together they are all subject to a point of order.

Mr. KEIFER. It is not like a canal running through a meadow or through an island.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Ohio to concede that this is subject to a point of order?

Mr. KEIFER. No, Mr. Chairman; on the contrary, I think it is similar to the case where a river is improved in a more substantial way.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to the Chair that this proposition is substantially the same as that ruled upon some years ago. On February 7, 1907, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] offered an amendment to a river and harbor bill, which in its character was substantially the same as that now offered. The point of order was made by the gentleman from Illinois—the same gentleman who now makes this point of order—upon the ground that it was substantially introducing into a river and harbor bill a provision for a canal, and the point of order was sustained. The Chair thinks that case rules the present case, and feels bound by the decision in that case, even if he was disposed, as he is not, to rule otherwise. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Waterways from Orangeburg to Charleston, including cut-off or canal from Edisto River to Ashley River, with a view to providing a more direct route between said cities than that afforded by existing channels.

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order on that paragraph, and I wish some one would explain that paragraph and the next one.

Mr. ELLERBE. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to say that this is really not a canal in any sense. It is about 100 miles from Orangeburg to Charleston. I want to say that Orangeburg is, next to Lewis County, Tex., the largest cotton-producing county in the United States, and there are many manufacturing enterprises springing up there. These people are very anxious to have this existing waterway improved. The question is, in improving that waterway, whether they can cut through a swamp from 3 to 6 miles that will shorten the route 80 or 90 miles from Orangeburg to Charleston.

Mr. MANN. How about the other item?

Mr. ELLERBE. The other is for a waterway from Columbia and Camden to Charleston, which is the largest seaport in the State. There is an existing waterway between these cities, and instead of having to go from Camden through Winyah Bay and up to Charleston, we simply grant the engineers permission to say whether it is feasible to cut across these 7 miles and save 90 miles from Camden to Charleston.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order as far as I am concerned.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That the Committee on Commerce of the Senate and the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives, or any subcommittee named by the chairman of either of said committees, are hereby authorized to visit any of the localities at which works on river and harbor improvements are now under way or proposed for the purpose of inspecting or investigating said improvements, and the necessary expenses connected with such inspections and investigations, including the expenses of necessary employees, shall be paid from the appropriation for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors by the disbursing officer of the committee concerned, on vouchers certified by the chairman of such committee: Provided, That the accounts of the disbursing officers of the committees shall be prepared in conformity with existing law, and, together with the vouchers necessary to the correct and prompt settlement thereof, shall be sent by mail or otherwise to the office of the Chief of Engineers in Washington within ten days after the end of the month to which they relate, and, after examination there and within sixty days of their actual receipt, shall be transmitted to the proper accounting officer of the Treasury for settlement: And provided further, That such expenses shall not exceed $15,000 in any one year, and that an itemized statement thereof shall be published in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers. In connection with the inspections or investigations herein provided for, the Secretary of War shall, upon the request of the chairman of either of the said committees, furnish such data and detail such officials and employees as may be necessary to assist said committee or subcommittee, and to further facilitate the work of such committees or subcommittees the use of vessels under the charge of the engineer department at large, under regulations to be issued by the Secretary of War, is hereby authorized.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if he will not be satisfied if Congress permits the River and Harbor Committee to make investigation for one year, so far as this bill is concerned, instead of giving permanent authority to the committee to travel around the country without any control by Congress in any possible way except by repeal of the law?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I would like to have the amendment that I have just offered read.

Mr. MANN. For information?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 97, in line 16, after the word "localities," insert the words "in the United States."

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, the committee has not the slightest objection to limiting it to the year.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman if he would be not only willing to accept the amendment here, but, with some probability that it would remain in the law when it becomes a law, to strike out, in line 11, page 98, the words "in any one year," and also, in line 13, the word "herein," and insert in place of it the words "in this section," so that that portion of the bill will read:

Such expenses shall not exceed $15,000, and that an itemized statement thereof shall be published in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers in connection with the inspections or investigations in this section provided for.

And so forth.

So that it gives the committee the entire privilege for the next fiscal year, and yet without fixing it so that Congress has no control over the matter hereafter. I suggest to the gentleman that trips like this might become very onerous to the committee and very dangerous to members of the committee if there should be no control over the matter by Congress.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. The committee is entirely willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Then I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, which the Clerk will again report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 97, in line 16, after the word "localities," insert the words "in the United States."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That whenever any vessel belonging to or employed by the United States upon river and harbor work collides with and damages another vessel, pier, or other legal structure belonging to a private person or corporation, the Chief of Engineers shall cause an immediate and thorough examination to be made, and if, in his judgment, the facts and circumstances of the collision are such as to make the whole or any part of the damage inflicted a proper charge against the United States, the cost of repairing said damage may be paid, with the approval of the Secretary of War, from any funds which may be available for the improvement, maintenance, operation, or care of the waterway upon which the said government vessel was employed, or if such funds are not available, then the said cost may be paid from any funds available for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors; but such payment shall not include any allowance for demurrage, or for other than the actual and reasonable cost of repairing said damage: Provided, That such payment shall not exceed $250 in any one case.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order to the paragraph.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I have a committee amendment which I desire to offer.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will withhold the amendment, I might suggest to the gentleman that this provision first appeared in a bill which we passed the other day creating a bureau of light-houses. It was the first time such a proposition had been made in concrete form, and the engineers of the War Department obtained their inspiration in preparing this section of the bill from the bill creating the Light-House Bureau as it was introduced into the House. The section here is somewhat amplified. That bill authorized the Commissioner of Light-Houses to pay claims of this class out of the appropriations for the light-house service; but when the matter came before the House objection was made to that, and the House amended the provision so as to put these claims in the same class with audited claims and have them reported to Congress for the consideration of Congress, the statement then being made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that that would cause them to be inserted in the deficiency appropriation bill as a matter of right. Now, it seems to me very desirable that all of these government vessels, where authority is given to pay damages on account of collisions, shall have the same uniform practice in reference to claims for damages; and if the light-house people, in making their claims where they have collisions and claims for damages, are governed by a certain rule, the same rule should apply to the vessels in the engineer's department. Whatever the rule is, it should be uniform. I have prepared an amendment to the gentleman's provision for that purpose which I would like to read to him. It practically keeps the section in the same condition that it is in down to the words "United States," in line 5, on page 99, and then reads:

That whenever any vessel belonging to, or employed by the United States, engaged upon river and harbor work, collides with and damages another vessel, pier, or other legal structure belonging to a private person or corporation, the Chief of Engineers shall cause an immediate and thorough examination to be made, and if, in his judgment, the facts and circumstances of the collision are such as to make the whole or any part of the damages inflicted a proper charge against the United States—

And now what comes is new—

the Chief of Engineers, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, shall have authority to adjust and settle all claims for damages caused by such collision in cases where the claim for damages does not exceed $500, and report the same to Congress for consideration.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an inquiry right there?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. If that is to come back to Congress, what is the necessity of putting in a limitation of $500? Some of these claims might run a trifle over that.

Mr. MANN. We discussed that matter when the light-house bill was before the House the other day, and it was thought desirable then, and it seems to me still desirable, to have some limit, because when those claims come back to Congress they are not like a claim presented to the Committee on Claims, but they are treated as an audited claim, and unless something unusual is in them, it would not attract attention.

As the law now stands, people who suffer injuries by reason of these collisions have no recourse whatever except by presenting a claim to Congress, which goes through the Committee on Claims, and as a usual rule that means no redress whatever. When I drew the light-house proposition I made it $250. When we brought it into the House it was raised to $500, and the engineers in framing this section took the original idea of the light-house proposition and made it $250. Now, I have proposed in this amendment to raise it to $500, and that covers nearly all claims where there is not some very large damage, and in those cases I question whether we ought to permit the executive administrative officers to determine the amount of the claim.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. If a claim was a trifle over $500, then the claimant would be exactly in the same condition you say all the claimants are now and practically would have no redress.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman that if the claim is a trifle over $500 the man who presents it lacks wit, because no one will present a claim a trifle over $500. Of course, if a claim that might be urged amounted to $550, the claim presented will be $500 if the man has good sense, and this is not referring these people to the Court of Claims. We might properly have provided that these injured people should go to the Court of Claims, but in a great majority of these cases the amount of damages runs from $10, $15, to $50, and $100.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. I will say to the gentleman that the committee does not have the slightest objection to the amendment, if the gentleman will be willing to strike out the limitation, and when the matter is to come back here for approval it seems to me it ought not to be in. There was good reason for the limitation when the action of the Chief of Engineers could not be reviewed.

Mr. MANN. Well, that practically amounts to no review. I have suggested the limitation the Chief of Engineers asked for, and the same is in the bill that passed the House in reference to the light-house service, where we have a much larger number of vessels than the engineer service.

Mr. PARKER. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. PARKER. Does not the gentleman think there is a very great advantage in having small claims settled on the spot? If the gentleman will permit me, when we had military maneuvers we found it of very great advantage to the Government to let the officers conducting those maneuvers settle those claims and take a receipt on the spot, because we always had them doubled up when sent to Washington. The claimant will accept payment of small amounts, and it was very much to the interest of the Government that the matter should be settled and a receipt taken at the time.

Mr. MANN. Well, here is the situation: These are claims in the nature of personal-injury claims, which this Government and no government has ever recognized. Now we are asked to make a departure from the whole theory of government in treating this class of claims as treated heretofore, and it seems to me in making that departure it is extremely wise, although I did not originally draw my bill in that shape, extremely wise to reserve the payment of the claims to the consideration of Congress, as audited claims are now paid. We pay large number of claims every year in the general deficiency bill, claims on contracts, claims where there is just as much reason for being settled quickly as these here; and when those people can obtain a redress in this manner, where now they have no redress at all, they ought not to complain.

Mr. PARKER. Will the gentleman permit a mere suggestion? And that is that in the conduct of the military maneuvers we found, under a provision that the officers could settle claims on the spot, they were often able to settle claims for fences, crops, trespass, etc., for five or ten dollars, where, if they had had to be reported to Congress, they might have run up to many hundreds.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] insist upon his point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] a question. Why is this restricted to private corporations? Suppose a municipal corporation sustains damage.

Mr. MANN. I may say to the gentleman that if the matter was presented to the House I intended to call attention to that and ask information about it.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I have just sent up an amendment changing "private person" to "any person."

Mr. MANN. I was going to ask the gentleman, also, if the term "vessel belonging to or employed by the United States" would cover a vessel owned by a contractor?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. It says "in which said government vessel was employed." That has reference to the fact that the Government frequently leases boats for a short time, small boats or boats of considerable size, perhaps for a week, sometimes for a month, and sometimes only for a day, and a great majority of these claims that we desire to settle up in this manner are, as you say, from $5 up to $10 or $15—a great majority of them.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order and offer the amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That whenever any vessel belonging to or employed by the United States engaged upon river and harbor work collides with and damages another vessel, pier, or other legal structure belonging to any person or corporation, the Chief of Engineers shall cause an immediate and thorough examination to be made, and, if in his judgement the facts and circumstances of the collision are such as to make the whole or any part of the damage inflicted a proper charge against the United States, the Chief of Engineers, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, shall have authority to adjust and settle all claims for damages caused by such collision in cases where the claim for damage does not exceed $500, and report the same to Congress for consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. McLACHLAN of California. Mr. Chairman, relative to the section, beginning with line 19, on page 71, which was passed for the time being, I wish to withdraw my objection, so that it may remain in the bill as printed.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill favorably to the House with amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. DALZELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 20686, the river and harbor bill, and had instructed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto, to their final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on the amendments?

No separate vote was demanded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ALEXANDER of New York, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 Rule XXIV Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 863. An act to correct the military record of John M. Miller—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 5926. An act making available certain lands on the former Uinta Indian Reservation under the reclamation act—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 4778. An act to reimburse W. B. Graham, late postmaster at Ely, Nev., for money expended for clerical assistance—to the Committee on Claims.

S. 4653. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to allot all the remaining unallotted lands within the Makah Indian Reservation, and to provide for the conservation and the sale of timber on such reservation—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 3890. An act to amend an act entitled "An act making it a misdemeanor in the District of Columbia to abandon or willfully neglect to provide for the support and maintenance by any person of his wife or of his or her minor children in destitute or necessitous circumstances," approved March 23, 1906—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 3889. An act to amend an act to incorporate the Masonic Temple Association of the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 3501. An act providing for the taking over by the United States Government of the confederate cemetery at Springfield, Mo.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 3253. An act providing for guides in the District of Columbia and defining their duties—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 1531. An act to grant medals to survivors and heirs of volunteers of the Port Hudson forlorn-hope storming party—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 7900. An act for the relief of Thomas B. Pope;

H. R. 16336. An act authorizing certain changes in the plan for the permanent system of highways for that portion of the District of Columbia lying west of Rock Creek Park, north of Klingle road, east of Connecticut avenue, and south of Ellicott street NW.;

H. R. 16328. An act for the extension of Franklin street NE. from its present eastern terminus east of Twenty-fourth street to the Bladensburg road;

H. R. 16324. An act to authorize the extension of Park place NW.;

H. R. 11989. An act to provide for the removal of present grade crossing and construction of a new grade crossing on the line of Q street NE., District of Columbia; and

H. R. 16329. An act to provide for the extension of Newton place NW., from New Hampshire avenue to Georgia avenue, and to connect Newton place in Gass subdivision with Newton place in Whitney Close subdivision.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. MURPHY, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of John W. Watkins, Fifty-ninth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. BENNETT of Kentucky, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of M. E. McKellup, Sixtieth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Also, by unanimous consent, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of James H. Tyree, Sixtieth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

VIENNA EXPOSITION.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a printed copy of a message from the President of the United States (H. Doc. No. 605), of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An appropriation of $50,000 to enable the United States to participate in the First International Field Sports Exposition at Vienna in 1910.

The SPEAKER. When this message was received by the House, referred and ordered printed, the Chair was not aware that it was accompanied with illustrations. Under the law, to have illustrations printed, the House must make an order to that effect.

Mr. MANN. What is the subject of the message?

The SPEAKER. It is on the subject of the Vienna Exposition.

Mr. MANN. How many illustrations are there to be?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know how many sports there will be at the exposition. It seems they have already been printed, and this is an effort to get an order that will pay for the illustrations.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, some years ago the House ran over me on a proposition of this sort. I insisted that no illustration should be printed except by order of the House. There have been some thousand orders made since then, and I think that this is about time when we should make an example, if we can, somewhere, and secure the administration of that law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, does the gentleman object?

Mr. MANN. The question has not been submitted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

NATIONAL PARK AT GRANT FARM, MISSOURI.

By unanimous consent, reference of the bill (H. R. 1490) to provide for the purchase of the Grant farm in St. Louis County, State of Missouri, and to establish a national park thereat, etc., was changed from the Committee on the Library to the Committee on Military Affairs.

RETURN OF BILL TO SENATE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following request from the Senate, which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate Senate bill 3544, to grant right of way over the public domain in the State of Arkansas for oil and gas pipe line.

CHANGES IN PERMANENT SYSTEM OF HIGHWAYS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 16916.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to prepare a new highways plan for that portion of the first section of the permanent system of highways plan lying between Georgia avenue on the east, Sixteenth street on the west, Kalmia street on the north, and Butternut street on the south, under the provisions contained in the act of Congress approved March 2, 1893, entitled "An act to provide a permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of cities," and an amendment to said act approved June 28, 1898.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman if he proposes, under the unanimous consent he got the other day, to take up District business at this late hour?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Oh, I think we can proceed for a few moments.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I think, Mr. Speaker, when the House has sat here all day and we have reached the adjournment time, and there is no quorum here, the gentleman better ask unanimous consent for some other day.

The SPEAKER. He has as much of Thursday as was used to-day.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. There are three bills on the House Calender——

The SPEAKER (continuing). Which is four hours and forty-two minutes.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 56 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of John H. SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 16, 1910.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

INCOME TAX.

Mr. BROWN. I hold in my hand a message to the legislature of New Jersey by the governor of that State on the subject of the proposed sixteenth amendment to the Constitution. I ask to have it printed in the RECORD and printed as a document. (S. Doc. No. 365.)

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska? The Chair hears none, and the order is entered.

The message follows:

MESSAGE OF THE GOVERNOR OF NEW JERSEY RELATIVE TO PROPOSED SIXTEENTH AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES.

TRENTON, N. J., February 7, 1910.

To the legislature:

On the 26th day of July, 1909, the Secretary of State of the United States officially transmitted to me as governor of the State the proposed sixteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States passed by the Congress and directed to be submitted to the legislatures of the several States, as provided by the Constitution of the United States.

Copies of said papers transmitted are hereto attached.

The proposed amendment, if adopted by the requisite number of States, will confer upon Congress the power to levy a direct tax, in the nature of an income tax, upon the property of persons in the several States without regard to the inhibition now in the Federal Constitution against laying any direct tax "unless in proportion to the census of enumeration" by that instrument directed to be taken.

The Supreme Court of the United States sustained in principle the laying of an income tax in two cases, namely: Hylton v. United States (3 Dall., 171) and Springer v. United States (102 U. S., 586).

But in 1894 that court, in Pollock v. Farmers' Loan and Trust Company (157 U. S., 429), reversed these former decisions and declared the income tax imposed under the act of Congress in that case unconstitutional, because the tax was not in proportion to the census or enumeration directed to be taken under the Federal Constitution. The effect of this last decision is to practically destroy the laying of any tax whatever upon income unless based upon some principle of capitation.

A tax laid upon any such basis as that would be of little if any value, and would fail to reach persons with large incomes, who should be the ones to bear the burden of such taxation.

An income tax is the most just and equitable tax that can be levied. It imposes the exactions of government upon the citizen in proportion to his ability to bear it, and upon the basis of the wealth which under the laws of the country he has been able to accumulate. "Men should contribute to the needs of the state as God has prospered them."

It is evident that the burden of general taxes is not proportionately borne by all upon whom the burden rests. The citizen of moderate holdings, whether real or personal, usually does not escape, or attempt to escape, the prompt discharge of this obligation. The property of which he is possessed, by reason of its very meagerness, is easily found by the assessor, and when the tax is levied it is satisfied. This can not be said, however, of those who are essentially rich and whose holdings are large. It has been stated, with some semblance of certainty, that over 80 per cent of all the vested wealth of this country is owned and controlled by 3,000 estates, corporations, and individuals. It is obvious that 80 per cent of the annual taxes levied is not borne by the group just mentioned. It may be that this estimate is inaccurate. The casual observer, however, is convinced that the burden of taxpaying is borne very largely, and out of all due proportion, by the citizens of moderate means.

The taxes laid upon real estate are out of all proportion to its relative value to all the other property owned by our citizens. This results in the man with the small home bearing his full share of tax exactions, while the man of many times as great wealth escapes a large share of just taxation. The taxation of personal property is limited because of the difficulty to discover it, while real estate, which is always discoverable, is fully taxed.

An income tax is a tax which is sure to reach all classes of property, real and personal.

The United States should possess the unquestioned power to tax incomes. It may not be necessary to use the power, but if emergency should arise which requires it, the right to tax should exist.

Criticism of the amendment herewith transmitted is made upon the ground that under it the income upon state or municipal securities might be taxed. Why this should not be I am quite unable to see. The argument made is that a tax upon incomes from this source might (1) decrease the value of such securities in the market; (2) that Congress might, through such a tax, impair the power of the States. Neither of these suggestions seem to me to have force.

Suppose 1 per cent of tax were to be levied upon incomes. Under such a tax the holder of a $1,000 4 per cent state or municipal bond would pay an income tax on $40 per year, which would amount to 40 cents per annum.

If the patriotism of our citizens and the interest of our financial institutions, who take and hold state and municipal securities, is at so low an ebb as to cause such a tax to affect the value of state or municipal securities, we are, indeed, in an unfortunate condition in the Republic. No one can believe that such a condition exists.

As to the claim that the Federal Government might injure the States, as such, by taxing state bonds under an income tax, there are two satisfactory answers:

First. The Congress is representative of the States and elected by the citizenship thereof, and the remedy is in the hands of the people of the States by not returning such Congressmen.

Second. The patriotism of our people is such that no Congress could be elected that would lay any tax with a view of destroying the power or integrity of the States. If this be not true, the relation of our States to the Republic is surely of much less importance than many of us have hitherto supposed.

Under a republican form of government the people rule, and they can be safely trusted to see that their Representatives make no unjust exactions in the way of taxation or in the curtailing of the rights of the State or otherwise. Nor am I inclined to accept the statement that the Supreme Court of the United States might construe the words "from whatever source derived," as found in the pending amendment, as justifying the taxing of the securities of any other taxing power. There is no express provision in the Federal Constitution at present prohibiting the Congress from imposing an income tax upon the securities of a State. Yet in the Pollock case (supra) the court held, speaking through Chief Justice Fuller, at page 583, as follows:

"The Constitution contemplates the independent exercise by the Nation and the State, severally, of their constitutional powers. As the States can not tax the powers, the operations, or the property of the United States, nor the means which they employ to carry their powers into execution, so it has been held that the United States have no power under the Constitution to tax either the instrumentalities or the property of a State. A municipal corporation is the representative of the State and one of the instrumentalities of the state government. It was long ago determined that the property and revenues of municipal corporations are not subjects of federal taxation."

To support this opinion of the Chief Justice numerous cases are reviewed and cited.

I think the principle of law thus quoted, which is founded upon public policy, would obtain in construing a constitutional provision equally as firmly as in the construction of an act of Congress. Words in a constitution are no more forceful, nor are they differently construed, than the same words in a lawfully enacted statute. The Supreme Court of the United States, up to this time, has been the sure reliance, not only of the Nation, but of the States. The future may be safely rested there.

The inability to impose an income tax, if the necessities of the Government required it, would amount to a national calamity.

The Congress practically unanimously adopted and submitted this proposed amendment. It is vital to the safety and security of the Republic in time of need, and is without danger in the power conferred.

It is submitted to the legislature for its action in the firm conviction that its approval is in the interests of a just and equitable method of taxation.

Respectfully submitted.

JOHN FRANKLIN FORT, Governor.

[S. J. Res. 40. Sixty-first Congress of the United States of America, at the first session, begun and held at the city of Washington on Monday, the 15th day of March, 1909.]

Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution:

"Article XVI. The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States, and without regard to any census or enumeration."

J. G. CANNON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
J. S. SHERMAN,
Vice-President of the United States and President of the Senate.

Attest:
A. MCDOWELL,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.
CHARLES G. BENNETT,
Secretary.
By HENRY H. GILFRY,
Chief Clerk.

I certify that this joint resolution originated in the Senate.
CHARLES G. BENNETT,
Secretary.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I report back from the Committee on Appropriations, with sundry amendments, the bill (H. R. 19255) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, and I submit a report (No. 226) thereon. I shall ask the Senate early to-morrow morning to take up the bill.

I take this occasion, Mr. President, to say that, with one exception, this brings the Senate up even with the House on appropriation bills. The appropriation bill for the Agricultural Department is with the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and that is the only appropriation bill now before the Senate or in committee. As I have said, this brings the Senate up even with the House with that exception. I shall call up the bill to-morrow morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. McCUMBER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred certain bills granting pensions and increase of pensions, submitted a report (No. 227) accompanied by a bill (S. 6431) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, which was read twice by its title, the bill being a substitute for the following Senate bills heretofore referred to that committee:

THANKS TO GOVERNMENT OF ITALY.

Mr. CULLOM. From the Committee on Foreign Relations I report back without amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 93) authorizing the President of the United States to convey thanks to the Government of Italy for certain gifts, and I ask for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The preamble recites that the Government of Italy, as an expression of its gratitude for the action of Congress and of the American people in behalf of the sufferers from the earthquake of December, 1908, presented to the Library of Congress a copy of each engraving seen in the Catalogue of the Best Prints and Engravings in Copper which Exist in the Royal Copperplate Collection.

The joint resolution authorizes the President to convey to the Government of Italy the thanks of the Government of the United States for the gift, valuable from the standpoint of art, and more valuable as an expression of the good will of the Government and people of Italy.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by W. J. Browning, its Chief Clerk, returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 3544) to grant right of way over the public domain in the State of Arkansas for oil and gas pipe lines.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 20686) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

H. R. 7900. An act for the relief of Thomas B. Pope;

H. R. 11989. An act to provide for the removal of present grade crossing and construction of a new grade crossing on the line of Q street NE., District of Columbia;

H. R. 16324. An act to authorize the extension of Park place NW.;

H. R. 16328. An act for the extension of Franklin street NE. from its present eastern terminus east of Twenty-fourth street to the Bladensburg road;

H. R. 16329. An act to provide for the extension of Newton place NW., from New Hampshire avenue to Georgia avenue, and to connect Newton place in Gass subdivision with Newton place in Whitney Close subdivision;

H. R. 16336. An act authorizing certain changes in the plan for the permanent system of highways for that portion of the District of Columbia lying west of Rock Creek Park, north of Klingle road, east of Connecticut avenue, and south of Ellicott street NW.;

H. R. 18411. An act to authorize the Thacker Coal Mining Company to construct a footbridge across the Tug River at Thacker, Mingo County, W. Va.;

H. R. 18592. An act to amend an act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at Kansas City, Mo.;

H. R. 18695. An act to revive an act to authorize the construction of a bridge across Tug Fork of Big Sandy River, West Virginia;

H R. 18806. An act to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the Black River near Paroquet, Ark.;

H. R. 18807. An act to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the St. Francis River near Parkin, Ark.; and

H. R. 18808. An act to authorize the construction, maintenance and operation of a bridge across the White River at Augusta, Ark.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 20686. An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5574) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, which were, on page 23, line 22, to strike out "thirty" and insert "forty;" on page 31, line 3, to strike out "thirty" and insert "forty."

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

PENSIONS TO CERTAIN SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5237) granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, which was, on page 2, to strike out line 22, down to and including line 2, page 3.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House of Representatives and request a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the conferees be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice-President appointed Mr. McCUMBER, Mr. SCOTT, and Mr. TALIAFERRO the conferees on the part of the Senate.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5573) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and wars other than the civil war, and to certain widows of such soldiers and sailors, which was, on page 2, to strike out line 10, down to and including line 21.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House of Representatives and request a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the conferees be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice-President appointed Mr. McCUMBER, Mr. SCOTT, and Mr. TALIAFERRO the conferees on the part of the Senate.

TEMPORARY WITHDRAWALS OF PUBLIC LANDS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The calendar, under Rule VIII, will be considered.

Mr. NELSON. The bill (S. 5485) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to make temporary withdrawals of areas of public land pending report and recommendation to Congress or for examination and classification is on the calendar. It is an important bill reported by me from the Committee on Public Lands. I am obliged to be absent upon the Committee to Investigate the Interior Department and the Forest Service, and I would be glad if the bill could be passed over until I am here, retaining its place on the calendar. I ask unanimous consent to that effect.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that Senate bill 5485 be passed over from day to day as reached until the Senator from Minnesota is present.

Mr. NELSON. And can take charge of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is entered.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first bill on the calendar, under Rule VIII, will be stated.

The bill (S. 3724) regulating injunctions and the practice of the district and circuit courts of the United States was announced as first in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that the bill may go over.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1630) to provide for the construction of a memorial bridge across the Potomac River from Washington to the Arlington property was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 3360) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii," approved April 13, 1900, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BORAH. I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 1035) authorizing and directing the Secretary of State to examine and settle the claim of the Wales Island Packing Company was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let the bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 5876) to establish postal savings depositories for depositing savings at interest, with security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CARTER. Let the bill be passed over for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

PANAMA CANAL, ETC.

The bill (H. R. 12316) to provide for the government of the Canal Zone, the construction of the Panama Canal, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order, and the Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. MONEY. I ask that the bill may go over until tomorrow.

Mr. FLINT. I will ask the Senator from Mississippi to permit the bill to be read, and then it can go over.

Mr. MONEY. If the Senator from California prefers that course, very well; but I supposed it would be better to have it read when it is considered. Just at this moment there are several Senators interested in the bill who are not in the Chamber. I have no objection to finishing the reading, if the Senator prefers.

Mr. CULLOM. Let it be read.

Mr. FLINT. I ask that the reading may be proceeded with.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Interoceanic Canals with amendments.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

Mr. FLINT. On the request of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] the bill will go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill goes over. The next bill on the calendar will be stated.

TEMPORARY WITHDRAWALS OF PUBLIC LANDS.

The bill (S. 5485) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to make temporary withdrawals of areas of public land pending report and recommendation to Congress for examination and classification, was announced as next in order on the calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice, under the order of the Senate.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS-METHODS COMMISSION.

The bill (S. 6168) creating a government business-methods commission was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let the bill go over.

Mr. BOURNE. At the request of the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], who has the bill in charge, I ask that it may go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho requested that the bill should go over. The bill goes over.

CRIMINAL JURISDICTION OVER CORPORATIONS.

The bill (S. 5899) to amend section 1014 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. CUMMINS. This bill was quite carefully considered at a former time. I would be very glad to have it disposed of now.

The Senate as in Committee of the Whole resumed the consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has been read in full, and an amendment offered by the junior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] is pending.

Mr. KEAN. Let the amendment be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again read.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 8, of the bill, before the word "shall," insert the words "when indorsed by the judge of such district," so that, if amended, the clause will read:

Such notice shall be directed to the marshal of any district of the United States in which service may be made, and when indorsed by the judge of such district shall be served upon such offender agreeably to the methods prescribed by law for the service of civil process upon artificial persons in the district in which such service is made, and not less than twenty days before the time of such hearing.

Mr. CUMMINS. As I stated when the bill was before the Senate at a former time, while I do not regard the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York as necessary, I have no objection to it. I have no power to accept it, although the bill is in my charge. I hope that the Senate will accept the amendment and proceed with the consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, this is the measure that was under discussion for a considerable time. I have sent for a copy of the bill. Mine has become displaced from my file. I had a marked copy of the bill. I do not believe we are ready to vote upon the bill. I will ask that it go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. On the request of the Senator from Idaho, the bill goes over.

Mr. CUMMINS. I hope it will go over without prejudice, retaining its place on the calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill goes over without prejudice, retaining its place on the calendar.

HOMESTEAD ENTRIES IN THE STATE OF WASHINGTON.

The bill (S. 4477) providing for the homestead entry of certain lands in the State of Washington, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands, with an amendment on page 2, after line 13, to strike out section 2, in the following words:

SEC. 2. That after said survey and the approval thereof by the Commissioner of the General Land Office the plat thereof shall be filed in the office of the register and receiver in the manner provided by law, and thereafter any settler who is in actual occupation of any portion of the lands described in section 1 hereof at the date of the passage of this act who has settled thereon in good faith for the purpose of securing a home, and is by law entitled to make a homestead entry, shall be entitled to enter the land so occupied, not exceeding 20 acres in a body, according to the government surveys and subdivisions thereof, upon payment to the Government of the sum of $2.50 per acre for each acre entered by him, and upon showing residence and cultivation of such lands in the manner and for the length of time required by the homestead laws of the United States.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 2. That after said survey and the approval thereof by the Commissioner of the General Land Office the plat thereof shall be filed in the office of the register and receiver in the manner provided by law, and thereafter any settler who was in actual occupation of any portion of the lands described in section 1 hereof on the 1st day of December, 1909, who made actual settlement thereon in good faith for the purpose of securing a home, shall, if qualified to make a homestead entry, be entitled to make a homestead entry of the lands so occupied, not exceeding 20 acres in a body, according to the government surveys and subdivisions thereof, upon payment to the Government at the time of such entry of the sum of $2.50 per acre for each acre entered by him, and within five years from the date of such entry he shall be required to submit proof showing residence and cultivation of such lands in the manner and for the length of time required by the homestead laws of the United States, and failure to make such showing shall be deemed sufficient cause for forfeiture of all rights to the land and to the money paid, and in case of any such default the land shall be offered at public sale.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WATERWAYS AND WATER RESOURCES.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I submit an amendment to the river and harbor bill. I ask that it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the proposed amendment as requested.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I give notice that on to-morrow, during the morning hour, I shall speak upon this amendment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

The President is authorized to bring into coordination and cooperation with the Corps of Engineers of the Army the other scientific or constructive services of the United States that relate to the study, development, and control of waterways and water resources and subjects related thereto and to the development and regulation of interstate and foreign commerce, with a view to uniting such services through a board or boards in investigating questions relating to the development, improvement, regulation, and control of interstate and foreign commerce, including therein the related questions of irrigation, forestry, swamp-land reclamation, clarification of streams, regulation of flow, control of floods, utilization of water power, prevention of soil waste, cooperation of railways and waterways, and promotion of transfer facilities and sites, and in forming comprehensive plans for the development of the waterways and water resources of the country for every useful purpose by cooperation between the United States and the several States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals within the jurisdiction, powers, and rights of each, respectively, and with a view to assigning to the United States such portion of such development, promotion, regulation, and control as can be properly undertaken by the United States by virtue of its power to regulate interstate and foreign commerce and by reason of its proprietary interest in the public domain, and to the States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals such portion as properly belongs to their jurisdiction, rights, and interests, and with a view to properly apportioning costs and benefits, and with a view to so uniting the plans and works of the United States, within its jurisdiction, and of the States and municipalities, respectively, within their jurisdictions, and of corporations, communities, and individuals, within their respective powers and rights, as to secure the highest development and utilization of the waterways and water resources of the United States; and he is authorized to appoint as members of such board or boards such engineers, transportation experts, and constructors of eminence as he may deem advisable: Provided, however, That until further authorized by law the total expenditure under this provision shall not exceed ——— dollars.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask that the amendment lie on the table, and I give notice that I shall to-morrow address the Senate on the subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table. The Secretary will state the next bill on the calendar.

EXTENSION OF MORRILL ACTS TO THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 530) to amend an act entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic acts," approved July 2, 1862, and the acts supplementary thereto, so as to extend the benefits thereof to the District of Columbia, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BURNHAM. I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will lie over.

CERTIFICATES OF INDEBTEDNESS AGAINST RECLAMATION FUND.

The bill (S. 5705) to authorize the issue and sale of certificates of indebtedness against the reclamation fund was announced as next in order.

Mr. KEAN. Let that bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I ask Senators to permit the bill to be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. KEAN. I have no objection to its being read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. CARTER. Then, let the bill be regularly read, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill, and read section 1.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask that that bill go over, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

Mr. FLINT. I ask that the bill be placed under Rule IX.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I asked that the bill be read, and the Secretary is proceeding to read the bill under the permission granted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thought the Secretary had finished the reading. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] having objected to its being considered, the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] asked unanimous consent that the bill be read in full, with the understanding that at the conclusion of the reading it would go over. The Secretary was reading the bill by unanimous consent.

Mr. DAVIS. The bill, as I understand, involves about $50,000,000; and I do not think it ought to be hastily considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is now simply a question of the bill being read by unanimous consent.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill, which is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That to enable the Secretary of the Interior to complete and properly extend reclamation projects already begun the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to borrow from time to time, at a rate of interest not exceeding 3 per cent per annum, such sum or sums as in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior may be necessary to complete the reclamation projects heretofore begun, including necessary extensions thereof by the Secretary of the Interior, and to issue therefor certificates of indebtedness in such form as he may prescribe and in denominations of $50 or of multiples of that sum; and each of said certificates, together with interest thereon, shall be payable out of the reclamation fund created in pursuance of the provisions of an act of Congress approved June 17, 1902, entitled "An act appropriating the receipts from the sale and disposal of public lands in certain States and Territories to the construction of irrigation works for the reclamation of arid lands," and such payment is hereby guaranteed by the United States: Provided, That the aggregate issue of such certificates shall not exceed $30,000,000, and the provisions and penalties of existing law respecting counterfeiting and other fraudulent practices are hereby made applicable to the certificates of indebtedness authorized by this act. Interest on such certificates shall be paid quarterly, and each certificate shall be payable, with interest thereon accrued, at such time after five years from the date of its issue as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe. That said certificates of indebtedness may be disposed of by the Secretary of the Treasury at not less than par under such regulations as he may prescribe, giving all citizens of the United States an equal opportunity to subscribe therefor; but no commission shall be allowed, and the interest on said certificates and any expense incident to preparing, advertising, and issuing the same shall be paid out of the reclamation fund and shall in due course be restored to said fund by including the same with all other expenses in future estimates of construction, operation, or maintenance. The certificates authorized by this act shall be exempt from taxes in any form by or under state, municipal, or local authority. That all money borrowed under authority of this act shall be devoted exclusively to the completion of work on projects heretofore begun.

SEC. 2. That, beginning five years after the date of the issue of the first certificate of indebtedness authorized by this act, 50 per cent of the annual receipts of the reclamation fund shall be applied to the payment of said certificates, which shall be canceled when paid.

Mr. FLINT. I move that the bill be placed on the calendar under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from California, that the bill which has just been read be placed on the calendar under Rule IX.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President, the reason I asked to have the bill placed on the calendar under Rule IX was that my time is very largely taken up in connection with the sessions of an investigating committee which is now sitting. I desire to be heard with reference to this bill before it is disposed of, and I ask the Senator from Montana to notify me when the bill is to be called up, so that I may discuss it. I am not opposed to the bill, but I want to offer amendments to it.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I will certainly undertake to notify the Senator, expecting, as I do, that he will be one of the cordial supporters of the measure.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

PENSIONS TO WIDOWS OF SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

The bill (S. 6058) amending section 2 of an act entitled "An act to increase the pensions of widows, minor children, etc., of deceased soldiers and sailors of the late civil war, the war with Mexico, the various Indian wars, etc., and to grant a pension to certain widows of the deceased soldiers and sailors of the late civil war," approved April 19, 1908, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let that bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill goes over at the request of the Senator from Massachusetts. That completes the calendar under Rule VIII.

POSTAL SAVINGS DEPOSITORIES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being what is known as the Alaskan government bill.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I suppose that is done because the calendar is completed. I wish the attention of the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. President, in view of the legislative situation with reference to the postal savings-bank bill, for which the unfinished business has been laid aside from day to day, retaining its place as unfinished business, it seems to the Committee on Territories, considering the general state of legislation, that to advance the postal savings-bank bill it might, if it is so desired by the Senate, be made now the unfinished business; therefore, the committee will not resist a motion of the Senator from Montana to proceed now to the consideration of the postal savings-bank bill.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, in view of the statement of the Senator from Indiana, I ask unanimous consent that the postal savings-bank bill be made the unfinished business of the Senate.

Mr. HEYBURN. I rise to a point of order. The request of the Senator from Montana is not in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I then move that the postal savings-bank bill be made the unfinished business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the postal savings-bank bill. If there be no objection——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I suggest that the Senator move to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. LODGE. A motion to take up the bill, if agreed to, would displace the unfinished business of course, and such a motion is always in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. Not before 2 o'clock. I still do not think that the motion is in order. The postal savings-bank bill was passed over this morning in the regular order of business, and the only motion that can properly be made is to take it up for consideration. It may or may not then become the unfinished business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands. The Chair understands that is the motion.

Mr. HEYBURN. I misunderstood the Senator from Montana, if that is true. I understood the motion——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The request that the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] first made has been disposed of by the Chair sustaining the point of order raised by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN]. Thereafter the Senator from Montana moved to consider the bill.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Is it not true that this whole matter is determined by the last provision of Rule VIII, which says:

> But if the Senate shall proceed with the consideration of any matter notwithstanding an objection, the foregoing provisions touching debate shall not apply.
> All motions made before 2 o'clock to proceed to the consideration of any matter shall be determined without debate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Certainly. That is correct, and that was about to be done.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. As I understand, the proper motion was to move to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the question is on making the postal savings-bank bill the unfinished business of the Senate. That, I understand, can be done by unanimous consent. I have not encountered anything that can not be done by unanimous consent of the Senate. Unanimous consent was denied. I thereupon made the motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill; and that, I understand, to be the motion now pending.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the effect of that will be determined later. Of course the motion is in order, and I have no objection to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Montana to proceed to the consideration of the postal savings-bank bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I now ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside. Certain amendments——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair was in error in announcing the unfinished business before 2 o'clock. At 2 o'clock the Senate, when the Chair then lays the unfinished business before the Senate, will dispose of that matter.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Even so, Mr. President, the Senate having adopted the motion of the Senator from Montana to proceed to the consideration of the postal savings-bank bill, that bill is now before the Senate, and nothing else is before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. During the morning hour.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Certainly; until 2 o'clock the bill is before the Senate.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I observe the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE], who has an amendment pending, is not present. The Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], who desires to address the Senate on the bill, is not present. I understand he will be prepared to address the Senate on the bill to-morrow. In view of the conditions stated, I will ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent to temporarily lay the bill aside. Is there objection?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I think that suggestion is not quite in order under our rules. The bill is before the Senate in the morning hour. If no Senator is ready to proceed, it drops, of course, and goes back to the calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would inquire, then, what is the present pleasure of the Senate? The calendar, under Rule VIII, has been completed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 1 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 17, 1910, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 16, 1910.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This is calendar Wednesday, and the call rests with the Committee on the Library.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Committee on the Library communicated with me this morning by telephone, saying that he was sick, and requested me to ask unanimous consent of the House that the Committee on the Library be passed without prejudice and that it be called on the next calendar day. His request is based on illness.

Mr. MANN. I object. I may say to the gentleman that it is understood that committees will not be passed without prejudice any more.

NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF ARTS AND LETTERS.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on the Library to call up the bill (S. 609) incorporating the National Institute of Arts and Letters, on the House Calendar.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, has not the Committee on the Library occupied two days?

The SPEAKER. No; only one day.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York raises the question of consideration. The question is, Will the House now consider the bill?

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BURKE of South Dakota) there were—72 ayes and 70 noes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri and Mr. FITZGERALD demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The Chair appointed as tellers Mr. BURKE of South Dakota and Mr. FITZGERALD.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 83 ayes and 83 noes.

The SPEAKER. Paragraph 3 of Rule XVI says:

When any motion or proposition is made, the question, "Will the House now consider it?" shall not be put unless demanded by a Member.

This was demanded by a Member, and the onus is on the affirmative; and the House votes not to consider the bill.

MONUMENT AT FORT RECOVERY, OHIO.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I call up from the Union Calendar the bill H. R. 2265, for the erection of a memorial monument at Fort Recovery, Ohio.

The SPEAKER. This bill being on the Union Calendar, the House under the rule will resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. HULL of Iowa in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 2265, and the Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. PAYNE. I object; we want to hear what the bill is.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to erect a suitable memorial monument on the grounds at Fort Recovery, Ohio, where lie buried the remains of Gen. Richard Butler; Colonel Oldham; Majors Ferguson, Hart, and Clark; Captains Bradford, Phelon, Kirkwood, Price, Van Swearingen, Tipton, Purdy, Smith, Piatt, Gaither, Crebbs, and Newman; Lieutenants Spear, Warren, Boyd, McMath, Burgess, Kelso, Read, Little, Hopper, and Likens; Ensigns Cobb, Balch, Chase, Turner, Wilson, Brooks, Beatty, and Purdy; Quartermasters Reynolds and Ward; Adjutants Anderson and Doc. Grasson; 23 other officers; and 630 American soldiers who, while under the command of General St. Clair, were slaughtered by the Indians of the Northwest Territory, at the battle of Fort Recovery, Ohio, on the morning of November 4, 1791. And also where lie buried the remains of Major McMahon, Captain Hartshorn, Lieutenant Craig, 19 other commissioned and noncommissioned officers, and 120 soldiers who, while under the command of Major McMahon, gallantly defended Fort Recovery against the attacks of 2,000 Indians and British soldiers on the 30th of June and the 1st of July, 1794.

SEC. 2. That for the above purpose the sum of $25,000, or so much of said sum as may be necessary, be hereby appropriated from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. This sum shall be expended by direction of the Secretary of War, or such officer as he may designate: Provided, That the money hereby appropriated shall be drawn from time to time only as may be required during the progress of the work and under the requisition of the Secretary: And provided further, That no part of said amount shall be expended until such time as the Secretary of War is satisfied that a responsible legal association is created and pledged to care for and maintain whatever memorial monument is erected and a suitable site is provided on which it can be located.

The following committee amendments were read:

On page 2, line 12, after the word "purpose," insert the words "the expenditure of;" in lines 14 and 15 of the same page strike out the words "appropriated from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated" and insert in place thereof the word "authorized;" and in line 18 of the same page strike out the word "appropriated" and insert in place thereof the word "authorized."

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TOU VELLE].

Mr. TOU VELLE. Mr. Chairman, this bill authorizes the expenditure of $25,000, or so much of said sum as may be necessary, to erect a suitable memorial monument on the battle grounds at Fort Recovery.

At daybreak on the 4th of November, 1791, the Indians surprised General St. Clair and defeated his army, consisting of about 1,400 soldiers, in a terrible battle, in which were killed 62 officers, including General Butler, Colonel Oldham, Majors Ferguson, Hart, and Clark; also 630 soldiers were killed and 280 wounded.

To the men who gave up their lives in those terrible charges against an unseen foe, or in a hand-to-hand struggle with Indians; to the 62 officers, whose honor has never been questioned and who performed acts of bravery rarely equaled on battlefield; to their sacred memory let us rear this monument.

In the following January, Wilkinson, with 150 mounted volunteers, marched to the battlefield to bury the slain.

In December, 1793, General Wayne, with his conquering legion, having arrived at Greenville, sent forward a detachment to the spot of St. Clair's defeat. They reburied the soldiers, built a fort on the battlefield, and named it Fort Recovery, in commemoration of it being recovered from the Indians, who possessed the ground in 1791.

On June 30, 1794, the Indians, assisted by British officers, attacked the fort. A severe and bloody battle was fought, lasting for two days, in which the Indians, having sustained a terrible loss, were ultimately compelled to retreat from the same field upon which they had been proudly victorious on the 4th of November, 1791.

Major McMahon, Captain Hartshorn, Lieutenant Craig, and 19 other officers were killed and 30 wounded, and 120 soldiers killed.

These officers and soldiers were buried inside the fortification. General Wayne praised the garrison for its bravery.

On September 10, 1851, several thousand citizens of this country gathered at Fort Recovery to honor these illustrious dead by reinterment of their bones. They provided 13 gigantic coffins for their reception. The men who once animated these bones came from each of the 13 old colonies, the magnificent forerunners of the original 13 States, and it was singularly appropriate that 13 caskets, representing the glorious old 13 colonies, for which many of them fought in their younger days, and the 13 States, constituting the latest born nation of the earth, for which they laid down their lives, should be selected to hold their remains. The assembled bones of these soldiers required caskets of great size and over 100 pallbearers for their manipulation.

At Fort Recovery, assisted by their comrades from other posts, the Grand Army of the Republic, after having conferred upon these heroes burial rites with military honors, requested Senator Hanna, of Ohio, to introduce a bill, which he did, and the one now under consideration is a substantial copy of it. Senator Hanna's bill was reported and passed the Senate. After a thorough investigation the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL] has reported this bill, and its passage is recommended by the entire committee.

Mr. Chairman, every man sleeping in these unmarked graves was an American. The 84 officers and many of the 750 soldiers were heroes. Every one of them contributed an undying part to the winning of the West. Many of them were soldiers of the Revolutionary war, men who from 1776 to 1783 fought to create the country at whose after call they gave their lives in 1791 or 1794. Some of them had seen service with Washington, Greene, and Marion, and were, at the time of their death, led by the great Revolutionary generals, St. Clair, Butler, and Wayne. They dared the death call of the haughty English foe in our war for independence; they dared the wilderness of the West, and died on the field of battle. That field, baptized by tears and dedicated in the blood of our fathers, should, it seems to me, be sacred to every American heart and marked by a monument as indestructible as the cause for which they died, and the Government of the United States will not have given these soldiers their just measure of reward until it marks their graves and the ground on which they fell with an imperishable shaft carrying their memory onward and outward to endless time. [Applause.]

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER].

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit in a summary way a few remarks in favor of the passage of this bill, H. R. 2265.

The bill under consideration provides for the erection of a memorial monument at Fort Recovery, Ohio, at a cost of $25,000. Fort Recovery is located not far from the western boundary of Ohio, in Mercer County, and on the scene of St. Clair's defeat by the Indians on November 4, 1791. Later on, in December, 1793, a detachment of the army under Gen. Anthony Wayne took possession of the scene of this battle and established a fort there, and called it Fort Recovery in commemoration of its being recovered from the Indians. While the fort was occupied by a detachment of General Wayne's army a very bloody battle took place there on June 30 and July 1, 1794, in which the Indians, with some British allies, were defeated in an effort to take it.

St. Clair's defeat was accomplished by the greatest and most successful combination of warlike Indian tribes ever formed on this continent. There assembled in the attack on St. Clair's army large numbers of Wyandottes, Miamis, Shawnees, Ottawas, Pottawatomies, Sacs, and Foxes, and of other Indian tribes. At that time there was a very well formed Indian confederation, earlier than the one Tecumseh attempted to form at the time of the battle of Tippecanoe, November 7, 1811, where his triplet brother, The Prophet, commanded the Indians and Gen. William Henry Harrison commanded our troops, and just prior to the war of 1812 with England. It has been claimed that both the English and the French had something to do with both the 1791 and 1811 Indian confederations, and that they aided in the attack on St. Clair. The greatest of the Indian chiefs of that time or of any time were in command at St. Clair's defeat. In principal command of them was Little Turtle, under whom were Blue Jacket, Black Eagle, and others of the great Indian chiefs. The Indians from the Sac and Fox tribes were from the far West, but they had assembled to unite with the other tribes to put an end to the advance of American civilization. Later these tribes were engaged in what is known as the Black Hawk Indian war, Black Hawk being then their principal chief.

The best blood of this country was spilled in St. Clair's defeat. Among those killed at St. Clair's defeat were Gen. Richard Butler, Colonel Oldham, 3 majors, 12 captains, 10 lieutenants, 8 ensigns, 2 quartermasters, 2 adjutants, and 23 other officers, a total of 62 officers, together with 630 soldiers—692 in all. A large number of the officers and private soldiers were volunteers for the St. Clair campaign, and they were largely from Kentucky, then in a territorial state. (Kentucky was admitted into the Union as a State June 1, 1792.)

In the second battle, in 1794, at Fort Recovery, when the Indians attempted to take the fort, there were killed the commander of the fort, Major McMahon, 2 captains, 3 lieutenants, and 19 other officers, making a total of 25 officers, together with 120 soldiers, not to mention the wounded. The total number of soldiers killed in both battles was 812, and the total number of officers killed was 87, making a total in both battles of 899 officers and soldiers. These officers and soldiers were buried upon the scene and on the field where they shed their blood and fell, and it is to commemorate their gallantry and heroic death that we propose to erect a suitable monument; also to the gallantry and heroism of all the sons of the new Republic who fought on that bloody field.

A detachment of United States soldiers under Colonel Wilkinson visited the scene of St. Clair's defeat in January, 1792, and collected the remains of the dead and gave them there a rude burial. Those killed in the battle of 1794 were buried there by their comrades. The remains of the dead of both battles were left undisturbed until September 10, 1851, when 5,000 or more citizens of Ohio and other parts gathered at Fort Recovery to do honor to the illustrious dead buried there. They reinterred their bones, providing first 13 gigantic coffins, each representing one of the original 13 States, for their reception, and reburied them upon a chosen and suitable spot within the limits of the original battlefield and just outside the old fort. Here these remains have rested ever since and will rest eternally. At a comparatively recent period, under the direction of the Grand Army of the Republic, a large gathering of citizens and ex-soldiers met at Fort Recovery and performed military honors over the graves of these patriotic dead, and in various ways did honor to them.

The desperate character of both battles testifies to the skill, bravery, and persistence of our countrymen who fought in both battles on this field, and of the warlike tribes that made the desperate attacks. The history of both battles involves something unusual in Indian warfare. The Indians precipitated both the battles by combined and desperate attacks, and St. Clair's army was assailed by them by night, an unusual thing for Indians to do prior to or since that time.

Gen. Arthur St. Clair was a distinguished officer and soldier of the Revolutionary war, and he had other distinguished Revolutionary officers and soldiers under him in his 1791 campaign and battle. St. Clair had the confidence of George Washington, the then President of the United States, who ordered the campaign, and he did not permanently lose it in consequence of his defeat. St. Clair was distinguished in other respects than as a general in the Revolutionary war, for he was President of the Continental Congress in 1787, when the ordinance of 1787 was passed (July 13, 1787), and which was in session contemporaneously with the convention that framed the Constitution of the United States, which bears date September 17, 1787, and, later, after his defeat, he was made, by President George Washington, governor of the Northwest Territory, a position he theretofore held by authority of the Continental Congress, and when later—1800—that was divided he was retained or appointed as governor of the Territory of Ohio, and he was its last territorial governor. I regret to say he was neglected in his old age, and was permitted to die in absolute poverty. He deserves a monument to his memory.

Many of the officers killed and buried at Fort Recovery were of the most distinguished and patriotic pioneer families of Kentucky and Ohio. At that time Ohio was very sparsely settled, though some of her pioneer residents fought and fell there in both battles.

It will be noted that for a period of now nearly one hundred and twenty years this battlefield has not had any distinguishing mark, save in a local way.

The brave officers and soldiers that were buried at Fort Recovery fell in the interest of advancing American civilization in the then Far West; and they were of the best blood of the land. The Indian tribes were at that time numerous, defiant, and aggressive. Frontier settlements were then being assaulted by large and small marauding Indian parties, and life was then unsafe practically everywhere northwest of the Ohio River for frontiersmen where bodies of troops were not maintained. The situation in that region of the country was then somewhat unique, as it has always been in America, in the march of civilization from the Atlantic coast westward to the Rocky Mountains. Civilized man did not appear on this continent for the purpose of transforming an occupying race of people from barbarism to civilization, but he came to bring in a new race with its already established civilization. The conflict between the white and the red man was one of occupancy, and consequently it involved the extermination of the savage or barbaric tribes. Whatever of wisdom and justice there may have been in this, if any, it is too late now for us to consider. The blood of the men buried at Fort Recovery is a part of what has been shed in the cause of western civilization.

The men who fell in the conflicts mentioned were heroic, patriotic citizens of the then new Republic, not then three years old under its constitutional form of government, and, while we properly do justice to the gallant officers and soldiers of later wars, it seems to me that justice, long delayed, should be done to the heroes who fell in the conflicts at and that centered around Fort Recovery. These battles were necessarily incident and necessary to a further occupancy and development of the then Great Northwest Territory. A final campaign against the Indians in northwestern Ohio came in 1794, under Gen. Anthony Wayne (Mad Anthony), and culminated on August 20, 1794, in the battle of Fallen Timbers, on the Maumee River, almost under the guns of a British fort. Wayne was likewise a Revolutionary officer of distinction, the hero of Stony Point. That battle broke up, in large part, the Indian confederation of Little Turtle and other Indian chiefs with their several tribes, and they were never fully united again, although, later on, Tecumseh, the celebrated Shawnee Indian chief, attempted to form a general Indian confederacy in 1811, to include all the northwestern and southern tribes; and in the war of 1812 some of these tribes united with or were encouraged by the officers of the British army to participate in that war. The great Tecumseh of the Shawnees was, it may be noted as a singular fact, commissioned during our 1812 war with England a brigadier-general in the English army. He held that rank when he fell at the battle of the Thames, October 5, 1813. Black Hawk, then a young Sac and Fox chief, was also present with Tecumseh and participated in the battle of the Thames. After that battle and the death of Tecumseh the Indians mainly deserted the English and never acted again in hostile combination.

After the battle of Fallen Timbers (1794) a treaty was formed, known as the treaty of Greenville, bearing date August 3, 1795. This treaty was kept only in part, but it was the end of the great independent Indian warfare on a large scale with the wild, warlike Indian tribes of the Northwest Territory, and after that they were forced to recede to the West, and they have been driven back and put upon reservations, until now they are reduced, hardly without exception, to mere dependent wards of the Republic and maintained at government expense.

Now, a word as to the establishing of cemeteries and the marking by monuments the graves of soldiers at the expense of the General Government. In many of the battles of more recent times, and especially those of the civil war, the bodies of soldiers who fell in battle have been removed either by their friends for burial at their former homes or they have been gathered and concentrated in great cemeteries maintained by the United States. The list of national cemeteries which I hold in my hand shows there are at least 83 such cemeteries now kept up by the Government. They are located in 26 States of the Union, and 59 of them are located in what we commonly denominate the Southern States, and they are not all located upon the scenes of great battles. Of these cemeteries 16 have burials less in number than those buried at Fort Recovery. None of these cemeteries are located in Ohio and only two of them in Indiana. There is one of these national cemeteries located in Mexico City, Mexico. There is one located at the scene of the Custer massacre by the Indians, June 26, 1876, on the Little Big Horn River in Montana.

I will, with the permission of the House, have published with my remarks a list of the national cemeteries, showing the number of interments in each. It is possible some cemeteries have been established since this list was made out, as it only shows the national cemeteries established prior to June 30, 1906. I think we have established and now maintain cemeteries at El Caney and San Juan, Cuba, or at least at one of these places.

Fort Recovery is located in a rich portion of our country, and its patriotic people are of a class that will feel proud that the graves of these patriots have been remembered; and they will jealously care for the memorial and preserve it as sacredly as any other memorial monument of like character is cared for in any part of the country.

The sum sought to be appropriated by the bill is a modest one, and I sincerely hope it will receive the unanimous vote of the Members of this House.

Late as it is to perpetuate the memory of these soldier dead, I think it is in harmony with the patriotic spirit of this country and of this age that we should erect this monument. There are buried at Fort Recovery Revolutionary officers and soldiers, led by three Revolutionary generals and other Revolutionary officers, and the fact that two battles were fought upon the same spot magnifies and intensifies the importance to be given to the place. The friends of this movement believe it is but reasonable, just, and right that we should erect this monument and establish and maintain at Fort Recovery a national cemetery. [Applause.]

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DOUGLAS].

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, it is with great pleasure that, at the instance of my colleague from Ohio who introduced this bill, and inspired by the Historical Society of Ohio, of which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] and myself happen to be trustees, I rise to say a few words in favor of this bill. The bill is a carefully considered one; it only appropriates $25,000 for this monument, and provides that it shall be cared for and a suitable site provided by an association to be organized for that purpose, and the appropriation is not to become available until this association is organized.

The history of the Northwest Territory, which was organized by the celebrated ordinance of 1787 and which continued undivided until 1800, when it was divided into the two Territories of Ohio and Indiana, is largely identified with the life and character of Gen. Arthur St. Clair, who was its governor from the time it was organized until it was divided, and the governor of the eastern portion of the Territory, called the Territory of Ohio, from 1800 almost until the time that Ohio was admitted into the Union. About six months before his term would have ended he was dismissed from office by President Jefferson, as the result of the efforts of men who belonged to the then Democratic party, and retired, humiliated, to private life.

I want to say a few words, if I can have the attention of the committee, with reference to Gen. Arthur St. Clair. His history is the most remarkable, in my judgment, of any of the Revolutionary heroes. He was a member of a distinguished family in Scotland and was appointed to a lieutenancy in a regiment serving in America. He served with distinction at the siege of Louisbourg. He was the first man over the breastworks of Quebec when Wolf wrested that town from Montcalm. For his distinguished services he was detailed to carry the news of that victory to Boston. There he married the daughter of Governor Bowdoin, of Massachusetts, and with her dowry and the land warrants that he obtained from the English Government he located a large tract of land in the valley of the Ligonier, in western Pennsylvania. At the breaking out of the Revolutionary war he saved, substantially, by his conduct the western portion of Pennsylvania to the cause of the colonies. He organized a regiment of Pennsylvania troops for the Revolutionary war, and so largely involved his private means in that effort that he really never recovered from it. He served through the Revolution with distinction, rising to the rank of major-general. He was the distinguished friend of Washington and served upon his staff. After the war he was elected to the Continental Congress. He was the President of the Continental Congress, as my distinguished colleague [Mr. KEIFER] has said, when the ordinance of 1787 was passed, and by the Continental Congress he was elected governor of the Northwest Territory. He served as governor for fourteen years and did more than any other one man to bring about order and to establish civilization in that great territory northwest of the Ohio River. He traveled throughout this great territory from Marietta and from Cincinnati to the settlements on the Wabash, to Detroit, and to the Mississippi, and, in conjunction with the judges who were appointed to assist him, he made all of the laws which governed the territory until the territorial legislature was organized.

After his deposition from office by President Jefferson he went back to Pennsylvania, where he lived for a number of years in poverty and died as the result of a fall from his wagon when he was hauling hay to a neighboring village. The Government did substantially nothing to reimburse him for the moneys he had expended. He was buried by his Masonic brethren of Greensburg, Pa., and they erected a simple sandstone monument over his grave, which is inscribed with this epitaph:

Here lies the body of Maj. Gen. Arthur St. Clair, awaiting a more fitting monument due him from his country.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that his long and distinguished services and the sacrifice of nearly the whole of his fortune in behalf of his country for the equipment of men during the Revolutionary war and at the time of the Indian outbreak in 1791, justly entitled him to consideration from his country.

This monument is designed simply to commemorate the heroism of those who suffered with him on this fatal field in 1791, and the other soldiers who died there under Anthony Wayne in 1794, and I believe that the appropriation is eminently a proper and wise one for the Congress to make. I hope that the bill will not be opposed. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. DENBY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 6272. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and wars other than the civil war, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 6271. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 6051. An act to authorize the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company to reconstruct, maintain, and operate its railway bridges across the Escambia Bay, Choctawhatchee River, and Apalachicola River, in the State of Florida;

S. 5576. An act to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1901;

S. 4629. An act to authorize the surveyor of the District of Columbia to adopt the system of designating land in the District of Columbia now in force in the office of the assessor of said District;

S. 4617. An act to acquire land in the vicinity of the Connecticut Avenue Bridge for the extension of certain streets;

S. 2072. An act to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John Reed, alias Michael Flanagan;

S. 1461. An act to prevent fraudulent representations as to government guaranties of foods and medicines; and

S. 226. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to divide the judicial district of Nebraska into divisions, and to provide for an additional district judge in said district.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5573) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and wars other than the civil war and to certain widows of such soldiers and sailors; had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and had appointed Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. SCOTT, and Mr. TALIAFERRO as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5237) granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and had appointed Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. SCOTT, and Mr. TALIAFERRO as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5574) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 93. Joint resolution authorizing the President of the United States to convey thanks to the Government of Italy for certain gifts.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 13145. An act for the relief of John W. Dula;

H. R. 17752. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 13410. An act to modify the One hundred and twenty-second and One hundred and twenty-fourth Articles of War;

H. R. 17755. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

H. R. 3037. An act to correct the lineal and relative rank of certain officers of the United States Army, and to prevent the recurrence of like cases by amending the act approved October 1, 1890, entitled "An act to provide for the examination of certain officers of the army and to regulate promotion therein."

MONUMENT AT FORT RECOVERY, OHIO.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. General debate having closed, the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That for the above purpose the sum of $25,000, or so much of said sum as may be necessary, be hereby appropriated from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. This sum shall be expended by direction of the Secretary of War, or such officer as he may designate: Provided, That the money hereby appropriated shall be drawn from time to time only as may be required during the progress of the work and under the requisition of the Secretary: And provided further, That no part of said amount shall be expended until such time as the Secretary of War is satisfied that a responsible legal association is created and pledged to care for and maintain whatever memorial monument is erected and a suitable site is provided on which it can be located.

With the following committee amendments:

Lines 18 and 19, page 2, strike out the words "appropriated from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated" and insert in lieu thereof the word "authorized."

Line 22, page 2, strike out the word "appropriated" and insert in lieu thereof the word "authorized."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I call the attention of the gentleman in charge of the bill to the bottom of page 2, where it recites that certain money shall be paid under the requisition of the "Secretary." Does that have reference to the Secretary of War?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I presume it does.

Mr. MANN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move to insert, after the word "Secretary," in lines 24 and 25, the words "of War."

Mr. KEIFER. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with the amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. OLMSTED, having assumed the chair, Mr. HULL of Iowa, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2265) for the erection of a memorial monument at Fort Recovery, Ohio, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote demanded on the amendments? If not, the vote will be taken in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KEIFER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PICTURES OF CERTAIN EX-SPEAKERS OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up House resolution 163, on the Union Calendar No. 67.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 163, directing the Committee on the Library to employ competent artists for painting the pictures of certain ex-Speakers of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I will object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard, and under the rule the House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WASHBURN] will take the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. Res. 163, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill may be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill may be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to reserve a point of order on the bill as to the authority of the Committee on the Library to report a bill to pay money out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, nobody could understand what the gentleman said or what his point of order is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not hear the point of order.

Mr. MANN. It is as to the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Library to report a resolution for the payment of money out of the contingent fund of the House. A resolution was referred to the Committee on the Library authorizing certain work to be done and proposing to appropriate the sum of $8,500, but the Committee on the Library reports an amendment to this resolution proposing to pay the money out of the contingent fund of the House, a matter which was not referred to the Committee on the Library, and they have no authority to report any such resolution.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. PARSONS. Did not the bill provide that the money should be appropriated out of the contingent fund of the House? That is the language of the resolution as introduced.

Mr. MANN. Well, possibly so. I see that is the way, providing for an appropriation; but whether it is or not, the rule is that all matters touching the expenditure of the contingent fund of the House shall be referred to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Will the gentleman give us what rule that is?

Mr. MANN. Paragraph 54, under Rule XI; and while it is true that the reference of a public bill to a committee, as a rule, confers jurisdiction on the committee to make a report, I think that is not true and never has been the practice as to payment out of the contingent fund of the House. It would be a very bad practice to adopt that any committee of the House may have referred to it a bill over which the committee has jurisdiction with a paragraph in it providing for the payment of certain things out of the contingent fund of the House and thereby deprive one committee of the power to keep track of the expenditures of the contingent fund. Now, the Committee on Accounts is given certain power by the law. Certainly it is not proper for the House by resolution, referred to some other committee than the Committee on Accounts, to commence to provide for an expenditure out of the contingent fund which under the law must pass through the Committee on Accounts, throwing the door wide open——

Mr. DOUGLAS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Does the gentleman think the language he quotes is exclusive of the authority of any other committee reporting a bill to make appropriations out of that fund? The language I call the gentleman's attention to is that in the enumeration of committees there is simply a provision that—

Touching the expenditure of the contingent fund of the House, the auditing and settling of all accounts which may be charged therein by order of the House—to the Committee on Accounts.

In other words, I submit to the gentleman that it is not an exclusive authority as to appropriating out of the contingent fund, but that they shall have general charge of it, and this appropriation should be made out of a fund that they would have to audit and see that it was properly expended. I submit that to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. The Committee on Accounts could not audit a claim that the House provides directly shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House as is provided here, so there is no auditing of it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I desire to interrupt the gentleman for a moment to raise the question that the point of order of the gentleman is made too late, the bill having been reported by the committee, and the committee assuming jurisdiction, and the Committee on Accounts not claiming jurisdiction, that it is now too late, and the House having taken up the consideration of the bill, it is also too late to raise the question of jurisdiction.

Mr. MANN. Of course, the point of order is not too late so far as consideration of the resolution is concerned. I was endeavoring to ask the question as to whether it was too late so far as having been reported from the committee is concerned. It is true that as a general rule a reference to one committee gives that committee jurisdiction to report a public bill. There is no controversy over that. It seems to me the question in reference to the contingent fund is an entirely different proposition. It has always been the policy of the House to confine the expenditures of the contingent fund either to payments made directly under the authority of the Committee on Accounts, or where the Committee on Accounts has reported to the House on the proposition, and it seems to me there is a differentiation between the expenditures of the contingent fund and a public bill left to one committee, although another committee might claim jurisdiction.

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES. This is not a private bill; therefore it must be a public bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It might not be either.

Mr. GAINES. I think it is a public law.

Mr. MANN. This is a House resolution. It will not be law if it is passed.

Mr. GAINES. The fact that a report has been made prevents the question of the jurisdiction of the committee being raised, and in this particular instance the House did give its unanimous consent, I understand, that the matter might be considered.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken. It is considered in the Committee of the Whole. I objected to unanimous consent.

Mr. GAINES. The gentleman may be correct, but I thought this occurred, namely, that the House was proceeding, by unanimous consent, to consider it in the House as in the Committee of the Whole, and the gentleman made his objection at this stage, when unanimous consent was asked to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. Unanimous consent has not been asked to dispense with the first reading of the bill. That has not been dispensed with, and, then, it is not a bill. It is a House resolution concerning an expenditure from the contingent fund of the House. Suppose a resolution be introduced and referred to some other committee, and in some place it provides that that same committee shall have a clerk, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House. Does the reference of that resolution properly to some committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter, but containing some item which that committee does not have jurisdiction of, give the committee authority to report a resolution for the expenditure of the contingent fund? If so, I will try to work it myself if I ever need an additional clerk in my committee. It would be an easy matter to provide for in a resolution. Send it to a committee, and add in a provision somewhere authorizing the committee to have an extra clerk, and thereby bring it, at least, before the House for consideration without regard to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. PARSONS. The House can disapprove.

Mr. MANN. The House can disapprove. No one denies that.

Mr. PARSONS. And the House might approve, if it wishes.

Mr. MANN. No one will deny, on the other hand, that it was the whole purpose of the ruling of the law to have all expenditures of the contingent fund go through the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I wish to address myself to the point of order. I think that my views upon this matter are clearly defined, and I can clearly define them to the committee. The Committee on the Library, of which I am a member, has had, uniformly, jurisdiction of the erection of monuments, of everything connected with the Congressional Library, and of all matters connected with art. The rule reads, subjects "touching the Library of Congress, statuary, and pictures," shall be referred to the Joint Committee on the Library. Now, this bill is absolutely and beyond controversy, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], within the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Library. There can be no question that that committee has absolute right to take jurisdiction of the bill regarding the painting of the portraits of the former Speakers. This bill proposes to take down the crayon portraits of the former Speakers in the lobby of the House and replace them, at a very small and trifling expense, with oil portraits. The bill is introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS] and was unanimously reported by the Committee on the Library.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. You call it a bill. This is simply a House resolution.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. You are correct; I was mistaken. I see it is a resolution and not a bill.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Not speaking in reference to the matter of the resolution, if the gentleman will permit me?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. No money can be drawn out of the Treasury except by a bill or joint resolution; "an act passed in pursuance of law," says the Constitution. Now, what right has the House to pass a House resolution which is in effect not a law, which expends money of the people without passing a bill, so that it may become law instead of a simple House resolution?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Has the gentleman finished his question?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. That is the question I would like the gentleman to answer.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I will answer the gentleman's question. The Constitution reads:

> No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law.

This resolution provides the money shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, which we control. This resolution, Mr. Chairman, is a resolution of which the Committee on the Library has undoubtedly jurisdiction. Is there any doubt about the fact, I will ask the gentleman from Illinois, that the Library Committee has jurisdiction of a resolution in regard to painting the pictures on portraits of former Speakers?

Mr. MANN. I think clearly the Committee on the Library does not have jurisdiction of a resolution to do anything and pay it out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. But I ask the gentleman from Illinois if he does not concede that we have jurisdiction of a bill or resolution to paint portraits of the former Speakers?

Mr. MANN. Well, the Committee on the Library has jurisdiction of a resolution providing for the painting of the portraits of Speakers at a cost not to exceed so much money; but they have no jurisdiction over a resolution to pay anything whatever out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, let me finish my statement. The Committee on the Library has jurisdiction under the rules of the House, it seems clear to me, either of a bill or resolution, for the purpose of painting the portraits of the Speakers. They have taken jurisdiction of it, and it is for the House to say, independently of the Committee on Accounts, whether the money shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House or not. That is a matter for the House. Now, there has been a very serious question raised in regard to the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Library so far as appropriating money is concerned. Of course every gentleman understands there is a distinction between committees that authorize expenditures of money and committees that appropriate money. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, of which I am a member also, merely authorizes the expenditure of money, but appropriations follow through the Committee on Appropriations always as a matter of course, based upon that authorization.

Now, what is the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Library? Take the rules of the House and the precedents prepared for the House by our parliamentarian, Mr. Hinds, and you will find that a question is raised as to whether or not the Committee on the Library does have the power to make appropriations. There is a note under paragraph 56 of Rule XI which would indicate that the Committee on the Library does not have power to make appropriations. But, Mr. Chairman, this committee in the last Congress, if I recollect correctly——

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will hurry up, I want to call his attention to something.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I will say to the gentleman from New York I am talking from my knowledge of the subject, and I will not hurry up unless the House shows impatience with my speech; then I will hurry up.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. If it is very short, because I have my mind on the subject and am familiar with the subject.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is the gentleman familiar with the act of February 14, 1892?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I am not familiar with that act. Will the gentleman give me the title of it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is an act relative to the expenditure of money from the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. No; I am not familiar with that act; but I am familiar with the rules which apply to the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Library, and that committee has jurisdiction of this resolution.

Now, as I started to say before the gentleman from New York interrupted me, in a previous Congress, I think the Fifty-ninth, this committee, of which I was a member, Mr. McCleary, of Minnesota, then being the chairman, reported bills appropriating money absolutely from the Treasury—not from the contingent fund of the House, but from the Treasury of the United States, of higher dignity than the contingent fund. Over the contingent fund of the House the Members have at all times absolute control. That is my position.

The Library Committee reported bills, in the Fifty-ninth Congress, making appropriations for the erection of a monument at Provincetown, Mass., for the erection of a monument at Princeton, N. J., for the erection of a monument at Kings Mountain, N. C., and other bills which carried absolute appropriations from the Treasury of the United States, which were passed and became law. Never until this Congress did we hear a suggestion that the Committee on the Library had not the absolute right, not only to report all bills in connection with statuary, pictures, and erection of monuments, but also the absolute right to appropriate the money from the United States Treasury therefor.

Examine the statute books as I have done, and you will find that the Library Committee has reported and the House and Senate have passed bill after bill making direct appropriations from the Treasury of the United States, and yet the point of order is raised that we can not make a little $9,500 appropriation out of the contingent fund of the House, a fund that is absolutely under the control of the House.

However, the chairman of my committee [Mr. McCALL] told me this year that he was informed that a point of order would be made unless our bills were so framed as simply to authorize appropriations instead of making direct appropriations, and we have so framed our bills; but never until this Congress have I heard it questioned that the Committee on the Library not only had jurisdiction of matters in connection with the Library and monuments and all matters of art, but also the power to make absolute appropriations.

Now, my position is this: Having jurisdiction of the resolution, the House has the power over the contingent fund of the House to make this appropriation out of it if the House sees fit.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the gentleman to a precedent——

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY (continuing). A precedent which has arisen in my own experience in the House, and to ask the gentleman whether it is not directly in point, and against the proposition which he now advocates.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. What is it?

Mr. TAWNEY. In the Fifty-fourth Congress I introduced a House resolution to investigate the effect of the repeal of the reciprocity clause of the McKinley law, which resolution was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. The resolution also provided for defraying the expenses of the investigation, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

By direction of the Committee on Ways and Means I reported the resolution to the House, and Mr. Crisp, then a Member of the House and a member of the Ways and Means Committee, made the point of order that the Ways and Means Committee had no jurisdiction or control whatever over the contingent fund of the House; that the only committee having jurisdiction over that fund was the Committee on Accounts, and that, therefore, the resolution would have to be referred to the Committee on Accounts. And Speaker Reed held that the point of order was well taken, and the resolution went to the Committee on Accounts and was referred back to the House from that committee. That was because the committee reporting the resolution not only authorized a certain thing to be done, but authorized the payment of money from a fund over which the committee had no jurisdiction whatever, and could not do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to ask the gentleman from Minnesota if the matter referred to the committee was not referred by a vote of the House rather than by a ruling of the Speaker?

Mr. TAWNEY. It was held that it could not be considered by the House, for the reason that the Ways and Means Committee did not have jurisdiction, and then, subsequently, on my motion, as I now recall the fact, it was referred to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I am not familiar with the alleged precedent. Mr. Chairman, suppose this resolution should now be referred by the House, as the gentleman says was done in the case of the resolution from the Committee on Ways and Means—I am not familiar with the action in that case, but suppose it is referred—has the Committee on Accounts any more authority to take action than the Committee on the Library has? As I understand the rule as laid down in the Manual and Digest, the Committee on Accounts does not report appropriations of money from the Treasury of the United States. That is the footnote to the rule, as I read it.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Has the House any authority to appropriate or provide for the payment of money out of the contingent fund, except in matters which relate to work of the House and must be referred to the Committee on Accounts? Suppose the Committee on the Library had had a resolution referred to it to build a monument and pay for it out of the contingent fund, has the committee jurisdiction to report such a bill?

Mr. OLMSTED. Would the Committee on Accounts have jurisdiction of it?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. That is the question.

Mr. MANN. That question is not here. The Committee on Accounts has not done such a foolish thing.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. The jurisdiction of the Committee on Accounts is clearly stated in the rules; but my position is that, having taken jurisdiction of this resolution, the Committee on the Library has a right to report it; and having the right to report the resolution, it is for the House to say whether the money shall be paid from the contingent fund or not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, before discussing the question as to which committee has the jurisdiction of this particular resolution, I wish to call attention to the fact that, even if it be passed by the House, not a dollar could be expended under the terms of the resolution. This is a House resolution directing the expenditure of certain sums from the contingent fund for the purpose of providing portraits of certain Speakers. The act of February 14, 1892, among other things, refers to the contingent fund of the House as follows:

> Nor shall such appropriations be used for any expenses not intimately and directly connected with the routine legislative business of either House of Congress. And the accounting officers of the Treasury shall apply the provisions of this paragraph in the settlement of accounts of expenditures from said appropriation incurred for service or material subsequent to the approval of this act.

While it is true that Congress can amend the law providing that this money shall be expended in this way, the House itself by a simple resolution can not change the provisions of this statute, and even the passage of this resolution will not permit the expenditure of the money.

I do not wish to argue seriously as to whether a committee has jurisdiction of a resolution which, if adopted by the House, would put the House in a ridiculous position. It can not be presumed that the House will pass a resolution providing for the expenditure of certain funds which the House has no power to expend in the way contemplated, and to assert that the committee has jurisdiction of such a resolution, when the House itself can not disburse the money in the way provided in the resolution, it seems to me is arguing for something that would merely make the House ridiculous.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I understand the gentleman wants to send the resolution to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I do not.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Where does the gentleman want to send it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I should send it to the wastebasket [laughter], because it would make no difference what committee it went to or what committee reported it, or even if it passed the House when introduced by unanimous consent, it could not effect the purpose designed, and not a single dollar could be expended for that purpose under such a resolution.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. If you send it to the wastebasket, that would be a very undignified and unparliamentary way of disposing of it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It might be, but it would be a very effective method.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. If the Committee on Accounts should take jurisdiction of the resolution instead of the Committee on the Library, under the rules of the House, as the gentleman from New York well knows, the Committee on Accounts can no more make an appropriation from the contingent fund than can the Committee on the Library, according to the view of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not according to my view, but according to the statutes and according to the law, which I have read for the information of the gentleman who took the trouble to tell us how carefully he had investigated the statutes covering this question.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will yield.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. If I understand the gentleman from New York, his proposition is that the law now provides by an act of Congress, approved by the President, in what manner the payments shall be made out of the contingent fund of the House, and it is not competent for the House alone to pass a resolution to pay money out of the contingent fund in this way; but in order to do it the law must be changed like any other law, by concurrent action of the two Houses and approval of the President.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is the contention I have been submitting. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that no committee can have jurisdiction of a resolution that will attempt to do something that will put it beyond our power to do. I am inclined to think, with the gentleman from North Carolina, that if this resolution could accomplish its purpose the committee in the first instance would have jurisdiction. My recollection is the Revised Statutes defines bills which are private bills, classifies certain bills as private bills. Under the rule it is only private bills, if erroneously referred and reported, that can be prevented from consideration by a point of order.

All other bills and resolutions, according to the third paragraph of the twenty-second rule, are introduced and referred by the Speaker, and an erroneous correction of such reference must be made in the way provided in the rule, and such bills, if reference be not corrected, can only be——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New York state what page he is reading from?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Page 420 of the Manual.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. The gentleman surely does not contend that this is an erroneous reference?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I say I think if it should have been referred at all, I have no doubt it should have gone to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Why is the gentleman side stepping the proposition in that way? He is reading the rules about erroneous references. This is not an erroneous reference. This resolution was properly referred to the Committee on the Library, and it ought to go, according to the gentleman's idea, to a committee that can make an appropriation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the gentleman does not understand the rule——

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I understand the rule in regard to erroneous references. This has nothing to do with that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me make my statement and I will see if the gentleman does. The rules provide that if a bill of a private nature be erroneously referred a point of order interposed either in the House or in the Committee of the Whole when it is called up for consideration prevents its consideration, and my recollection is that such an objection, if sustained, sends the bill to the appropriate committee. Now, that is the rule that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has invoked in this instance, contending that this is a bill of a private character. The rule also provides that all other bills, memorials, and resolutions shall be referred in a different way.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inquire from the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] if he considers this a private resolution—the resolution now before the committee?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I think it is not. I believe the resolution comes under paragraph 3 of Rule XXII, which provides that "all other bills, memorials, and resolutions" may in like manner be delivered to the Speaker and by him referred, and that the rulings applicable to public bills apply to this resolution. So far as the reference itself is concerned by the Speaker, the bill was properly sent to the Committee on the Library, if it should have been sent anywhere, but since it would be utterly impossible to accomplish the purpose designed by this resolution, I wish to say that if the resolution should be held to be properly before the committee I shall raise the question of consideration, as I am convinced that the House has no desire——

Mr. MANN. It is too late to raise that question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it is not. I am convinced that the House has no desire to pass a bill or a resolution which would be absolutely ineffectual to accomplish the purpose provided in the resolution.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, the argument of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] seems to me to be addressed rather to the merits of the resolution than to the point of order. Whether the resolution, if passed, would violate any provision of the Federal Constitution or any act of Congress is not for the Chair to decide on a point of order, but in the first instance for the House and then, it shall be passed, afterwards, if necessary, by the courts. Now, paragraph 54 of Rule XI provides that there may be referred to the Committee on Accounts matters touching the expenditure of the contingent fund of the House, the auditing and settling of all accounts, which may be charged therein by order of the House. Paragraph 56 provides that there shall be referred to the Committee on the Library matters touching the Library of Congress, statuary and pictures. It clearly defines pictures as a subject-matter over which the Committee on the Library shall have jurisdiction.

The Committee on Accounts has no jurisdiction over pictures. It has been ruled over and over again that the Committee on the Library has jurisdiction over the subject of the purchase of pictures, and the rule expressly places that privilege and duty there. So it seems to me that the resolution was properly referred in the first instance. But over and above that, and more important, Mr. Chairman, is this proposition that this is not a private matter. The purchase of these portraits of these former Speakers is not private to those gentlemen who have passed and gone. It is a public matter for this House. If this is a private matter, it is the first private matter that I have ever been called upon to discuss in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. It would be improperly here if it were a private matter. Now, this matter came up in the House, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and we are here discussing this public matter. Now, for the first time, the question of jurisdiction is raised, that this ought to have been, in the first instance, referred to another committee; and I submit, Mr. Chairman, that that point of order comes too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. MANN. I wish to submit a few remarks first, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. MANN. Perhaps the Chair will change his mind. I did not claim that this was a private bill, and if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] had listened to what was said he would have known that fact. I distinctly disclaimed that it is private. Whether it is a public resolution is another question.

I put my point of order upon the ground that under the law the expenditures out of the contingent fund of the House could only be for certain things and for matters approved by the Committee on Accounts, and that that law was binding on the House and binding on the Chair in the House, and that the House can not confer jurisdiction upon another committee of the House to appropriate money out of the contingent fund of the House. Now, whether that be correct or not I do not know. The point of order does not come too late, so far as being made at all is concerned. If a point of order can be made at all, it comes as soon as it can be made. This is the first opportunity of making the point of order. The House has automatically resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union without a motion. Now, whether no point of order can be made after the resolution is reported is the question before the Chair. Whether the reference of this resolution to pay out of the contingent fund of the House, contrary to the provisions of the statutes, which say that these payments shall be made and audited by the Committee on Accounts, whether that point of order can be made after the reference of the bill is the question, although the resolution, if passed, as contended by the gentleman from New York, might not be effective, it makes no difference. The question is on the reference to the committee where the rule provides that these accounts shall go through the Committee on Accounts.

The CHAIRMAN. Pending consideration by the committee of House resolution 163, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] made a point of order as to the reference of the bill, which appears on its face to be one containing matter which might appropriately be referred to the Committee on the Library, and other matter which might be appropriately referred to the Committee on Accounts. It being a public resolution upon a public calendar, the Chair would rule that after the bill is reported it is too late to raise the question of jurisdiction as to reference. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], and perhaps, too, the gentleman from Illinois, raises the point that the House may not by a resolution change the effect of existing law as it appears in the statutes, but the Chair would upon that point state that this would seem to be a question for the House to determine rather than the Chair. The Chair would therefore overrule the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I raise the question of consideration.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, does not that come too late?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand that the gentleman can raise the question of consideration at this time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The bill has not been read and has not been considered, but the question of a point of order has been considered, and this is the time when the question of consideration can be raised to this bill.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, we have already gone into the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MANN. I call the attention of the Chair upon that proposition to the fact that there was no motion made to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and——

Mr. FITZGERALD. That makes no difference, even if there was a motion——

Mr. MANN. And this is the only method——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Even if it was necessary to make a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union——

Mr. OLMSTED. Does the gentleman from Illinois contend that we are not properly in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

Mr. MANN. No; I do not. I contend we are properly in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, but there having been no opportunity to vote down a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, the House must now have an opportunity in the committee to determine whether or not it will consider the bill. It is a well-recognized principle of parliamentary law that every parliamentary body has the right to determine that it will or will not consider a measure if it sees fit to do so.

Mr. OLMSTED. But, if the gentleman will permit, when the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] called up the bill, then the question of consideration could have been raised.

Mr. MANN. Not at all.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Speaker has ruled that the House automatically goes into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. I call attention to this: If a motion was made to go into the Committee of the Whole to consider a bill on the Union Calendar, the practice has invariably been that the proper time to raise the question of consideration was when the bill was called up or moved for consideration in the House.

Mr. OLMSTED. Has not the bill been read the first time?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it has not.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman permit a question? Is there a single precedent where the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union has authority to determine the question of consideration?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; fifty precedents, and the Chair will get one in a minute, as soon as the gentleman at his right hand is able to locate it.

Mr. OLMSTED. One hundred Members constitute a quorum in the Committee of the Whole, and 51 might refuse for the House to consider the bill on that theory.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is true, but if Members wish to have bills considered in the Committee of the Whole they must stay here just as they should in the House.

Mr. OLMSTED. Might not the question of consideration have been raised before the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was appointed?

Mr. MANN. When was the opportunity?

Mr. OLMSTED. Right then.

Mr. MANN. Not at all.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. When the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] called it up for consideration.

Mr. MANN. He does not call it up to the House in any way except to call it to the attention of the Speaker, and the Speaker automatically orders the House into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union under the rule. The matter is not before the House until it goes to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] called the resolution up for consideration in the House.

Mr. MANN. He can not call it up for consideration in the House.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. He called it up for consideration, and, under the rule, it being on the Union Calendar, the House automatically resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. If it had been necessary to make a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole, then the question of consideration would have been determined by the House on voting whether it should go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, but the rule being automatic the question of consideration could have been raised in the same manner as if the bill were on the House Calendar by raising the question at the time the resolution was called up for consideration by the gentleman in charge of it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Speaker, when he announced his ruling that the House could automatically go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, made it impossible for any question to be raised. As soon as the bill is called up the Speaker declares the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. It has been the practice, when motions have been made to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider bills on the Union Calendar, to raise the question of consideration in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GAINES. The rule does not so apply.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is going to cite a ruling that a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is considered as determining the question of consideration. That is where the motion is made to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider a particular bill. It has been in order and it has been the practice for the House to resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider bills on the Union Calendar and bills on the Private Calendar. The only time the question of consideration can be raised under such circumstances is when the bill is called up.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Let me ask the gentleman what the House went into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for, except to consider this resolution? It was called to the attention of the Chair as being eligible to be called up on calendar day, and when the House went into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union it then entered upon the consideration of the resolution, and having gone into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union without objection, the Committee of the Whole House can not determine the question of consideration, because its only function is to consider the bill. It can not do any other business.

Mr. MANN. The opinion of the gentleman from Indiana is of great weight on any parliamentary proposition, but as long as he has been here and as long as he has lived and studied parliamentary law he has never seen a case where you raise the question of consideration when a bill was called up in the House which had to be considered in the Committee of the Whole prior to going into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I have never seen a case where the Committee of the Whole House has undertaken to assume jurisdiction to determine the question of consideration, because its duty, and its only duty, is to consider bills committed to it.

Mr. MANN. I have seen the question raised in Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] raised the question of consideration. As to whether this may be the proper time or not, the Chair rules that this is the first opportunity on which the question could be raised. As touching the question of the effect of the raising of the point of order and the discussion of that proposition, the Chair reads now from the Index of the Digest as follows:

> A point of order which, if sustained, might prevent the consideration of the bill should be made and decided before the question of consideration is put.

The question of consideration, therefore, can be now considered and the question is, Will the committee consider the resolution?

The question was taken, and the committee determined to consider the resolution.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I now ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill may be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS].

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, this resolution provides for the painting of the crayon portraits of ex-Speakers which today hang on the south wall of the corridor yonder. It provides that they shall be painted by artists selected by the Committee on the Library. More than one artist is to be selected to do the work, and the amount is limited to the total of $9,500, which shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House. There are 19 ex-Speakers whose portraits have not been painted. Two of them are still living—Mr. Carlisle and our colleague, General KEIFER. It is desirable, if these portraits are to be painted, that they be painted now, not only because of the ex-Speakers still living, but because of those who are not living there are still living relatives who can inform the artists of their characteristics.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. PARSONS. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. This is a resolution to paint the portraits of the Speakers whose portraits we have now in crayon?

Mr. PARSONS. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Is not the scope of the resolution to paint the portraits of a number of the Speakers enumerated in the resolution?

Mr. PARSONS. They are all enumerated in the resolution.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I hope the gentleman will read the list of Speakers whose portraits are to be painted.

Mr. MANN. It will be read by the Clerk.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. They are men from the North, the South, the East, and the West.

Mr. PARSONS. I will read the list if I may.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I think it will be well to read the names of those who are mentioned in the bill.

Mr. PARSONS. I decline to yield for the present. The ex-Speakers whose portraits are now in crayon and whose portraits will be painted are James K. Polk, of Tennessee; Howell Cobb, of Georgia; John W. Davis, of Indiana; J. WARREN KEIFER, of Ohio; Robert M. T. Hunter, of Virginia; John G. Carlisle, of Kentucky; John White, of Kentucky; Andrew Stevenson, of Virginia; M. C. Kerr, of Indiana; Lynn Boyd, of Kentucky; Philip Barbour, of Virginia; John Bell, of Tennessee; Schuyler Colfax, of Indiana; Jonathan Dayton, of New Jersey; J. W. Jones, of Virginia; J. L. Orr, of South Carolina; Langdon Cheves, of South Carolina; Nathaniel Macon, of North Carolina; and William Pennington, of New Jersey.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. In view of the situation with reference to the contingent fund, does not the gentleman think it would be wise to strike out of this resolution lines 10 and 11, which are the words, "Which sum shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives in payment thereof?"

Mr. PARSONS. Well, the appropriation bill for this year provides $75,000 for the contingent fund of the House, and it says for "miscellaneous items," and then other things. It seems to me that if the House passes this resolution, then this money can be paid out of that contingent fund under the head of "miscellaneous items."

Mr. MANN. Well, I will say to the gentleman that undoubtedly the auditor will have his attention called to this language of routine legislative work. Now, does the gentleman think that this is routine legislative work proposed to be paid for out of the contingent fund? He may find that it will not be done.

Mr. GAINES. What is the language of the statute the gentleman from New York read?

Mr. AUSTIN. I should like to ask the gentleman from New York how the artists are to be employed to do this work?

Mr. PARSONS. They are to be selected by the Committee on the Library.

Mr. AUSTIN. There are two former Speakers of this House from the State of Tennessee—James K. Polk and John Bell—who are affected by this resolution, and I should like to have the opportunity of submitting the names of some Tennessee artists.

Mr. PARSONS. I am not a member of the Committee on the Library, but I have no doubt they will have many names suggested to them, and I hope they will get the very best men obtainable.

Mr. GOULDEN. Does the gentleman think the appropriation of $9,500 is sufficient to pay for the painting of 19 portraits—$500 apiece?

Mr. PARSONS. The Committee on the Library are familiar with such questions, and I have no doubt they know what they are doing.

Mr. GOULDEN. I simply wanted to know whether the amount was considered sufficient.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. OLCOTT] five minutes.

Mr. OLCOTT. In reply to the question of my colleague [Mr. GOULDEN] I will say I think there will be no difficulty whatever in getting superior artists to do this particular work. I know it has been discussed in art circles, and the most distinguished of the portrait painters will consider it a high honor to be selected to paint any one of these portraits.

Mr. GOULDEN. I suppose they will also regard it as an advertisement.

Mr. OLCOTT. I have no doubt of that.

Mr. GOULDEN. As something that will add to their reputations as artists?

Mr. OLCOTT. I have no doubt of that. It seems to me none of us can look at the south wall of the lobby without being more afraid of the eyes that stare out upon us than we ever have been of the eye of the "arbitrary Speaker" who now rules this House.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I only want to say a word. This bill was reported by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL]. My recollection is that the Committee on the Library was practically unanimous in favor of it. As has been stated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. OLCOTT], the work of replacing the crayon portraits of the Speakers in the lobby of the House by oil portraits can be done by first-class artists for the amount specified in the resolution.

It seems to me there is no question about the propriety of repainting these crayon portraits. All the portraits of the Speakers ought to be in keeping one with the other, instead of being, as they are now, some in oil and some in crayon. Among the crayon portraits to be replaced by oil are those of such distinguished men as James K. Polk, former President of the United States as well as Speaker of the House, an adopted son of Tennessee, but a native of my own State of North Carolina; the portrait also of John G. Carlisle, of Kentucky; of Howell Cobb, of Georgia; and of many other distinguished men of the Republic.

Mr. GOULDEN. I should like to ask the gentleman why the committee did not make the appropriation in the regular way, as they do in all other cases with which I am familiar, and not make this a charge on the contingent fund, when serious doubt exists whether the committee have authority to do that? Why did they depart from the usual rule or custom?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. The chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL], who is absent, could answer the question better than I can. From recollection, I will say I think the idea was that this was a matter which affected the Hall or lobby of the House, the membership of the House, the former Speakers of the House, and therefore it was proper to make this appropriation from the contingent fund.

Mr. GOULDEN. As a member of the Committee on Accounts, I seriously question the right of the Committee on the Library to make an appropriation from the contingent fund.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] yield?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I understood the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. THOMAS] to take the floor in his own right.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I did take the floor in my own right, and I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of the resolution offered by the gentleman from South Dakota, and I feel that I would be derelict to my duty and to my constituency if I failed so to do.

I see the resolution provides for painting the portraits of three of Indiana's most distinguished sons—John S. Davis, Schuyler Colfax, and the Hon. Michael C. Kerr.

Mr. Chairman, I have the honor at this time of representing the district formerly represented by Mr. Kerr; unfortunately, however, for the district that it is not as ably represented to-day as it was then.

Mr. Kerr was born in 1826, of humble but splendid parents. They taught him early in life that spirit of independence and perseverance that always succeeds.

Long before he had reached the prime of life he was known and recognized as one of the greatest lawyers in the State of Indiana. A student, a thinker, and a worker, with these three traits of character fully developed nothing could prevent him from succeeding. He was elected to the Thirty-ninth, Fortieth, Forty-first, and Forty-second Congresses, and, although defeated for the Forty-third, he won a signal victory in the Forty-fourth Congress, and it was at the beginning of this Congress that he was elected Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. Chairman, the name of Mike Kerr is still synonymous with power and strength in the old Third Congressional District of Indiana. [Applause.] His name is a family word, revered and respected by all. Having reached the second highest place in the Nation when still in the full prime of life, had he lived but a few more years, in my opinion, he would have reached the Presidency of the United States, a place for which he was eminently qualified.

Mr. Kerr died as a result of arduous work. Regardless of his own health, and looking to doing and performing his duty, which he believed he owed the public, he went to an early grave, respected and honored by all who knew him. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, both Mr. Davis and Mr. Colfax were great men. Both have left their imprint upon the Nation's history. Both were molders of public opinion, and both played their part and played it well in shaping up the policies of this great Republic of ours, and therefore, Mr. Chairman, it is with deep and profound pleasure that I indorse this resolution. The last tariff bill removed the duty on art, to the end that this priceless treasure may come in free of duty, and I know of no better place to begin to beautify than the Speaker's hall, where to-day is displayed the paintings of some of the greatest men our country ever produced, and along by their side I want to see the portraits of Indiana's three favorite sons as a token of recognition of the proud place my native State has occupied in this great lawmaking body. [Applause.]

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to say anything further myself, but I will reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, anybody who has ever looked at the portraits hanging out in that lobby will appreciate the necessity of having some of them done over.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think the portraits in the lobby are any worse, on an average, than the statues in the hall of horrors? [Laughter.] Will this be followed by a proposition to do those over?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I decline to express my artistic views on that question until the question comes before the House. I am compelled to pass frequently in and out of the lobby of the House, and anybody with any artistic sense must be depressed at the thought that the portraits now there represent the highest and best expression of American art. So, I should willingly support a proper resolution to provide that these historic personages might be handed down to posterity in a manner becoming to men who occupied the high places which they did.

Under this resolution, however, it will not be possible to accomplish that very desirable end. I wish to incorporate into the RECORD the statute upon which I base that opinion. The act of February 14, 1892 (32 Stat. L., p. 36), provides:

> Hereafter appropriations made for contingent expenses of the House of Representatives or of the Senate shall not be used for the payment of personal services except upon express and specific authorization of the House and Senate in whose behalf such services are rendered. Nor shall such appropriations be used for any expense not intimately and directly connected with the routine legislative business of either House of Congress; and the accounting officers of the Treasury shall apply the provisions of this paragraph in the settlement of accounts of expenditures from said appropriations incurred for services or materials subsequent to the approval of this act.

No one will contend that painting in oil of these portraits of former Speakers is business intimately and directly connected with the routine legislative business of the House of Representatives. So this money, even if this resolution be passed, I think, can not be paid out of the contingent fund.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. PARSONS. At the Senate end of the Capitol there is a portrait of Senator Allison. Was not that paid for out of the contingent fund of the Senate?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know.

Mr. PARSONS. There was no other appropriation for the payment of it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am informed by a member of the Committee on Accounts that in the last Congress a resolution was passed by the House providing that certain gentlemen who had been connected with the Committee on Ways and Means in the collection of information to enable that committee to undertake the preparation of a tariff bill were authorized to receive certain compensation for their services to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, and the officers of the Treasury, construing this statute, refused to pass these accounts or to permit the payment——

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. If the gentleman will excuse the interruption, the disbursing officer of the House, guided by a decision rendered by Judge Lawrence, Comptroller of the Treasury, decided that such a resolution as that could not extend beyond the term of Congress, and therefore decided not to pay for the services that were rendered after Congress had adjourned.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And they subsequently were provided for in an appropriation bill. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, in the face of the express statute that no expenses can be paid out of the contingent fund except for business intimately and directly connected with the routine legislative work of the House, that it is absurd for this House to pass a resolution providing for the payment of services of artists in painting these portraits. It seems to me that if we desire to have these portraits painted provision should be made in a proper manner and in a manner that would not result in the artists being unable to obtain their money after they had finished their work. The passage of this resolution confers no power on the Committee on the Library to have any money paid to anyone, and it simply will mislead men who in good faith may render the services asked. It is so easy to have a proper resolution or bill reported providing for the payment of these services that it seems to me the committee ought not to ask the House to pass this particular resolution.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. SULZER. Does this bill provide what artists shall paint these portraits?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No.

Mr. SULZER. How are they to be selected?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Committee on the Library is authorized to select the artists.

Mr. SULZER. How will these artists be paid? Who will pay them?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are to be paid out of the contingent fund.

Mr. SULZER. Whatever is agreed on by the Committee on the Library?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The limit is $9,500.

Mr. SULZER. For how many portraits?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Nineteen.

Mr. SULZER. That is a pretty cheap price, it seems to me, for good work by well-known and experienced portrait painters.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, we have taken the duty off art, and this is one illustration, I suppose, of prices not increasing as a result of the removal of the duty in the recent tariff act. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. SULZER. It is not intended, I hope, to have artists from foreign countries paint these portraits.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the American artists can not do any better in oil than those who have made the crayon portraits have done in crayon, then I shall be compelled to advocate the employment of some other artists than those of home production.

Mr. SULZER. Well, I think there are better artists in the United States now than in those days.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have no doubt about that. I am quite convinced that my colleague and myself can supply artists who, for a very moderate compensation, would be willing to adorn the lobby with the portraits of former Speakers that would be a delight to the Members and a credit to the country. I simply desire, Mr. Chairman, to call attention to this statute, because I feel that in the face of it it is futile to pass this resolution.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I do not think this statute applies. The language of this statute is as follows:

> For the payment of "personal services" except upon the express and specific authorization of the House or Senate in whose behalf such services are rendered.

That is distinct and specific, specifically applicable only to personal services. Now, the statute goes on as follows:

> Nor shall such appropriations be used for any expenses not intimately and directly connected with the routine legislative business of either House of Congress.

"Such appropriations" shall be used only for such things as are intimately and directly connected with either branch of Congress, but "such appropriations" refers back to personal services; that is to say, you can not have from the Committee on Accounts a resolution to pay a clerk or a messenger or anything else which is not intimately and directly connected with the business of the House, but that is not conclusive of the right and the power of the House of Representatives to appropriate money from its contingent fund to paint the portraits of Speakers or to do anything else that the House of Representatives thinks right and proper.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the statement of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. THOMAS] and the reasoning of the gentleman is hardly borne out by the provisions of the law. In the legislative appropriation act for 1902 there is found this provision:

> For miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor, $20,000.

That is an appropriation, and here is a legislative provision attached to it:

> Provided, That hereafter appropriations made for contingent expenses of the House of Representatives or the Senate shall not be used for the payment of personal services except upon the express and specific authorization of the House or Senate in whose behalf such services are rendered.

Mr. PARSONS. Under that provision——

Mr. MANN. Let me read it——

Mr. PARSONS. No; under that provision——

Mr. MANN. Oh, I am like the gentleman himself was a while ago when he declined to yield. I will yield when I read this:

> Nor shall such appropriations be used—

And that refers to appropriations for contingent expenses, and it took the fanciful imagination of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. THOMAS] to make it read in any other way—

> Nor shall such appropriations be used for any expenses not intimately and directly connected with the routine legislative business of either House of Congress, and the accounting officers of the Treasury shall apply the provisions of this paragraph in the settlement of accounts of expenditures from said appropriations incurred for services or materials subsequent to the approval of this act.

Now I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS].

Mr. PARSONS. Under that paragraph, is not the law in two parts, one in regard to payment for services and the other in regard to payment for expenses? Now, the painting of these portraits will be personal services, and under the first clause in the paragraph they can be paid for out of the contingent fund of the House if the House authorizes it.

Mr. MANN. Oh, not at all. This is a payment for material, not personal services; a payment for oil paintings.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is not familiar with how the contingent fund is used. It is used to pay personal services, and it is used for the purpose of obtaining certain things essential to the transaction of the business of the House. Whenever personal services are to be paid for, it requires a direct order of the House, but certain other materials can be purchased by certain officers of the House without an order of the House.

Mr. MANN. But the limitation for what purpose this money can be expended applies to every kind of expenditure, personal or otherwise. It is, first, the personal services can only be paid upon express authorization of the House, and then the provision—

Nor shall such appropriations be used for any expenses not intimately and directly connected with the routine legislative business of the House—

And so forth.

If the gentleman from New York or anyone else can draw language more specific than that, I will take off my hat, and everybody else in the House will do the same.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 163.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library of the House of Representatives is hereby authorized and directed to employ artists of reputation and ability to paint 17 oil portraits of the following ex-Speakers of the House of Representatives, to be substituted for the crayon portraits which are now hanging in the lobby of the House of Representatives; and the sum of $8,500 is hereby appropriated out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives in payment therefor: J. K. Polk, Tennessee, Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth Congresses; Howell Cobb, Georgia, Thirty-first Congress; John W. Davis, Indiana, Twenty-ninth Congress; J. WARREN KEIFER, Ohio; Robert M. T. Hunter, Virginia; John G. Carlisle, Kentucky; John White, Kentucky, Twenty-seventh Congress; Andrew Stevenson, Virginia, Twentieth, Twenty-first, Twenty-second, and Twenty-third Congresses; M. C. Kerr, Indiana; Lynn Boyd, Kentucky, Thirty-second and Thirty-third Congresses; Philip Barbour, Virginia; John Bell, Tennessee, Twenty-third Congress; Schuyler Colfax, Indiana, Thirty-eighth, Thirty-ninth, and Fortieth Congresses; Jonathan Dayton, New Jersey, Fourth and Fifth Congresses; J. W. Jones, Virginia, Twenty-eighth Congress; J. L. Orr, South Carolina, Thirty-fifth Congress; Langdon Cheeves, South Carolina, second session Thirteenth Congress.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

In line 5 of page 1 strike out the word "portraits" and insert in place thereof the words "or other portraits not in oil;" in lines 7 and 8 of the same page strike out the words "and the sum of $8,500 is hereby appropriated" and insert in place thereof the words "at a total cost of $9,500, which sum shall be paid;" in line 9 of page 2, after the word "Congress," add the words "Nathaniel Macon, Seventh, Eighth, and Ninth Congresses; William Pennington, Thirty-sixth Congress."

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the bill by striking out the word "ex-Speakers" and insert in lieu thereof the words "former Speakers." I make this motion in the interest of better expression.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, let the committee amendments be disposed of first.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The question was taken, and the committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: In line 3, page 1, strike out the word "seventeen" and insert the word "nineteen."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAYTON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "ex-Speakers," line 4, page 1, because that hyphenated word is an indefensible vulgarism, and I move to insert in lieu thereof the words "former Speakers," in order that we may improve the English of the bill. I do not think this House ought to embody into legislation a bad or inaccurate expression, and I think the term "former Speakers" is better than "ex-Speakers."

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. There is no objection, Mr. Chairman, to the amendment that is suggested.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in lines 9, 10, and 11, the words:

Which sum shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives in payment therefor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 1, lines 9, 10, and 11, strike out the following words: "Which sum shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives in payment therefor."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment. The noes seem to have it——

Mr. PARSONS. What is the effect of that amendment?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, was that question put to the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Chairman will repeat the amendment. The question is on the——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, just a moment. I had the floor and had not yielded the floor. The gentleman from New York was asking me a question. I now yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS].

Mr. PARSONS. I asked what the effect would be of the amendment which the gentleman from Illinois has offered striking out the words in lines 9, 10, and 11:

Which sum shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives in payment therefor.

Mr. MANN. The effect would be, so far as the House action is concerned, to authorize the Committee on the Library to employ somebody to make these paintings. Whether it would be sufficient authority to make in order an item on an appropriation bill I do not undertake to say.

But I apprehend that the Committee on Appropriations would take it as a direction from the House and include some item, possibly not the entire amount at one time, in the appropriation bill. It is perfectly patent that this money will never be paid out of the existing contingent fund of the House. The gentleman will readily admit that these 19 oil portraits will not be made during the current fiscal year. Now, as it reads it is also perfectly patent, I think, that it can not be paid at all, because it is not for routine work of the House; it is not connected with the legislative work of the House; and the auditor will refuse to pay. But we will be in this position: The Committee on the Library will go ahead and engage some artist to make these paintings. It is doubtful whether they will be able to obtain information or a ruling upon the subject until the bill is presented for payment, and then the gentlemen may be in the position of having, without any authority of law whatever, employed some artist to do some work for the House of Representatives and taking their chances on having the House pay the bill without authority of law and perhaps be required to pay it out of their own personal funds.

Mr. PARSONS. Would not there be just as much authority of law as there would be if your amendment was adopted?

Mr. MANN. There would be except for this, that if the amendment I have suggested is adopted it becomes practically a direction to the Committee on Appropriations to include in the sundry civil appropriation bill or the deficiency appropriation bill an item of expenditure for this purpose, and when that money is appropriated no question can arise in regard to its expenditure, and the only question that can arise will be, if the Committee on Appropriations reports such an item, as to whether it is in order if some one raises the point of order.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would ask the gentleman if the House does not frequently appropriate money out of the contingent fund to pay the funeral expenses, and a sum of money equal to six months' salary, of employees who die while they are in the employ of the House?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Now, under what authority does the House do that if they can not pay for the purposes for which this resolution provides?

Mr. MANN. That is a part of the compensation of the employees of the House, and plainly connected with the routine legislative work of the House.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, it is not a part of their compensation. It is a mere gratuity—six months' salary to some person not in the employ of the House, but related to some person who was at some time employed in the House.

Mr. MANN. It is treated as a part of the compensation of the employees, and is well understood to be a part of the contract of employment. If any employee of the House dies, funeral expenses are paid, and his dependent people obtain six months' salary, and that is the only justification of it, either in morals or law.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If the gentleman will permit me, it seems to me that if the House is authorized to pay money for funeral expenses and permits the salary of an employee for six months after his death to be paid to his dependents, or the expenses of a committee of the House which may attend a funeral, that certainly it would have authority to pay out of the contingent fund for painting the portrait of a Member of this House as well as some who are not now Members, but were at some former time.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that the House pays the funeral expenses of a committee of the House to attend the funeral of some man who was a Member of the House years ago and not now a Member of the House?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If he had a funeral perhaps they might do so.

Mr. MANN. Perhaps they might pass a resolution, but they would not get the money out of the contingent fund, because the account would not be audited. However, if the gentleman is satisfied with the resolution in its present shape, I shall not quarrel about it, because I doubt the expediency of painting the portraits, and I am very sure they will never be painted under this resolution unless they are paid for by the Committee on the Library.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Do I understand the gentleman from Illinois to draw this distinction: That this resolution provides not for the hiring of men to perform a certain duty for which they will be paid for their services, but that it provides for the purchase of materials for the furnishment of the corridors of this House?

Mr. MANN. I do not know such distinction, because it does not make any difference which it is. It can only be paid in connection with the ordinary routine legislative business of the House.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I understood the gentleman to say, in connection with the reading of the statute, that if it were for the payment of personal services, the resolution would be in order.

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman misunderstood me, because I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Would the gentleman still hold that if the resolution specifically provided for the payment of services rendered in connection with the decoration of this House or the painting of this House that it would be out of order and improper to pay for it out of the contingent fund of the House?

Mr. MANN. Why, I think the House does not pay anything of that sort out of the contingent fund of the House, and has no authority to pay it out of that fund. Doubtless the House can employ an artist as one of its officials to do anything, and pay the salary of the artist out of the contingent fund of the House. They can call him a "janitor" or a "sweeper," or, possibly, an "artist;" I do not know; but that is not the proposition.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Well, I want to lead up to it, if the gentleman will allow me.

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. If the House has power to employ an artist permanently, it has power to employ him temporarily for the purpose indicated. If the House has power to employ an artist for decoration, and he decorates the corridors——

Mr. MANN. But it has not the power to employ an artist to decorate the House. The House can not do that out of the contingent fund. The House would make an appropriation in the sundry civil appropriation bill for that very reason—because this item can not be paid for out of the contingent fund of the House—and it was for the reason that there had been some things paid out of the contingent fund of the House that this provision was put in the law of 1892.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. But I understand that the gentleman states that the House may employ an artist and give him whatever title it sees fit.

Mr. MANN. It may elect an artist to Congress, for aught I know. I do not know whether it has, unless the gentleman from Pennsylvania is one.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I am sure they elected one in the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Or if the gentleman is not an artist, he would make a good model for an artist to paint a handsome gentleman. [Cries of "Ah!"]

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina will state his point of order.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Is the gentleman from Illinois to be recognized for five minutes? Is that the parliamentary status?

The CHAIRMAN. His time was extended for a further period of five minutes, of which one minute remains.

Mr. COX of Indiana. As I understand the gentleman from Illinois, his motion was made for the purpose of strengthening the resolution.

Mr. MANN. That is the purpose.

Mr. COX of Indiana. And the gentleman believes that passing the amendment will not involve the passing of the resolution and will justify the committee in going ahead and having this painting done?

Mr. MANN. It will justify putting an appropriation on an appropriation bill for that purpose.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question.

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I wish to ask the gentleman if he has any doubt in his mind if this resolution passes in the terms in which it is now but what the portraits will be painted and fully paid for?

Mr. MANN. I think they will never be either painted nor paid for under this resolution. It may be done. Some future Congress may pay for it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill whether provision has been made for painting the portraits of two distinguished former Speakers of the House that came from the State of Pennsylvania, one Galusha A. Grow and the other from my own district, Samuel J. Randall. I do not find their names in this resolution.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, Speaker Galusha A. Grow was not included, because his portrait is already painted in oil.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The portrait is already in oil?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Yes; and so is the portrait of Speaker Randall, of Pennsylvania.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, striking out the appropriation from the resolution, will not be adopted. The question in regard to whether the accounting officers of the Treasury will order paid the money for the purpose of painting the portraits of the former Speakers now in crayon the accounting officers may decide hereafter. The question now is this: The resolution having been reported by the Committee on the Library, the Committee on the Library having jurisdiction, does the House want the crayon portraits replaced by oil paintings or not? If the House does so vote and this resolution is adopted, I believe with the gentleman from South Dakota that the resolution will have the force and effect of law; and the will of the House being so expressed, the painting of these portraits will be an accomplished fact. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 1, in lines 9 and 10, strike out the words "which sum shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives in payment therefor."

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am in favor of this amendment. I am not opposed to the resolution, or to the proposition contained in it, when properly presented. I notice in the list of names of ex-Speakers whose oil portraits are to be painted is that distinguished son of Georgia, Howell Cobb, who was at one time Secretary of the Treasury and at another time Speaker of this House.

But as a member of the Committee on Accounts of this House, which committee is charged with the duty of presenting resolutions for the payment of necessary expenses of the House out of the contingent fund, and being somewhat familiar with the law upon this subject, I do not believe that this resolution, if passed in the shape that it is, would be effective, or that the portraits would be painted.

Repeatedly since the expenditures of the Government became more than its revenues we have been told that there are many things of which the House stands in need, which can not be appropriated for out of the contingent fund because of the necessity for economy. There is no necessity to encroach upon the contingent fund in order to pay for the painting of these portraits. If the House determines that it is necessary, let the House have the manhood to say so and pass the resolution in the proper shape, and pay the money as it pays all other items of appropriations—in the way authorized by law and in accordance with the rules.

I have simply made this statement with a view to calling the attention of the House to the condition of the contingent fund and the necessity for protecting that fund in order to carry on the business of the House; and it is a bad precedent to establish, if gentlemen who desire appropriations can not get them in the regular way, to invade the contingent fund of the House, which fund is by law set apart for the House to do certain things for its own convenience and in the transaction of the public business. It is a bad precedent to pass a resolution like this, to pay for work like this out of the contingent fund. Let it be paid for as it should be paid for—out of the general fund of the United States.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I wish to be heard on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois. It is manifestly for the express purpose of defeating this resolution. What has transpired here? First, the gentleman from Illinois raised the question of reference. Then he raised the question of consideration. Now he is concerned for fear, if we pass the resolution, the artists employed by the Committee on the Library can not be paid. It seems to me it must be apparent to every Member of this House that the purpose of this amendment is to defeat the resolution and not to correct it. I hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois will not prevail, and I think I can say there is no doubt that if the resolution does pass in its present form this work will not only be done, but it will be paid for out of the contingent fund of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 8 and 9, page 1, strike out "at a total cost of" and insert in line 9, before the word "nine," the words "who shall be paid not exceeding," and after the word "dollars," in the same line, insert "for such services."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let it be reported so that it will read as amended.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I ask that the amendment be reported as it will read if adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library of the House of Representatives is hereby authorized and directed to employ artists of reputation and ability to paint 17 oil portraits of the following ex-Speakers of the House of Representatives, to be substituted for the crayon or other portraits not in oil which are now hanging in the lobby of the House of Representatives, who shall be paid not exceeding $9,500 for such services.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The objection of the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from New York seems to me to be a very meritorious one. I do not think there is a gentleman in this body who is not in favor of the purpose of this resolution, but there is a very serious question as to whether or not its purpose will be effected by the passage of the resolution in its present form. That being the case, I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the modification suggested in my amendment will enable the disbursing officer of the House and the accounting officers of the Treasury to pay out this money without any question whatever.

The objection of the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Illinois is substantially this—that under the act of 1892 this money could not be paid out if it is in the nature of an expenditure for supplies or the purchase of anything but personal service. The gentleman from Illinois admitted very properly that the House of Representatives could employ artists for any purpose and give them any designation or title it deems proper.

The purpose of the resolution as reported by the Library Committee provides upon its face virtually for the purchase of 17 oil paintings. It is true that in the third line of the resolution the words "employ artists" appears, but in a subsequent line of the resolution pertaining to the hanging of the portraits it provides for an appropriation to defray the cost of the portraits, not to pay for the services. Now, the gentleman from Illinois has properly drawn the distinction that we may appropriate and pay out the money for the services, but not for the purchase of paintings. My amendment provides that the House of Representatives may employ artists for the specific purpose, as its own servants, and pay for their services, not for the purpose of purchasing the portraits, but to pay for the services of the men, and that the money shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, over which we have control. If that amendment is adopted there can not be any question but that the accounting officers of the Treasury will pay it. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from South Dakota to the fact that in line 12 the name of Langdon Cheves, of South Carolina, is not spelled right, and if we are going to have markers on these portraits, as I suppose they will, the name ought to be spelled correctly.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. What is the correction?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. One of the e's in Cheeves should be stricken out. It ought to be Cheves instead of Cheeves. Mr. Chairman, I offer that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment.

SEC. 2. That the original crayon portraits shall be offered to the States from which the respective Speakers were elected.

I do not think there can be any possible objection to that.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I think that might be done under another resolution.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is a matter for some subsequent Congress to dispose of after this work has been done.

Mr. AUSTIN. But it may require considerable effort to get it through.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Oh, I think there will be no trouble about that. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the resolution with amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the resolution as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee determined to rise; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WASHBURN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration House resolution 163, providing for the painting of certain portraits of former Speakers of the House, had agreed to certain amendments, and instructed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the resolution as amended do pass.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution and amendments to its final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there a demand for a separate vote on any amendment?

There was no demand for a separate vote.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BURKE of South Dakota, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MONUMENT TO BRIG. GEN. JAMES SHIELDS.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the bill (H. R. 11580) for the erection of a monument over the grave of Brig. Gen. James Shields, in St. Mary's Cemetery, Carrollton, Mo.

The SPEAKER. This bill being on the Union Calendar, the House will resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. PEARRE in the chair.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I object. Let us hear the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana objects. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a suitable monument to be erected over the grave of Brig. Gen. James Shields in St. Mary's Cemetery, at Carrollton, Mo.; and for this purpose the sum of $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

With the following amendment:

Strike out all after the word "Missouri" and insert "not to exceed in cost the sum of $3,000."

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER].

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I want to say very briefly that the bill now under consideration authorizes the Secretary of War to cause to be erected a monument at the grave of General Shields, in St. Mary's Cemetery, in the city of Carrollton, Mo., at a cost of not to exceed $3,000. General Shields was a hero in two wars and stands alone in enjoying the unique distinction among all of the statesmen of this country of having been the only man to represent three different States of the Federal Union in the Senate of the United States. He died many years ago in the city of Carrollton a very poor man. His remains now lie in St. Mary's Cemetery, in that city, in an unmarked grave. This is enough.

Realizing that the House does not want to be detained, I shall not take any further time. I sincerely hope the measure will pass without discussion or delay.

Mr. COX of Indiana. In what wars did he participate?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. In the Mexican and in the civil war.

Mr. COX of Indiana. And what States did he represent in the United States Senate?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. The States of Illinois, Minnesota, and Missouri.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. General Shields's statute is now in Statuary Hall, is it not?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Placed there by the State of Illinois?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. How long did General Shields reside in the State of Missouri?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I am not prepared to answer that question.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. When did he represent that State in the Senate?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will state that he was sworn in on the 24th day of January, 1873, and served until the 3d of March of that year.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. He served a very short time from that State.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. He served thirty-nine days as the Senator from the State of Missouri, six years from Illinois, and two years from Minnesota.

Mr. KEIFER. Was he not a doorkeeper or Sergeant-at-Arms of this House or the Senate after he was a Senator?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. That might be; I do not know.

Mr. KEIFER. He was one or the other after he was Senator.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY].

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, the State of Kansas feels a joint interest with the State of Missouri in the erection of a monument to General Shields. The movement to put up this monument to his memory originated with a few of his old comrades in arms who live in the city of Topeka, Kans. Some of those men happened to be in Missouri at the town of Carrollton and found that this old hero was sleeping in an unmarked grave. They asked me if I would introduce a bill to appropriate money to erect for him a suitable monument. I did so in the last Congress. I found that my colleague, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER], was also interested in the matter, and as the burial place of General Shields is in his district I have supported his bill and am cooperating with him in the passage of this legislation.

I want to say that General Shields possesses a truly remarkable military history. He is the only Union general who has to his credit the record of defeating the celebrated confederate general, Stonewall Jackson, in battle, and I want to say that I believe if General Shields had been continued in the command of the Union Army in the Shenandoah Valley in the early stages of the civil war, he would have been——

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman where he finds authority for such history as that. I do not believe any man on earth ever defeated Stonewall Jackson. [Laughter.] Dig up the history, I want to see it.

Mr. ANTHONY. I regret that the gentleman from Arkansas is not well posted in American military history.

Mr. MACON. I would like to have the gentleman point out the history that teaches that Stonewall Jackson was ever defeated in battle by anyone.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is true, nevertheless. And I want to say that I do not detract one word from the great military record of Stonewall Jackson in making the remarks that I did. [Applause.]

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill be read for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a suitable monument to be erected over the grave of Brigadier-General James Shields in St. Mary's Cemetery, at Carrollton, Mo.; and for this purpose the sum of $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out all after the word "Missouri" and insert in place thereof the words "not to exceed in cost the sum of $3,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise, and that the chairman be authorized to make a favorable report to the House upon the bill and the amendment thereto.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PEARRE reported that the committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 11580 and had directed him to report the bill with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BURKE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE ON PRINTING.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the next committee

When the Committee on Printing was called,

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I call up Senate concurrent resolution No. 23, and ask unanimous consent that the same may be considered in the House——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls up the following Senate concurrent resolution, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 23, providing for the printing of the proceedings relative to the acceptance of the statue of George Laird Shoup from the State of Idaho.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this resolution may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the Senate joint resolution may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk will report the concurrent resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 23.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound in one volume 16,500 copies of the proceedings in Congress upon the acceptance of the statue of the late George Laird Shoup, of which 5,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 10,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and the remaining 1,500 shall be for use and distribution by the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Idaho.

The Joint Committee on Printing is hereby authorized to have the copy prepared for the Public Printer, who shall procure a suitable copper-process plate of the statue to be bound with these memorials.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I notice the resolution reads "Senators and Representatives in Congress." I suppose it would be fair for the House to take official notice of the fact that there is only one Representative from the State of Idaho.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. I had not observed that. There is only one Representative from the State of Idaho, while there are two Senators. There is no objection to an amendment.

Mr. MANN. Then, I move to strike out the letter "s" in the word "Representatives," in line 9, at the end of the word.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 9, strike out the final "s" in the word "Representatives."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. There is no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the next committee.

When the Joint Select Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers was called,

Mr. BATES. Mr. Speaker, I ask that House Calendar reports Nos. 3, 5, 13, 138, and 205 be stricken from the calendar and laid upon the table. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that the reports have been carried out in a bill from the committee and no action of the House is necessary.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, the Chair takes it, asks unanimous consent that the reports referred to by him be laid upon the table. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the next committee.

When the Committee on the Judiciary was called,

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I call from the Union Calendar, calendar No. 29, Senate bill 821, to provide for the appointment of an additional judge in and for the district of Maryland.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey calls up the bill the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 821) to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the district of Maryland.

Mr. PARKER. And, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the first paragraph of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States shall appoint an additional district judge for the district of Maryland, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall reside in said district and shall possess the same qualifications and have the same power and jurisdiction now prescribed by law in respect to the present district judge therein.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I quite agree with the gentleman in charge of the bill and others about the desirability of passing this bill, but I remember a few years ago we passed a bill identical to this in relation to the southern district of Ohio, and the statement was then made and incorporated in the law that if we provided for an additional new judge that when the then judge upon the bench deceased there would be a vacancy not to be filled. I notice also that the distinguished Committee on the Judiciary, which gave that assurance at that time, just as soon as they learned of the death of the former judge in Ohio reported in a bill to create an additional judge to take his place.

I would like to know if the gentleman can give us any idea whether the same course is to be pursued in reference to this Maryland judge. I am informed that, while this bill is a proper bill, there is no occasion for two judges in Maryland fully capacitated and qualified.

Mr. PARKER. The answer is very easy. If the business in Maryland remains as it is there will be no need for any extra judge. If it grows as Ohio has grown, there may be in the future such a need. However, it is not so now.

Mr. MANN. Let me ask the gentleman, Is the business in the southern district of Ohio more than it was when we passed that bill before?

Mr. PARKER. I so understand it.

Mr. MANN. And it is very evident that the moment we provided another judge there, and had two judges, that the two were unable to transact as much business as one judge did before.

Mr. PARKER. I protest against the discussion of the Ohio case now. It has nothing to do with this.

Mr. MANN. It has a good deal to do with the case. The gentleman can make the point of order if he wants to do so.

Mr. PARKER. I do not make a point of order against the gentleman from Illinois. That is his prerogative.

Mr. MANN. We will let the Chair decide that matter.

When the gentleman brings these propositions before the House, if they intend to create an additional judge there ought to be that intention expressed in the bill.

Mr. PARKER. It is not the intention to create an additional judge.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman, the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, that it will not be two weeks before he will bring in a bill if the judge should retire.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That no vacancy in the office of the existing district judge of said district of Maryland shall be filled by appointment, and in case of such vacancy there shall be thereafter one district judge only for said district.

SEC. 3. That the present district judge in said district and the one appointed under this act shall agree between themselves upon the division of business and assignment of cases for trial in said district: Provided, however, That in case the said two district judges do not agree the senior circuit judge of the fourth circuit shall make all necessary orders for the division of business and the assignment of cases for trial in said district.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to elicit some information.

Mr. PARKER. I do not think there is need to say anything more about this. Judge Morris, of Maryland, is now very old. He is able to retire, and he would have his full salary after retirement. He is willing to remain on the bench in order to aid the new judge by going on with his duties. He is not able to do the whole work of the district, for, although he is 73, he is not able to do extra work at night. There is no loss to the United States by appointing a new judge and allowing this judge, who is one of the most respected men on the bench of the United States, to continue his duties.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PARKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the addition of this new judge create any additional charge upon the Treasury?

Mr. PARKER. None whatever, because he would have to retire and would take $10,000 for his retired salary.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will it not be a fact that they will both be serving at the same time?

Mr. PARKER. He takes his salary as a retired judge.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Why did he not retire? The gentleman has no doubt, has he, but that one judge is abundantly able to handle all the business in the State of Maryland?

Mr. PARKER. None whatever.

Mr. COX of Indiana. And it is the intention of the committee to only create one judge?

Mr. PARKER. That is all. As soon as he retires there will only be one judge.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGES IN OHIO.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 1043) providing for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the northern district of the State of Ohio and the southern district of Ohio, and I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The title was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 1043) providing for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the northern judicial district of the State of Ohio.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard. Under the rule, the House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GAINES] will take the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Senate bill 1043, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1043) providing for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the northern judicial district of the State of Ohio.

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be in the northern judicial district of the State of Ohio an additional district judge, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall possess the same qualifications and have the same power and jurisdiction and whose term of office and compensation shall be the same as now prescribed by law in respect to the present district judge therein.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Amend the title of the bill by inserting after the word "northern" the words "and southern," and add the letter "s" to the end of the word "district."

In line 4, after the word "judge," insert the following: "and there shall be in the southern judicial district of the said State an additional district judge."

In line 4 strike out the word "who" and insert "each."

In line 6, after the word "and," strike out the word "who" and insert "they."

In line 7 strike out the word "whose" and insert "their."

In line 9, after the word "to," strike out the word "the" and insert "any."

At the end of section 1 add the following:

"SEC. 2. That section 2 of an act to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the southern district of the State of Ohio, approved February 25, 1907, be, and the same is hereby, repealed."

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have read in my time a letter that I hold in my hand from the Department of Justice. It is very short.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, February 16, 1910.

Hon. RICHARD WAYNE PARKER, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I desire to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 15th instant, inclosing a copy of S. 1043, as amended in the House of Representatives. The bill as amended creates an additional district judge in the southern judicial district of Ohio, as well as an additional district judge in the northern judicial district of Ohio, as originally provided.

It is advisable that the bill should be thus amended. The business of the northern district during the last year has been such that it has only been accomplished with the aid of judges called in from other districts, and the southern district has for several years had the services of an additional judge, as provided by the act of February 27, 1907.

By the recent death of Judge Thompson the southern district is left with only one judge, and it is important that some permanent provision should be made to relieve the situation.

I would respectfully suggest that the title of the bill should be amended so as to read: "An act providing for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the northern judicial district of the State of Ohio, and an additional district judge in and for the southern judicial district of the State of Ohio."

Very respectfully,

WADE H. ELLIS,
Acting Attorney-General.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I now yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, a member of the committee.

Mr. GOEBEL. Mr. Chairman, several weeks ago the Senate passed a bill granting an additional judge for the northern judicial district of Ohio. There were then pending in the House several bills providing for an additional judge for the southern district of Ohio. The Judiciary Committee having before it the several bills, and having heard the parties interested in the matter, unanimously agreed that each of the districts is entitled to an additional judge. So the Committee on the Judiciary amended the Senate bill and provided for an additional judge for the southern district. The bill now before the committee, therefore, provides for an additional judge for the northern and an additional judge for the southern judicial district of Ohio.

Ohio has now a population of 5,000,000. It has but two judicial districts. Up to the present time the northern district had but one judge. In 1907 Congress gave to the southern district an additional judge. While this matter was pending before the Judiciary Committee Judge Thompson, of the southern district, departed this life; so that to-day the southern district has but one judge. The northern district comprises about 40 counties and the southern district 48 counties. The judge of the northern district resides at Cleveland. Judge Thompson, when a judge of the southern district, resided at Cincinnati, Ohio. The present judge for the southern district resides at Columbus, Ohio. In the southern district, with which I am more familiar, we have a population of nearly 2,500,000. Seven terms of court are provided for by law, which must be held by the judge or judges in the southern district.

Speaking from personal knowledge, I can say that Judge Thompson was a very efficient judge, and did his best to keep up with the docket of that court. Finally his health gave way, and by reason of that he was not as active probably during the last few months as he had been before that time. The condition of that docket and the amount of litigation constantly arising is such that it requires the services of two judges. It is absolutely essential in the interest of litigants and in the interest of the public that there should be a judge residing in the city of Cincinnati. We have alone a population of over 400,000. The business of that court has largely increased by reason of the many acts passed by Congress during the past four years.

This bill is not alone recommended by the Attorney-General, but is recommended by the judge of the northern district, by the district attorney, and by a judge of the circuit court of appeals. I want to emphasize the fact, and speaking as I do from personal knowledge, that conditions are such as to warrant and justify an additional judge for the northern as well as the southern district.

Something has been said by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to the effect that in 1907 there were statements made in this House that if an additional judge was given to the southern district, a vacancy that may subsequently occur should not be filled. I have no recollection of any such statements being made. I do not think they were made. Assuming that such statements were made, the reason for an additional judge then applies with equal force now; remember we have but one judge. The docket has very materially increased since 1907, and it is physically impossible for one judge to do the work and also hold seven terms, which are required by law. I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How many district judges have you now in the State of Ohio?

Mr. GOEBEL. Two.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will this bill give you two additional?

Mr. GOEBEL. This bill will give to the northern district one additional judge and to the southern district one additional judge.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Then you will have four district judges in Ohio?

Mr. GOEBEL. We will have four district judges, two in each district.

Mr. PARKER. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I want to say a few words about this bill. I will only occupy a few minutes.

It may be that there is need for four United States district judges in the State of Ohio. Representatives from that State and men who are engaged in the administration of justice there know much better about it than I do.

The State of Indiana borders on the State of Ohio on the west. It is not quite as large as Ohio. It is two-thirds as large in point of population. Business, social, and industrial conditions in the two States are very similar.

The State of Indiana, with nearly 3,000,000 population, has only one United States district judge, and that judge transacts all of the business in the State and finds time to go over to the city of Chicago, and, perhaps, once in a while down to Cincinnati, to assist in the discharge of work there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does not the gentleman think it would be a good idea to appoint two Indianians to be district judges in Ohio? [Laughter.]

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is the effect of my observation. I do not know whether it is the fault of the judges, or whether it is because of the tendency of the residents of Ohio to be litigious.

Mr. KEIFER. Is the gentleman able to state the number of times and the number of days that United States judges from other districts have gone to Indianapolis and held court there?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Rarely, if ever, does a judge come from another State to hold federal court in Indiana, but the United States circuit judge for our circuit, who was appointed from the State of Indiana, spends practically all of his time in the city of Chicago.

Mr. KEIFER. That is where he is required to go, of course.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Our district judge holds both district court and circuit court, and he has time to spare, and spends two or three months in the northern woods every summer fishing, and he keeps up his calendar.

Mr. KEIFER. I should like to have the gentleman state a single day when the Indiana district judge has held court in Cincinnati.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I am not prepared to give any particular instance.

Mr. KEIFER. Or at any other place in Ohio.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not know whether he ever went to Cincinnati or not. I know our district judge presided over the famous Walsh criminal prosecution in the city of Chicago, and he frequently goes over there to handle important cases in the federal courts in that great city.

Mr. COX of Indiana. And he presided over the final Standard Oil case, did he not?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. On the second trial of the famous Standard Oil case he was the presiding judge, and he presided in the prosecution of John R. Walsh in Chicago. He keeps up the business in the federal court in our great State without any difficulty at all. Now, I am unable to understand the reasons for such a radical difference in the conditions in the two States, as to make four federal judges necessary in the State of Ohio to transact their business, when one is all that is required in the State of Indiana. It may not be any argument at all. I do not say it is any argument against the appointment of these two additional judges for Ohio, but I submit these suggestions for the purpose of illustrating the high standard of citizenship and intelligence in the State which I have the honor to represent in part. We settle our difficulties in the right way.

Mr. KEIFER. I should like to know, because I am not clear about it. Is there more than one place in Indiana where the district court is held?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Our district judge is principally occupied at one place. The law requires sessions of the circuit and district courts to be held at five places in Indiana.

Mr. KEIFER. Can the gentleman name them?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes; at Evansville, New Albany, Fort Wayne, Hammond, and Indianapolis.

Mr. KEIFER. Have not you recently had a Kentucky district judge holding the court at Evansville?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Not to my knowledge. There has not been any district judge holding court at Evansville very much in the last fifteen years. We have been complaining a little because our own district judge does not go down and hold court at Evansville, at Hammond, and these other points. We have been trying to get divisions created so as to compel the judge to try our cases at home. We have not succeeded in doing it so far.

Mr. DIXON of Indiana. I would like to ask the gentleman if he knows about the political exigencies in Ohio that might demand these additional judges?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not think the exigencies are any more urgent than they are in Indiana. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. The administration is giving more attention to the State of Ohio at present, from the current reports.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is a question I refer to the executive branch of the Government for answer.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Chairman, I have a statement here which I have prepared, showing the number of cases commenced and disposed of in the circuit and district courts throughout the United States in each district, and the totals for the circuit. It also shows the number of district and circuit judges in each circuit, and shows also the number of cases commenced and disposed of in the United States circuit court of appeals in each circuit for the year ending July 1, 1909. I desire to ask leave to have this printed in the RECORD.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman inform the House how many cases were tried and disposed of in Indiana?

Mr. STERLING. There were commenced in the district of Indiana 496 cases that year, and 466 cases were disposed of.

Mr. COX of Indiana. That is for the year 1909?

Mr. STERLING. For the year ending July 1, 1909; that is for both circuit and district courts for that State.

Mr. MANN. What does that include?

Mr. STERLING. It includes all cases to which the Government is a party; all criminal cases and all cases to which the Government is not a party, including bankruptcy cases.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Do I understand the gentleman that that applies to both district and circuit courts?

Mr. STERLING. District and circuit courts.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Can the gentleman inform the House how many were commenced and disposed of in the district court alone?

Mr. STERLING. I have not them separate. I do not know where that could be obtained. I compiled this from a report of the Attorney-General's office, and he gives the cases all together in both courts; he does not separate the district court from the circuit court.

Mr. MANN. I think it has been usual to separate them in the annual report.

Mr. STERLING. It was not so in this report from which I made this compilation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to publish the statement he has referred to in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The compilation is as follows:

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, can the gentleman from Illinois give the House information as to how many cases were disposed of in the two courts of the State of Ohio during the same period?

Mr. STERLING. I can give it precisely by referring to the statement which I have just sent to the Clerk's desk. My recollection is that there were a few more than 900 cases commenced in the northern district of Ohio and a few less than 800 cases in the southern district during that year.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman will yield, I want to say that in the southern district alone there were 1,140 bankrupt cases in the past three years.

Mr. STERLING. I am speaking only for the year ending July 1, 1909. I am sure that the figures I give are substantially correct.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. It appears from a comparison of the business that the two districts of Ohio had four times as much business as the State of Indiana.

Mr. STERLING. In the two districts, yes; and perhaps a little more.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I want to say that Indiana has no criminal business and very little bankruptcy business. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think there is another important point that should be mentioned, and that is that in the northern district there are a number of maritime cases disposed of.

Mr. STERLING. I understand there is considerable maritime business in the northern district, and that perhaps accounts for there being more cases there than in the southern district.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD].

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I am standing on my indispensable feet to say a few words in favor of this bill. I am trying in a very modest way to represent the Ninth Ohio District, in which the city of Toledo is located, the third city in population in the State of Ohio, and bordering on Lake Erie. We have there the greatest harbor on the chain of the Great Lakes. We have 22 miles of dockage, more dockage than all the harbors on Lake Erie and Lake Ontario combined. We have 22 railroads, the second greatest railroad center in the United States. We have a large amount of interstate and maritime business in the federal courts. I am only going to occupy a few minutes of your time with statistics bearing on this question of an additional judge. These statistics were gathered in October, 1909, and the statistics for 1909 were not then available.

I will say, however, that the statistics of 1909 proportionately carry out the same increase in all the districts named as in 1908, so that these statistics for all practical purposes are as valuable as those gathered in 1909.

I have here the official statistics of both district and circuit courts for one year ending July 1, 1908, in four important districts. These districts are the northern Ohio; the western district of Pennsylvania, including first circuit; the northern district of Illinois, including second circuit; and the second district of Oregon, including the first circuit. These are all very important districts, heavily populated. I take it for granted that Members of this House will not vote for any additional judges unless the business of the district absolutely demands it. Just as briefly as possible I shall speak of the demand for an additional judge for the northern district of Ohio.

I quote from the official records of four heavily populated districts, in which the United States was not a party. The amount of judgments for the plaintiff in the northern Ohio district for the year aggregate $3,129,681, while in the three other districts named—the western district of Pennsylvania, the northern district of Illinois, and the second district of Oregon—the entire amount of judgments for the plaintiff aggregate $1,155,053. In other words, the aggregate for the northern Ohio district exceeds the combined aggregate of these three districts by almost $2,000,000, the exact figures being $1,974,628. Again, in bankruptcy cases for the year named the total liabilities involved in the northern Ohio district amount to $10,125,002, while in the three other districts above named the entire amount involved aggregates $14,489,922.

And these statistics include also the business of the first circuit in western Pennsylvania and the second circuit in northern Illinois. Let me make another test. The total assets realized in bankruptcy proceedings in the northern district of Ohio aggregates $1,003,917, while in the second district of Oregon and the western district of Pennsylvania and the northern district of Illinois the aggregate realized was $1,577,347, or a trifle more than $500,000 more in all these three important districts, including two circuits, than in the northern Ohio district alone.

Let us take another test that will be conceded to have a vital bearing on this contention.

First, let me state that all the above statistics are in proceedings in which the United States was not a party.

The statistics of cases pending outside of bankruptcy proceedings in the northern district of Ohio on July, 1908, are 543, and 332 new cases were commenced during the year, leaving 543 cases still pending at the close of the year, and the accumulation of new cases on the docket for 1909, as I am reliably informed, is much larger than in 1908. In the Oregon district referred to, with two courts, and the western Pennsylvania district, with two courts, and the northern Illinois district, with two courts, the number of cases commenced during the year ending July, 1908, averaged 295 for each district, compared with northern Ohio district, with 332 new cases. In other words, less new cases were commenced by 37 in these important districts, with two courts, than in the northern Ohio district, with one court and one judge.

Now, let us compare the records of bankruptcy. In the northern Ohio district 471 cases were filed in 1908. In the three other districts above named, all with two courts, the average number was 369. In other words, 102 more cases were filed during the year in the northern Ohio district, with one judge and one court, than the average of these three named districts and circuits, each with two courts.

Hence, it must be evident to every Member on this floor that the demand for a new judge for the northern district of Ohio is absolute.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentlemen from Ohio naturally want additional judges, and I agree with the gentlemen that there is some occasion for the appointment of an additional judge for the northern district of Ohio, where the population and the business of the courts may warrant that. There is nothing in the report of the committee which indicates any reason for an additional judge in the southern district of Ohio. The report sets forth the number of cases commenced and concluded, and there is no large amount of business in the southern district of Ohio. Most all of the cases, or a majority of the cases, are bankruptcy cases, which never come before the judge at all, and when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STERLING] gives a list of the cases commenced in the various circuit and district courts of the United States, including the bankruptcy cases, with the notion of giving the House information as to the amount of business transacted by the courts, the information is entirely misleading, because most of those cases are bankruptcy cases, disposed of by a bankruptcy referee without requiring consideration by the judge at all. I notice that in the southern district of Ohio in 1908, in the western division of the circuit court, there were 126 cases commenced and 145 disposed of; that in 1909, in the eastern district, there were 47 cases commenced and 77 disposed of. That does not look as though there was a congestion of business in these courts. But this case is only an exemplification of the constant effort, when you have something and it is likely to be taken away from you, to demand that it be continued in your possession. A few years ago the gentlemen from Ohio came before Congress and asked for the appointment of an additional judge in the southern district of Ohio, on the ground that the judge then in office was incapacitated from the full performance of his duties, and that, if the additional judge were granted, the additional judge would be able to dispatch all of the business in that circuit court upon the removal from office or the resignation of the judge then in office.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. In a moment.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I would like to have the gentleman yield on that point.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Ohio says that he does not remember that anything of that sort was said. I do not now recall just what was said on the floor of the House, but I remember very distinctly that there was the statement made to me and others, and I think on the floor of the House, that they would be satisfied; they had no desire to have the vacancy filled when the time of the then judge expired; and they would be satisfied with an additional judge. There has been no increase in business since that time. Now I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. The bill to which the gentleman refers was one introduced by myself and amended by the committee.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. The argument put before the committee was identically the same argument put before the House to-day, that we needed two judges. Judge Thompson at that time was not incapacitated, but was working himself toward physical incapacity very rapidly by reason of overwork.

Mr. MANN. I do not now say that he was totally incapacitated.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. He was not incapacitated in any way.

Mr. MANN. All I am saying is—and I do not know the gentleman—that the statement made on the floor of the House at that time was that he was incapacitated, and the statement of the committee in reporting the bill to the House was that he was partially incapacitated from the full performance of his duties.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I have not before me the report of the committee, but if the committee reported that Judge Thompson was incapacitated, and for that reason they gave him an assistant judge or temporary judge, then the committee made a report not based upon the arguments or the facts presented to the committee.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I remember one reason given for the appointment of an additional judge in the southern district of Ohio, and my recollection is quite firm that it was that the appointment should be only temporary.

Mr. MANN. What took place there? The law provided for the appointment of an additional judge in the southern district of Ohio, and then contains language expressly providing——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, that is all right——

Mr. MANN (continuing). When the office of the then existing judge expired there should be no appointment without filling the vacancy thereby created, and authorizes the repeal of this provision——

Mr. JOYCE. Why does the gentleman say that the district courts in Ohio do not require any time in bankruptcy matters?

Mr. MANN. Well, I did not make that statement, to begin with.

Mr. JOYCE. Did not the gentleman say that they did not take any time in bankruptcy matters?

Mr. MANN. I said there were few bankruptcy matters coming before the judge to be disposed of upon argument, and I repeat the statement.

Mr. JOYCE. Does not the gentleman know at least two Fridays in every month—and I think it applies to Cincinnati, as well as Columbus—are set apart for bankruptcy matters?

Mr. MANN. Well, I think likely two days in a month may be devoted to bankruptcy matters, and that just about carries out my statement.

Mr. JOYCE. Well, that is a little different from what I understood you to say a little while ago.

Mr. MANN. Two days a month. Now, there is another situation which I somewhat hesitate to bring before the House. The distinguished gentleman from Ohio, or from New Jersey, just had read a letter from some one now or formerly connected with the Department of Justice. That is the first expression of opinion that we have had from anyone connected with the Department of Justice in reference to the appointment of an additional judge in Ohio. I do not quite understand in what capacity the gentleman writes. Is the gentleman whose letter was just read now connected with the Department of Justice, may I ask the gentleman who had the letter read?

Mr. GOEBEL. He is.

Mr. MANN. In what capacity?

Mr. GOEBEL. Assistant to the Attorney-General.

Mr. MANN. I thought he had resigned that place.

Mr. GOEBEL. Then you are very much mistaken.

Mr. MANN. Very well. He has already been selected as chairman of the Republican Ohio state central committee. The newspapers stated that he had resigned from the office of Assistant Attorney-General. I do not know whether Mr. Ellis is acting both as Assistant Attorney-General and as chairman of the Republican state central committee; but if he is, he absolutely lacks a proper moral appreciation of the office of Assistant Attorney-General of the United States. [Applause.] And I do not know in what capacity he is advising the appointment of this judge. Now, I can understand how much the chairman of a campaign state committee may be in favor of the appointment of 1 or 40 judges when he is going into a hard campaign. I know that the political exigencies in Ohio require a great many methods of campaigning, but I had not suspected before that it required an Assistant Attorney-General of the United States, acting as chairman of the Republican state central committee, to ask for the appointment of an additional district judge, and who could get no expression of opinion in favor of that appointment from the Attorney-General himself. I would like to inquire of the gentleman——

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. PARKER. To say that while the letter is signed by the Assistant Attorney-General it was ordered by the Attorney-General himself, as I know personally.

Mr. MANN. Well, the Attorney-General is able to sign letters, as far as I know personally.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. The Attorney-General did sign a letter recommending this——

Mr. MANN. Where is it?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. In the report, January 20—no; that applies to the northern district.

Mr. MANN. You see, I had read the report; the gentleman had not. There is not a line in the report from any official expressing any opinion of any kind concerning the proposition of an additional judge for the southern district of Ohio.

It is true they have opinions in regard to the northern district of Ohio, and it seems to me that they have made a case, and it may be they have made a case of political expediency and of dire necessity of the Republican party in Ohio which requires the appointment of an additional judge for the southern district, and requires the chairman of the state committee, acting as an assistant Attorney-General, to send a letter at the last moment—not sent until he was appointed chairman of the Republican state committee, although this matter has been pending for some time, and not sent until he has had brought home to him the needs of the Republican party in Ohio to unify and harmonize the party in Ohio. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I confess that I am greatly surprised that politics should have been injected into this question, and especially that it should have been injected by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. I am somewhat tempted to say what I really think——

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing. The gentleman need not hesitate on my account.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is not a question of sparing the feelings of the gentleman from Illinois; it is a question of delaying, possibly, the passage of this most meritorious bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Do not hide the truth with any other question.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not attempt to defend Mr. Ellis or anyone else as to their motives for favoring the passage of this bill, so far as the southern district of Ohio is concerned. Mr. Ellis is a lawyer, a high-minded gentleman, a conscientious public official, and need not fear comparison with any Member of this House. That has nothing to do with this case.

It is not so much the question of the number of cases that are filed there as it is the kind of cases that are filed. They are the kind of cases that require time and labor to dispose of. Many cases have been filed under the law which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] was so active in passing, and I may say that I think the gentleman from Illinois showed to far better advantage in what he did in securing the passage of the pure-food bill than in what he is now seeking to do to prevent the passage of this bill. The facts are simply these: Even though Judge Thompson worked, as I am informed, day and night and failed to take vacations in the summer, and even though Judge Sater, a very able lawyer and a good business judge, assisted him, nevertheless the docket of that circuit is in a condition that is to-day little less than intolerable, and not to members of the bar alone but to litigants. It may well be that one of the reasons why there have not been more cases filed there has been the difficulty in securing their prompt adjudication. This is especially true of patent cases. There are patent cases there, as I am informed, that have been on the docket and undecided for more than five years, and litigants in patent controversies hesitate to file new cases in that court.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I might state that Judge Sater recently decided a patent case which had been in the hands of the court for eight years, and that was turned over to him for decision during Judge Thompson's last illness.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Far from being a question of politics, the leading members of the Cincinnati bar, Democrats as well as Republicans—and, I think, the majority of the leading members of the Cincinnati bar are Democrats—are unanimously of the opinion that this addition of another judge in the southern district is not only advisable, but absolutely necessary. Among the gentlemen who formed the committee that appeared here was a gentleman who was the Democratic candidate for mayor of Cincinnati last year. The gentleman from Illinois, I think, would not accuse him of endeavoring to contribute to the success of the Republican party by giving it more patronage.

I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that I have anything else to say upon this matter, except to refer again to the fact that it was given a most full and careful hearing by the Committee on the Judiciary—a committee of able lawyers, a committee whose membership would scorn to give heed to petty partisan questions—and it was the unanimous report of that committee that this bill ought to pass. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I hope this bill is not to be considered in a partisan way. The people's rights, the rights of litigants, the right to have matters determined and passed upon in court are above political trickery and biased argument. Ohio is peculiarly situated. Up until a few years ago—1903—it had what was known as a "double liability," or "statutory liability," upon all stockholders of an Ohio corporation, and to evade this law corporations doing business in Ohio, at least 50 per cent of them, are corporations incorporated in States other than Ohio, who have a right to go into the United States court in the first instance, and in the second instance, if sued, have a right to remove the case there. Ohio has been peculiar in this: She has had the ablest, the most persistent in working, and painstaking of all the judges in the United States. They have been diligent; they have been earnest; they have done everything in their power to clean up the court dockets as far as possible.

But I am reminded by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that there is not anything in the southern district of Ohio but bankruptcy cases. Why does he not take the official report and tell the Members what is there? Commencing on the 1st of July, 1908, there were 60 cases in which the United States was interested. On July 1, 1909, there were 55 such cases.

Taking the criminal prosecutions, there were 34 in number pending July 1, 1908, and there were 46 pending on July 1, 1909. Of civil litigation there were pending July 1, 1908, 409 cases in the southern district of Ohio. On July 1, 1909, there were pending 423 cases, not one of them bankruptcy cases, nothing in regard to bankruptcy. There were pending bankruptcy cases July 1, 1908, 401; there were pending July 1, 1909, 490 bankruptcy cases. During that whole time we had the service of Judge Sater, and during all that time, until six weeks ago, we had the services of Judge A. C. Thompson, both in southern Ohio, and yet the litigation increased as is shown. As it stands now, it is practically a denial of justice in every regard. There is not a Democratic lawyer in Ohio, there is not a Republican lawyer in Ohio, but who joins hands in demanding for their clients and the people of Ohio the additional judges, not for political purposes, but that their clients may have their cases disposed of and their rights established. I do hope this bill will pass. [Applause.]

Mr. PARKER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER].

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, we all know how easy it is for a gentleman as versatile as the gentleman from Illinois to fall into a mistake, and we can excuse him and his bad memory when he refers to the debate that was forced on this House by his objection three years ago. He now says to this House that then we appealed for another judge because we wanted and needed one judge and not two. I was on the floor at one time then, just after his objection, uttering a protest against the bill because it did not provide permanently for two judges. I read a single paragraph. After an appeal had been made by Mr. Grosvenor to me not to object to the bill in the form it came from the committee, I said:

> Mr. Chairman, I do not desire now to object to the bill, but I do object in a way to that last provision. I think there ought to be two permanent judges provided.

The statistics presented then to this House showed that we then needed two judges, and there was no statement made then, for I have looked over the entire discussion, that Judge Thompson was at that time incapacitated. He was overworked; that was all. At times he was undertaking to dispose of patent and other difficult and important cases, and he was trying the cases, not in the district court alone, but also doing the entire circuit court business of the southern district of Ohio, composed, as I recollect, of 48 counties, including the cities of Cincinnati, Hamilton, Dayton, Springfield, Columbus, Zanesville, Steubenville, and other important places, with a population in the district of probably above 2,500,000 people. He was doing all the bankruptcy business at that time. He at times bled from his wounds, received in the civil war, while on the bench; and he still, with that great, hopeful spirit that belonged to him, thought he could do the work of a judge, and he did, but he died in the struggle to discharge his duty. Yet with the assistance of another judge, an able one, too, the business went behind. I have had to go within this week to the city of Columbus and reargue a case that was argued before Judge Thompson last March for the purpose of having it decided then, but which he was unable, although he worked almost every moment that he was able to be out of his bed and room, and he worked up to the very last days of his life. It is not possible for one judge to keep up the business in the southern district of Ohio, and it has not been for ten years. And that was claimed before, when an extra judge was provided for by the act of February 25, 1907. We have left but two judges in the two districts of Ohio, a less proportionate number than the judges for the business which has been done in the northern district of Illinois. I believe you have five.

Mr. MANN. We have but one.

Mr. KEIFER. In the northern district?

Mr. MADDEN. Two.

Mr. KEIFER. And you have circuit judges there.

Mr. MANN. They are on the court of appeals. They do not try district cases.

Mr. KEIFER. The district judges do the circuit work.

Mr. MANN. Either one of our judges transacts more business than any judge in your district.

Mr. KEIFER. I have not time to yield. I would like to go into a discussion and show by the very figures this statement presented by the other distinguished gentleman from Illinois shows that, notwithstanding we have had two district judges for three years, they have been unable to keep pace with the accumulation of business, though they have worked efficiently and industriously. Distinguished men of all parties from Cincinnati, not judges, nor even confined to lawyers, but clients, were here appealing to the Committee on the Judiciary and asking them to provide these additional judges. It is a denial of justice to refuse it. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON], a member of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, it had not been my purpose to say anything, but it seems to me that this is a proper case for the relief that is asked at the hands of Congress.

The indisputable fact is that the public business out there is in such a condition that the present force of judges is not sufficient to meet the requirements, and it seems to me that the only remedy that can be afforded to parties litigant, to the public, and for the correct, free, and prompt administration of public justice, is that this measure shall pass.

I will say, Mr. Chairman, that so far as the committee that reported this bill is concerned there is absolutely no politics in it. I am glad to say in behalf of that great committee that on all these questions pertaining to the judiciary politics has never been allowed to creep in. [Applause.] And I trust as time goes along and as political conflicts sharpen there will always be at least one committee in the House, when it comes to the administration of public justice, that will always be free from partisan politics in their deliberations and their reports. [Applause.] I am sure that is the case here. I well recollect when the case from Illinois was brought to that committee a few years ago. If I recollect, we accorded on the same day an additional circuit judge and an additional district judge in Illinois, because the public business required it. It was in the interest of the parties litigant; it was in the interest of public justice. The bar were unanimous for it. This case here seems to me to be as strong as that. The committee were unanimously of the opinion, after a full and careful investigation of this question, that this bill ought to pass.

Now, I deplore as much as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] can deplore, the growth of business in the federal courts. Probably the gentleman might contribute something toward stopping this growth of business. This Congress could cease passing so many laws for judges to construe. We could let up a little on safety appliances, hours of labor, naturalization, drugs and foods, transportation, "white slavery," bankruptcy, and similar questions. Some of such matters I think might be left out of federal legislation. But, Mr. Speaker, the people seem to demand it, and Congress seems to be compelled to go on making more laws. As you multiply the laws you multiply the necessity of courts to construe these laws. As you give new remedies in the federal courts you make it necessary to have more judges and more federal machinery to enforce those laws. There is another way in which this might be stopped, but that belongs to the providence of God, and that is to stop the increase of our population. I am sure the gentleman would not advocate race suicide. [Laughter.] Another way would be to stop the growth of our commercial interests, of our business affairs. But, Mr. Speaker, as long as the country is growing in population, growing in commercial importance, in business interests, in legislative matters by the action of Congress, to meet all these conditions when a proper case is presented to this House for relief (for justice must be without bargain, sale, or denial) it is the duty of this House, whatever narrower views gentlemen may take of this question, to rise to the occasion and pass adequate legislation. [Applause.]

Mr. PARKER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOWLAND] three minutes.

Mr. HOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly that my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has intimated that the Republican party in Ohio is in such dire straits that it is compelled to drag the judicial ermine through the mire of politics, but I am happy to assure the gentleman from Illinois that the opinion which he seems to entertain as to the dire straits of the party is not entertained by the Republicans of Ohio.

Speaking from full and personal knowledge of the situation in the federal courts in the northern district of Ohio, I feel it proper to say that the position of district judge there is filled by a man who formerly represented an Ohio district—the eighteenth—in this House with honor and ability, R. W. Tayler.

For the past few years he has discharged the duties of a federal judge for the northern district of Ohio with great credit to himself and to the entire satisfaction of the people. His ability is of the very highest order and he is one of the most conscientious and hard-working men that ever occupied a position on the federal bench in that district. I know, however, of my own personal knowledge, that by reason of the enormous docket it is absolutely impossible for him to fully discharge all the duties that devolve upon him in that position, and from the bench and bar, regardless of politics, throughout that district comes this great cry for help.

A short time ago, by statute, we compelled the judge to hold two terms of court in Youngstown, Ohio. He is compelled to hold court in Toledo, and with the terms necessarily held at Cleveland it makes it almost a physical impossibility for him to discharge all the duties devolving upon him. Speaking for the northern district of Ohio, from my own personal knowledge, I assure this House that the necessity is great, and justice demands this legislation. It is the duty of Congress to provide the necessary judges, so that litigants may have speedy trials and the law's delays made as short as possible.

I can not speak of my own personal knowledge of the situation in the southern district of Ohio, but as a member of the Judiciary Committee, from information submitted to that committee, I assure this House that an additional judge is needed in the southern district of Ohio as well, and I trust that the bill will be passed as it comes from the committee. [Applause.]

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I have a further amendment to the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment to the title by substituting the following as the title:

"An act providing for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the northern judicial district of the State of Ohio, and an additional district judge in and for the southern district for the State of Ohio."

The amendment was agreed to.

The substitute for the title was agreed to.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill and amendments to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee determined to rise; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GAINES, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 1043) providing for an additional district judge for the northern and southern districts of Ohio, had adopted certain amendments, and had directed him to report the same to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to their final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

There was no separate vote demanded.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended.

On motion of Mr. KEIFER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AMENDING ACT RELATIVE TO RECOGNIZANCES, BONDS, ETC.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the bill (H. R. 18902) to amend an act approved August 13, 1894, entitled "An act relative to recognizances, stipulations, bonds, and undertakings, and to allow certain corporations to be accepted as surety thereon."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That chapter 282 of the act of 1894, entitled "An act relative to recognizances, stipulations, bonds and undertakings, and to allow certain corporations to be accepted as surety thereon," is hereby amended by striking out the word "Attorney-General" wherever it occurs in said act and substituting therefor the words "Secretary of the Treasury."

The following committee amendment was read:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That sections 3 and 4 of the act entitled 'An act relative to recognizances, stipulations, bonds, and undertakings, and to allow certain corporations to be accepted as surety thereon,' be, and they are hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"'SEC. 3. That every company, before transacting any business under this act, shall deposit with the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States a copy of its charter or articles of incorporation, and a statement, signed and sworn to by its president and secretary, showing its assets and liabilities. If the said Secretary of the Treasury shall be satisfied that such company has authority under its charter to do the business provided for in this act, and that it has a paid-up capital of not less than $250,000, in cash or its equivalent, and is able to keep and perform its contracts, he shall grant authority in writing to such company to do business under this act.

"'SEC. 4. That every such company shall, in the months of January, April, July, and October of each year, file with the said Secretary of the Treasury a statement, signed and sworn to by its president and secretary, showing its assets and liabilities, as is required by section 3 of this act. And the said Secretary of the Treasury shall have the power, and it shall be his duty, to revoke the authority of any such company to transact any new business under this act whenever in his judgment such company is not solvent or is conducting its business in violation of this act. He may institute inquiry at any time into the solvency of said company, and may require that additional security be given at any time by any principal when he deems such company no longer sufficient security.'"

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON].

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I think the letter from the Attorney-General of the United States sufficiently explains this bill. The existing law is that the examination of surety companies shall be made by the Attorney-General. The Attorney-General says that he has no machinery for making the examination, and recommends that it be turned over to the Secretary of the Treasury; and in obedience to the suggestion of the Attorney-General and the apparent reasonableness of the proposition, the committee adopted the amendment and recommended that the bill in its present shape do pass.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. MANN. We put some provision in one of the laws, at the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations last year, I believe, in reference to bonding companies, and the amount that might be charged, which was very seriously objected to by some gentlemen who were properly representing the interests of their constituents. Is the gentleman from Pennsylvania able to say whether this would in any way change the attitude that Congress took at that time?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I feel absolutely confident in saying that it would not, that it could not; for it does nothing else except to commit to the Secretary of the Treasury the investigation of the financial standing of the company, which is now by law put upon the Attorney-General. There are two things required by the act respecting surety companies—an investigation of the legal status of the company and an investigation of its financial responsibilities. I can easily understand why those were both put formerly upon the Attorney-General, because he alone could examine its legal responsibility, and the recommendation to us now is based on the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury is entitled to the advice of the Attorney-General as to its legal status, and that the Attorney-General has no machinery for investigating the financial responsibility of such companies. I feel, without having had the subject called to my attention, from the knowledge I have of it, that it could not by any possibility do it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Has not the Secretary of the Treasury in other years stated that in his opinion this duty should be performed by the Attorney-General?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. On the contrary, the Attorney-General has stated in his letter that it ought to be devolved upon the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I heard that statement made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but my recollection is that the Secretary of the Treasury has stated that this is not a duty that his department is equipped to perform; that the examination of these companies is something that should be done by the Department of Justice.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Now, in reply to that I can say that I never heard that statement made. The impression left upon me, but I can not give the basis for it, was that the Secretary of the Treasury acquiesced in this proposition and agreed with the Attorney-General. The basis I have for that impression, as I say, I am not able to state. That was certainly my impression.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Speaking from my recollection, it seems to me that at some time in the not distant past the question was considered by the Committee on Appropriations in connection with a request to have authorized the employment of the necessary service to make these examinations. I am now under the impression that the Secretary of the Treasury suggested that the Treasury Department was not equipped and did not have in its employ the type of men who should make such investigations. Did the Committee on the Judiciary inquire from the Treasury Department as to whether it would be desirable to devolve this duty upon it?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. The Committee on the Judiciary referred the matter to the department, and it relied upon the communication from the Attorney-General. That is my recollection. I would like to ask that question of the chairman of the committee. I will ask the gentleman from New Jersey as to whether he has any information as to what the Secretary of the Treasury said on this subject? I have not.

Mr. PARKER. We have a letter here from the Attorney-General which, if I may be permitted, I will read:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., January 25, 1910.

Hon. RICHARD W. PARKER,
Chairman Judiciary Committee,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. PARKER: At my request Mr. BENNET has introduced a bill (H. R. 18902) amending the act of Congress relating to bonds of surety companies so as to require reports of surety companies to be made to and investigated by the Treasury Department. My experience has been that the Department of Justice has neither the machinery nor the proper information with which to conduct the periodical investigations into the solvency of surety companies which should be made in order that the National Government may secure responsible corporations as securities upon bonds and undertakings given in connection with federal matters, and I therefore recommended in my report to Congress that the jurisdiction over that subject be transferred to the Treasury Department, where it seems to me to belong. This bill was introduced for the purpose of carrying out that recommendation, and I venture to express the hope that it will meet with the approval of your committee.

Faithfully, yours,

GEO. W. WICKERSHAM,
Attorney-General.

I take it that the Attorney-General would not have made that recommendation without consulting with the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. That was the impression of the committee, particularly now, as I remember, that the recommendation had also been included in the annual report of the Attorney-General.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

CONCURRENT GRAND JURIES IN CERTAIN CASES.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 16037) to amend section 810 of the Revised Statutes, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 810 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read:

"SEC. 810. No grand jury shall be summoned to attend any circuit or district court unless one of the judges of such circuit court, or the judge of such district, in his own discretion, or upon a notification by the district attorney that such jury will be needed, orders a venire issue therefor. If the United States attorney for the district shall certify in writing to the district judge, or the senior district judge of the district, or one of the judges of said circuit court, that the exigencies of the public service require it, the judge shall also order a venire to issue for a second grand jury. Either of said courts may in term order a grand jury to be summoned at such time, and to serve such time as it may direct, whenever in its judgment it may be proper to do so. But nothing herein shall operate to extend beyond the time permitted by law the imprisonment before indictment found of a person accused of a crime or offense, or the time during which a person so accused may be held under recognizance before indictment found."

With the following amendment:

Page 2, line 3, strike out "shall" and insert "may."

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I would say that the only part of this bill which is new is the second section, which provides:

If the United States attorney for the district shall certify in writing to the district judge, or the senior district judge of the district, one of the judges of said circuit court, that the exigencies of the public service require it the judge may order a venire to issue for a second grand jury.

This is to provide for a condition of affairs in New York where it is necessary sometimes to have two grand juries at a time in order to transact the business. If there be need for any further explanation I would ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS], who introduced the bill, to explain it, but unless that requirement be made I will now ask for a vote. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment——

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, the bill as printed and read by the Clerk does not contain the amendment as proposed in the report. The report says that, in line 3, on page 2, it shall be amended by striking out the word "shall" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "may in his discretion."

Mr. PARKER. The gentleman, I think, is right, and I move that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 3, strike out the word "shall" and insert the words "may in his discretion."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York a question or two. Is that section of this bill part of the statutes now?

Mr. PARKER. Yes; the first sentence is part of the statutes now.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And you say this is intended really to apply to the city of New York?

Mr. PARKER. The old section allowed a grand jury to be called at any time, so that there could be consecutive grand juries at one term. This new sentence allows two concurrent grand juries to be summoned at the same time.

Mr. PARSONS. In addition.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. On the certificate of the judge or the district attorney.

Mr. PARKER. On the certificate of the district attorney, the judge may, in his discretion, order it; it is not compulsory.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. New York City is not divided into two districts?

Mr. PARKER. No——

Mr. PARSONS. Yes; it is divided in two districts. Old New York City is one district and Brooklyn is a separate district.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Do they hold court in the same court-house?

Mr. PARSONS. They do not.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, what is the necessity of having two concurrent grand juries?

Mr. PARKER. Because the work in the "borough of New York," as they call it—the southern district of New York—is so tremendously great. There are from 4,000,000 to 5,000,000 people right there in the city.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

TO AMEND SECTION 876, REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 16342, calendar No. 50, to amend section 876 of the Revised Statutes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 876 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 876. Subpœnas for witnesses who are required to attend a court of the United States in any district may run into any other district: Provided, That in civil causes the witnesses living out of the State in which the court is held do not live at a greater distance than 100 miles from the place of holding the same."

Mr. PARKER. Is the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] here?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. PARKER. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. As I understand it, under the law as it now exists you can not compel a witness in a civil case to go out of the district in which he resides into another district to testify, and in order to get testimony it is necessary to take testimony either before a commissioner or by depositions or interrogatories.

Mr. PARKER. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. The purpose of this bill is to repeal that law and to substitute for it a provision which will require the citizen, although he does not live in that district, or lives more than 100 miles away from the place to which he is summoned outside of his own district, to go in response to a subpœna, even in a civil case. Is that right?

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I will state the exact meaning of this change. It is to change the word "district" to "State." This section was passed when the districts were coterminous with the States, and it was provided you could subpœna witnesses from outside of the district, if they did not live over 100 miles away. At that time you could issue and serve a subpœna all over the district, or, in other words, all over the State. With the growth of population a strange result has taken place in the State of New York. Since there has been a western and a southern and an eastern district, the court can not send your subpœna as far as it could in the olden times when travel was ten times more difficult than it is now. And this seeming amendment of the section is only to restore the section in its effect exactly to what it was when it was first passed.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Well, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I live in the southern district of Georgia, and the State is divided into the northern and southern districts. If we call a witness who lives up in the northern district, 200 miles away, in a civil case, under this law you could subpœna him and compel him to leave his business and come down and attend court in my city, 200 miles away, or the further extreme, the city of Savannah, 400 miles away.

Mr. PARKER. I understand that in Georgia you can not subpœna outside of the county. In the State of New York and the State of New Jersey the subpœna runs all over the State in the state courts in a civil case. A peculiar result follows when you want a witness from Albany, when it only takes two or three hours to come down the river to the city of New York. You can subpœna him from Albany or from Buffalo in the state courts.

Mr. CLAYTON. I wish right in that connection to say that a partial examination of this question shows the rule to be in most of the States that I have looked into, that a subpœna does have effective force outside of the county where issued. In other words, the subpœna in a civil process does "run" outside of the county where issued. In my State it runs within 100 miles, and Georgia, according to my recollection, is one of the few States in the Union, if not the only one, where it is restricted. Now, I submit, in the interest of public justice and liberality, that the bill as reported by the committee is better than the narrower rule which restricts the running of a subpœna to a particular county in which it is issued.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. There is no particular effort made here to restrict it to a particular section, if the gentleman will permit a reply. It is an effort not to put upon the citizen who happens to be a witness in a civil case the necessity of going from his own district hundreds of miles to answer a subpœna in a civil case when his testimony can be as well and clearly taken as if he were upon the stand. Of course, in a criminal case, he ought to be compelled to go. The Constitution requires a man to be confronted with a witness, and we can not avoid that provision; but in a civil case, to permit a party, the plaintiff or defendant, to force a man who is really a witness for the plaintiff or defendant to travel all over the whole State to testify looks to me like putting a hardship upon him.

Mr. CLAYTON. May I interrupt my friend from Georgia to make this suggestion?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Yes, sir; go ahead.

Mr. CLAYTON. You admit that if a man lives in the district of which Savannah is the place of holding the court, and lives 400 miles from Savannah, that he can be made under the federal statutes to go there and attend court at Savannah?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. In a criminal case, but not in a civil case.

Mr. CLAYTON. In the federal courts?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I think not; I know not. If he lives more than 100 miles from Savannah you can not compel him to go.

Mr. CLAYTON. If it is in the same district?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. It is not in the same district; therefore he can not go. There is another district in the State. It looks to me like the change of the law is not in the interest of anybody but litigants.

Mr. CLAYTON. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New Jersey stated this whole case when he said that originally in providing for process issued by the federal courts—that is, the process of subpœna—the word "State" was used, because the district comprehended the whole State, and State and district meant the same thing. Now, in the growth of the country and in the progress of legislation well nigh every State has been divided into one or more districts; and the simple purpose of the bill is to substitute the word "district" for the word "State." Now, that is all there is in it.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. CLAYTON. With pleasure.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. The gentleman knows from the history of the court and the decisions rendered by the federal courts that for many, many years after the law of which he speaks was enacted there was very little business done in the federal courts, and people very seldom were called to the federal court.

Mr. CLAYTON. That is true.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Now, the immense growth of business in the federal court, which has grown up, in my opinion, by the enactment of some laws which it were better, so far as my opinion goes, had not been passed at all.

Mr. CLAYTON. I agree with the gentleman that we pass a great many laws that ought not to be passed, but they are the law when passed.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. The jurisdiction of the court has not only been extended by statute, but also by construction of the federal courts, until the cases in the federal courts have become very numerous, and if you enlarge the power of the court to drag men from their business outside of their own district more than a hundred miles, as now provided by law, you absolutely interfere with the business of the country, because you can already procure the testimony effectually and for as good purpose as you can by having the witness attend in person by subpœna.

Mr. PARKER. The last Congress passed this bill in both Houses, but by reason of an amendment, which tied it up, it was not signed.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. A pocket veto.

Mr. CLAYTON. Just one word in reply to the gentleman from Georgia, and that is to say that the condition of affairs to which he refers, the scarcity of business in the old days, is not now the case. The federal courts have the business, and it is largely accounted for by increased federal legislation, the increased population of the country, and the increased amount of business generally of the country. That we can not avoid, of course. With the gentleman from Georgia, I deplore the increase of federal legislation and have been voting against a good deal of it for some years, and had the "steam roller run over" me often. But still, after that legislation is had, we must provide not only an adequate number of courts, but ample facilities for a due and orderly administration of justice.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. CLAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. It does not deprive the party of the testimony of the witness, because he can now, if you do not pass this bill, procure the testimony by interrogatories, before an examiner, or by deposition.

Mr. CLAYTON. Well, he may do it in the way that you suggest.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Does the gentleman not agree that that is the law?

Mr. CLAYTON. Certainly it is. There is no issue between the gentleman and myself on that; but still we think that the same power should be given to the federal court that is now vested, in analogous cases, in the state courts in most of the States of the Union. I still insist that the reason the word "State" was written in the statute originally has ceased to be any reason for its remaining in the statute, and that the word "district" ought to be substituted for the word "State."

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, when the federal courts were originally created, the first of them, there were no railroads in the country. Travel was very hard in many cases, overland for the most part.

Now, all that has passed away, and I do not see anything to be apprehended on the score of "dragging" people into court, to use the language of the gentleman from Georgia.

Now, we are all subjected to the inconvenience sometimes of having to attend court. That is one of the things inherent in our system of self-government. We are obliged to subject ourselves to private inconvenience for the public good. It will readily occur to the mind of any man here that a man might object to being "dragged" to court to serve on a grand or petit jury. I might object to going into court, being taken away from my business to answer a subpœna. It is inconvenient; but for the good of the public the individual inconveniences that arise must be made subordinate to the general public good; and unless the individual inconveniences amount to a public inconvenience, the admitted public convenience ought to prevail in making the law, and that is the case here; and the convenience and proper discharge of the court business is the purpose of proposed change in the statute. I think it will tend to that end, and, in my humble judgment, the amendment ought to pass.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

SECTION 860, REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 16367) to repeal section 860 of the Revised Statutes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 860 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DIEKEMA] who reported this bill does not seem to be present at this moment. It is a matter of some importance, and therefore I do not desire to take it up this evening. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from New Jersey withhold the motion for a moment?

Mr. PARKER. Certainly.

AMENDMENTS TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. BROWN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $200,000 for the improvement of the Missouri River above Kansas City, Mo., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.
Mr. FOSTER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $530,000 for improving the Atchafalaya River, Louisiana, from Morgan City to the Gulf of Mexico, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.
Mr. FLETCHER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,000 for the improvement of the St. Lucie Inlet, Florida, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.
He also submitted an amendment providing for the improvement of Taylors Creek, Florida, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.
Mr. JONES submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for improving the Columbia River between Bridgeport and Kettle Falls, State of Washington, etc., to $175,000, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.
He also submitted an amendment providing for the construction of a breakwater off the northeast end of Whale Island, St. Michael Sound, Alaska, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.
Mr. PILES submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for improving Columbia River, Washington, to $15,000, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

CROW INDIANS OF MONTANA.

Mr. PAGE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 181), which (with an accompanying paper) was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Senate resolution 181.

Resolved, That the hearings on the bill of the Senate (S. 3373) regarding the Crow Indians of Montana, be printed as a Senate document.

ESTATE OF JOHN A. HEARD, DECEASED.

Mr. MONEY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 182), which was referred to the Committee on Claims:

Senate resolution 182.

Resolved, That the bill of the Senate (S. 6543) for the relief of the estate of John A. Heard, deceased, together with all accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Tucker Act.

ARKANSAS RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 6191) to authorize the Fort Smith and Van Buren district to construct a bridge across the Arkansas River at Van Buren, in the State of Arkansas. The bill was introduced by the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], who is absent, and has just been reported by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. I know that the Senator from Arkansas is anxious that there should be immediate action upon the bill.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.
The Secretary read the bill, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.
The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in line 11, after the name "Van Buren," to insert "at a point suitable to the interests of navigation," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Fort Smith and Van Buren district, a body politic and corporate created by act of the general assembly of Arkansas approved April 10, 1909, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Arkansas River at Van Buren, Ark., and its successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Arkansas River between the cities of Fort Smith and Van Buren, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, one end of said bridge to be in the corporate limits of the city of Van Buren, in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.
SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.
The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.
The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WATERWAYS AND WATER RESOURCES.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I submitted yesterday an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the river and harbor bill providing for the coordination of the scientific services of the Government with the Corps of Engineers of the Army in framing plans for the full development of our rivers for every useful purpose; and also providing for the cooperation of the United States with the States, municipalities, and private interests in the development of our rivers for every useful purpose, each within the range of its jurisdiction, these useful purposes to include not only navigation, but the reclamation of arid lands, the drainage of swamp lands, the development of water power, and other useful purposes.
I asked that the amendment might lie upon the table, and I gave notice that I would address the Senate this morning upon the subject. I do not find that it is on the calendar in the list of subjects on the table. I ask that it be put upon the calendar, and I give notice that to-morrow, at a convenient time during the morning hour, I shall address the Senate upon the amendment.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The request of the Senator from Nevada will be complied with, in the absence of objection.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill be considered by the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 19255) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the amendments of the committee be considered as they are reached.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, the committee amendments first to be considered? The Chair hears no objection.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill, and read to line 14, on page 7, the last paragraph read being as follows:

For the payment of the cost of tuition of student interpreters at the embassy to Japan, at the rate of $125 per annum each, $750.

Mr. BACON. I desire, as the bill progresses, to ask the Senator from Maine a question. This is a matter, of course, in which the Foreign Relations Committee is necessarily very much interested, and I have had no opportunity to compare this bill with the former bill. There are several provisions here with reference to students, and so forth. I simply desire to ask the Senator whether this bill follows substantially the former bill or whether these are new provisions which are now being suggested?

I wish to say in this connection, Mr. President, that while I have no desire to suggest that the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill shall be in charge of the Committee on Foreign Relations, I do think when changes are made in the diplomatic or consular service the question of those changes ought to go to the Committee on Foreign Relations, except such of them as ought to go to the Committee on Commerce. A part of them would go to the Committee on Commerce, of course.

I make the inquiry now, having no disposition to detain the Senate in any way, but simply to know whether these provisions are substantially the provisions as they have heretofore been found in the appropriation bill, or whether the appropriations about students are innovations.

Mr. HALE. They are substantially the same as in the former bill. The whole subject was carefully investigated by the House Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. BACON. They do not have the same duties that the Committee on Foreign Relations has. I am speaking about the matter of diplomatic representation, and things of that kind. They have, of course, within a certain range, the same duties.

Mr. HALE. The committee there has charge of this bill.

Mr. BACON. Yes; it has.

Mr. HALE. I was saying that that committee went into this matter very thoroughly, and these are nothing but substantially the old appropriations.

The Committee on Appropriations, in the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, has always acted in cooperation with the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate; and new projects are always, so far as I know, and as far as I can in any way control it, sent to the Committee on Foreign Relations, in order that they may report amendments.

The Senator from Georgia I think knows, and the chairman of the committee [Mr. CULLOM], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and others know, that we are very glad to have the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate take the initiative in all new matters, and we are very glad, when amendments are reported by that committee to the Committee on Appropriations, to put them on. I frequently say to the members of the committee that if any controversy arises in the Senate, as the subject has really been thrashed out in the Committee on Foreign Relations, I hope they will be ready to look after it on the floor.

Mr. BACON. We could not very well do that without having had an opportunity to know what it was before it was reported. So far as I know, this has not been in any manner referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HALE. I did not say the bill was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BACON. Or any provision in it.

Mr. HALE. In everything that is not routine or was not passed by the House, the Committee on Appropriations waits for the action of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, I, of course, have every respect for the action of the House, but I do not think the end is fully accomplished by saying it has been considered by the House committee. My only purpose in rising was to inquire whether any of these are new matters, and if they are not, I have nothing further to say about it. If they are new matters, I think they should have come from the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HALE. No; they are substantially old matters.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is very familiar with this matter, as is also the chairman of the committee. My recollection about it is somewhat indistinct. I recollect, of course, when we had up the question as to students in China. I simply desire to ask one of those Senators, one of them being chairman of the committee, and the other one of the most prominent members of the Committee on Foreign Relations, whether the matter in regard to the Japanese students is a matter which has frequently been considered or whether this is new.

Mr. CULLOM. The Japanese item did not come before the Committee on Foreign Relations at all. The item is just the same as it has been before in the bill; but the Committee on Foreign Relations had nothing to do this year with the consideration of it, as it was a matter that had already been in the bill, and was agreed to by the House.

Mr. BACON. My only inquiry was as to one matter, whether Japanese students were included in the former bill. I know that as to the Chinese that they were included.

Mr. LODGE. They were included in the former bill. I have not a copy of it, but I remember that they were included in the bill last year in the same form. We have had those student interpreters for some time.

Mr. BACON. I know that is the case as to the Chinese. My inquiry was as to the Japanese.

Mr. LODGE. It is the same as last year. This is not brought in as a new provision.

Mr. BACON. I asked for information because my memory was not very clear.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 8, after line 15, to insert:

QUARTERS FOR THE STUDENT INTERPRETERS AT THE EMBASSY TO TURKEY.

For rent of quarters for the student interpreters attached to the embassy to Turkey, $600, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 20, to insert:

For the purchase of the necessary furniture for the quarters for the student interpreters attached to the embassy at Constantinople, Turkey, $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 9, to insert:

DISTRIBUTING INFORMATION, DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

For 2 clerks to be employed by the Department of State and to be charged with the distribution of information among the diplomatic missions, 1 at the rate of $1,800 per annum, and 1 at the rate of $1,600 per annum; in all, $3,400.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the amendment be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Transporting remains of diplomatic officers, consuls, and consular clerks to their homes for interment," on page 12, line 1, after the word "consular," to strike out "clerks" and insert "assistants," so as to make the clause read:

For defraying the expenses of transporting the remains of diplomatic and consular officers of the United States, including consular assistants, who have died or may die abroad or in transit, while in the discharge of their official duties, to their former homes in this country for interment, and for the ordinary and necessary expenses of such interment, at their post or at home, $5,000.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 21, on page 17, the last paragraphs read being as follows:

SALARIES AND EXPENSES, UNITED STATES COURT FOR CHINA.

Judge of the United States court for China, $8,000; district attorney of the United States court for China, $4,000; marshal of the United States court for China, $3,000; clerk of the United States court for China, $3,000; stenographer of the United States court for China, $1,800; for court expenses, $7,000; total, $26,800.

The judge of the said court and the district attorney shall, when the sessions of the court are held at other cities than Shanghai, receive in addition to their salaries their actual expenses during such sessions, not to exceed $10 per day for the judge and $5 per day for the district attorney; and so much as may be necessary for said purposes during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, is hereby appropriated.

Mr. BACON. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from Maine. I do so because of the fact that there has been a good deal of agitation about the Chinese court. I simply desire to ask whether those salaries are the same as have been heretofore paid?

Mr. HALE. They are the same, and are fixed by law.

Mr. BACON. I knew they were fixed by law, but frequently appropriations are made in a different way, as the Senator knows, and for that reason I asked the question. I only asked it because, as the Senator is aware, there has been in times past a good deal of agitation upon this question, and a good deal of influence has been sought to be brought to bear to have Congress make certain changes. Without having the old bill before me I did not know whether the House had made any change or not.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment was, on page 20, after line 12, to insert:

ANNUAL PAYMENT TO COLOMBIA UNDER TREATIES.

For the payment of the annual installment for the calendar year 1910, under the assignment and transfer made by the Republic of Panama to the Republic of Colombia, in manner and form as contained in the treaty between the Republic of Colombia and the Republic of Panama of January 9, 1909, the recognition of which assignment and acceptance of notice thereof are given by the United States in Article V of the treaty between the United States and the Republic of Colombia concluded January 9, 1909, $250,000.

Mr. BACON. I understand that this appropriation has no relation to the treaty which has been ratified by Panama but not ratified by Colombia—the tripartite treaty, as it is known?

Mr. HALE. This is the assumption, as the Senator remembers, by us of the $250,000 that Panama pays to Colombia for its cession of Colombian territory.

Mr. BACON. I understand that; but I say it in no manner relates to the provision of the treaty to which I have just alluded.

Mr. HALE. No; it does not in any way cover that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the amendment will be agreed to. The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, at the top of page 21, to insert:

INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITIONS AT ROME AND TURIN, ITALY.

To enable the United States to participate in the International Exposition of Art and History, to be held at Rome, Italy, and the International Exposition of Industry and Labor, to be held at Turin, Italy, during the calendar year 1911, in commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Kingdom of Italy, $130,000. All expenditures necessary in the participation of said expositions shall be made under the direction and control of the Department of State and shall be reported to the first regular session of Congress after the close of said expositions.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, at this point, on behalf of the Committee on Foreign Relations, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert after the amendment just agreed to the following:

INTERNATIONAL AUSTRO-HUNGARIAN EXPOSITION OF THE CHASE.

For cooperation in the International Austro-Hungarian Exposition of the Chase to be held in Vienna, Austria, beginning in May, 1910: For the collection, preparation, and transportation of specimens, objects, and materials necessary for said exposition; for salaries and traveling expenses and for rental of temporary quarters, workshops, and storage rooms in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, $50,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State of the United States and to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 21, after line 13, to insert:

BUREAU OF THE INTERPARLIAMENTARY UNION FOR THE PROMOTION OF INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION.

For contribution by the United States toward the maintenance of the Bureau of the Interparliamentary Union for the Promotion of International Arbitration, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 19, to insert:

FOREIGN TRADE AND TREATY RELATIONS.

The unexpended balance of the sum of $100,000 appropriated by the urgent deficiency act approved August 5, 1909, for defraying the necessary expenses incurred in connection with foreign trade relations which come within the jurisdiction of the Department of State, under tariff legislation and otherwise, and in the negotiation and preparation of treaties, arrangements, and agreements for the advancement of commercial and other interests of the United States, and for the maintenance of a division of far eastern affairs in the Department of State, including the payment of necessary employees, at the seat of government or elsewhere, to be selected, and their compensation fixed, by the Secretary of State, and to be expended under his direction, is hereby continued and made available until expended. A detailed statement showing expenditures, including salaries or rates of compensation paid, under this appropriation shall be reported to Congress by the Secretary of State on the first day of each regular session.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I presume the amendment is all right, but it is quite a long amendment, and it is impossible from the hasty reading to catch its full import. I notice that the salaries referred to therein are to be fixed by the Secretary of State. I was not able to catch fully the import of the amendment, and I should be glad if the Senator from Maine would make a statement in regard to it.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, all of the officers created by the general provision of last year under the terms of that provision have been reported in detail, and will be considered on the salary bill, when that comes up, as regular salaries. This provision continues for another year the $25,000 until it is expended, the same as the appropriation last year.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Maine please state what the officers are? I could not catch them.

Mr. HALE. There is a consul; there is a diplomatic agent; there are law clerks; there are in all some eight or nine officers at different salaries, all of which have been referred to the committee which considers the salaries under the provision of the salary bill of last year.

Mr. BACON. I understood, though, this amendment to authorize the Secretary of State to fix the salaries.

Mr. HALE. No; this is for the balance of $25,000 that has not already been expended. This continues in existence $25,000 of the $100,000 which we appropriated last year.

Mr. BACON. Why do we not fix the salaries?

Mr. HALE. Because the Secretary of State was not and is not ready; but the object is to continue this appropriation, so that at the next session of Congress, if any of this money is used, it will be reported as the $75,000 was reported in detail, and will go into the regular estimates under the salary bill. It only keeps alive this $25,000.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I recognize the fact, of course, that in the work of the State Department especially, a great deal has to be left to the discretion of that department in the way of expenditure; that we must necessarily in dealing with business in that department appropriate money, and leave the details in a degree to the Secretary of State; but when it comes to the matter of salaries for ascertained officers, I do not see why that is not strictly the business of Congress.

Mr. HALE. This deals with the $25,000 just as we dealt last year with the $75,000. The Secretary could not report because he was not ready and did not know just what he wanted; but we put him under restriction that he should report, as he did at the opening of this session, in detail for the $75,000. This treats the $25,000 in the same way.

Mr. BACON. Of course, I am not proposing to make any amendment to it; but I am calling attention to the matter because I do not think it is good practice. Possibly calling attention to it may guard it in the future. I think that when the salaries of ascertained officers are to be fixed Congress should do it. Of course, where there must be agents or representatives of any kind employed the number and duties of which are in a large measure undetermined, it is necessary that it should be left in the discretion of the department officer.

Mr. HALE. That is the whole thing. The Senator is right about it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported from the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

INCOME TAX.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I notice in the RECORD of yesterday that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN] had published the message of the governor of New Jersey relative to the proposed sixteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. In order that the people of the country may be informed of the subject in another way, I ask to have printed in the RECORD and also as a document an argument by a former Senator from Vermont, Mr. Edmunds, who is now a private citizen, and who writes with great force and clearness.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Jersey? The Chair hears none, and the request of the Senator from New Jersey is agreed to.

The document (S. Doc. No. 367) referred to is as follows:

A FORMER VERMONT SENATOR DESCRIBES THE POWER OF TAXATION AND DEFINES DIFFERENCE BETWEEN PROPERTY TAXES, DUTIES, AND IMPOSTS—IMPORTANCE OF THE RIGHTS THE STATES ARE ASKED TO SURRENDER—CONGRESS NOW HAS SUFFICIENT POWER TO RAISE REVENUE FOR FINANCING A GREAT WAR—DANGERS OF CENTRALIZATION.

Through the courtesy of Hon. WILLIAM P. DILLINGHAM, and with the consent of the author, the Journal is able to-day to present to its readers a letter on the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States, granting the power to Congress to impose income taxes without limitation. The full text of the letter is given herewith:

AIKEN, S. C., January 14, 1910.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Your kind note of 11th ultimo, suggesting that I state more fully the views that I expressed to you and Senator PAGE last summer on the subject of the proposed constitutional amendment giving Congress complete power to impose income taxes without any limitation whatever, was duly received.

This proposed amendment, of course, embraces the income from every species of property, whether national bonds, state bonds, municipal bonds, the income of churches and charitable institutions, as well as savings banks and all the other earnings of labor. In considering this subject in an orderly manner I shall state much that with you and Senator PAGE and many others goes, as the common phrase is, without saying.

THE POWER OF TAXATION.

The power of taxation is the fundamental power of governmental life; on it all the other powers and functions of government depend for their execution. The builders of our States and the creators of the Government of the United States knew this and felt it deeply. They knew and saw, perhaps more clearly than we do in these times of generous enthusiasm and excitement, the danger to the people of the different States, in their different situations, necessities, occupations, and internal policies, in the possible unequal and injurious exercise by Congress of the tremendous power of undefined and unlimited taxation. They saw that the inherent sovereignty and security of each State must be absolutely preserved except so far as power should be definitely granted to a common government exercising only the powers necessary to the safety and common defense and general welfare of all the States and people as finally described and specified in the Constitution of the United States.

The grants and limitations of the power of taxation and the raising of revenues by Congress were set forth in the Constitution as follows:

"All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives, but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills." (Art. I, sec. 7, par. 1.)

"The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States." (Art. I, sec. 8, par. 1.)

"No capitation or other direct tax shall be laid unless in proportion to the census of enumeration hereinbefore directed to be taken.

"No tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State." (Art. I, sec. 9, pars. 4, 5.)

Thus it will be seen that two explicit and fundamental rules governing the imposition by Congress of burdens upon the people of the several States were established: First, that taxes upon persons and property must be apportioned among the several States according to their respective populations; and, second, that the impositions arising from duties, imposts, and excises must be uniform throughout the United States.

DIFFERENT KINDS OF TAXATION.

The difference between a tax upon property of any and every kind—which is and must be inherently direct—and taxes imposed in the form of duties and excises is obvious in principle as well as in fact. The first kind of tax is and always must be upon things and rights, while the second is and always must be upon the doing of something which each person may do or refrain from doing at his own will and pleasure.

The land, the goods, or the money of a member of the community can not escape taxation by a change of ownership, for the tax adheres to the thing or right, and whether one person or another has it is of no consequence whatever. But with the tax in the form of a duty or excise it is very different. In the case of a duty it is the voluntary act of the importer in bringing into the country the goods that fixes the tax upon him, and it is the same with excise taxes.

No one is compelled by law to engage in the business of buying and selling merchandise, stocks, operating railways, or in any particular business whatever. If he chooses to do so, he submits himself of his own choice to any excise tax that may be uniformly laid upon that particular kind of business.

The framers of the Constitution clearly understood these distinctions and provided for the security of the internal rights of the people of the several States accordingly by requiring that in the imposition of poll and all other direct taxes they should be apportioned among the several States according to population, thus securing to the minorities of the people equality with the majorities of the people electing the House of Representatives, and thus controlling the kind and amount of the levies made.

RIGHTS OF THE STATES.

Now, after one hundred and twenty-one years of prosperity and vast increase in wealth and population, and, consequently, the vast increase in the numbers and power of the House of Representatives, it is proposed that the several States shall surrender to Congress the right to impose one kind of direct taxation without regard to the fundamental safeguard of proportional numbers secured to the several States as established in the present Constitution, and, indeed, in so sweeping and unlimited form as to grant to Congress the right to tax the very States themselves by impositions upon their bonds and other sources of revenue. It would be a less evil had the amendment provided for a complete annulment of the restrictive safeguard as applied to direct taxes of every kind.

For what reason is this great and radical change and surrender proposed?

Has the safety or common defense or general welfare of the people of the whole Union ever been endangered, or even injuriously affected, by the constitutional requirement as it now exists? We all know that they have not.

PROVISIONS FOR WAR REVENUES.

But it is said that in the future some vast war may arise when every financial resource of our common country must be available by taxation inaugurated by the House of Representatives. The Constitution provides this already. But the representation from each separate State in that House is based exclusively upon the numbers of its population. Then in the dreadful extremity foreseen by the prophets of to-day let the House of Representatives impose its direct taxation by the same constitutional rule and proportion that gives the States great in population a complete domination in the House of Representatives, which alone has the power to originate tax bills. So said the great statesmen and patriots who formed our Constitution and who knew the evil history of the centralization of power, both in monarchical and republican forms of government, exerting its malign influence as well from the fiery heat of great popular emotions as from the cold tyranny of a single despot.

STRONG BULWARK OF SAFETY.

At the present time the vast mass of the money wealth ("the sinews of war") of the whole Union exists, with perhaps one or two exceptions, in the more populous States; and it will naturally continue to be so.

We can not know what combinations of powerful interests or of powerful States may come into existence, perilous to the freedom and equality of the weaker communities or States, through the absorption, by what we call the General Government of more and more of the functions that have always belonged and still belong to the people of each of the several States, and on the retention of which by each State rests the very existence of our Union as it is. This great and strong bulwark of the safety of each State against the oppression of any State or number of States by majority of numbers once thrown down is lost forever. Plausible as some of the arguments advanced for such changes of power may be, I would, as a lover of my whole country and especially of my own dear State, resist them all.

Respectfully, yours, GEORGE F. EDMUNDS.

Hon. WILLIAM P. DILLINGHAM,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

PIPE LINES IN ARKANSAS.

Mr. OWEN. I wish to call up Senate bill 3544, returned on my request from the House of Representatives, with a view of moving a reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed on last Friday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (S. 3544) to grant right of way over the public domain in the State of Arkansas for oil or gas pipe lines, returned from the House of Representatives in compliance with the request of the Senate.

Mr. OWEN. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed be reconsidered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. OWEN. On page 2, line 2, before the word "line," I move to strike out the word "public," and in lieu thereof to insert the word "pipe." It is a typographical error.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I yield the floor to the Senator from Arkansas.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, this bill affects my State very materially. It was passed during my temporary absence from the Chamber on the 14th instant, without consideration of the Senate, or without the Senate knowing its true purpose or intent. For the purpose of advising the Senate along those lines, I ask your attention for a few moments.

This bill is for the purpose of establishing pipe lines to transmit oil and gas through the public lands of Arkansas. Of course, Mr. President, it is general in its terms, but I charge that it is in the direct interest of the Prairie Creek Oil and Gas Company, which is a part and parcel of the Standard Oil Company. That is not denied by the Senator from Oklahoma, and it was not denied before the committee having charge of this bill. Mr. President, I am not willing to sit idly in my seat and allow a bill to pass granting to the Standard Oil Company or to any of its subsidiary companies the right to transmit oil and gas through the public domain of my State without raising my voice in opposition.

In Arkansas, Mr. President, we have a very forceful and effective antitrust law. The pending bill provides that this company, while conducting their business and transmitting oil and gas, shall not violate the terms of the Sherman antitrust law. Is there a Senator upon this floor who can point me to a single instance where the Sherman antitrust law has ever turned one dollar of money into the Public Treasury of this country? I charge that the Sherman antitrust law has been helpless, has been impotent, has been powerless to check the grasping greed of the Standard Oil Company in its manipulation of its products so as to oppress the users thereof. I recall, of course, that in Chicago a fine of $29,000,000 was imposed against that company, but that judgment vanished as the mist does before the morning sun. No Senator here can point me to a single instance where any substantial good or any substantial benefit has been derived by the enforcement of the so-called "Sherman antitrust law." When the provision that the company should not violate the terms of the Sherman antitrust law was put in this bill it was thrown out as a sop to catch the votes of those Senators who would not dare to come out in the open and let their constituents know that they had voted for a measure granting any privilege or any right to this set of thieves and robbers, the Standard Oil Company.

Mr. President, we have an antitrust law in Arkansas, and, as I have said, it is a very forceful and very efficient one. The moment you permit this legislation to pass, the moment you give this Standard Oil Company a legal status, a legal standing in Arkansas, you bring into conflict federal and state jurisdiction. I am told that an act of Congress can not vitiate or set aside a state statute. I grant you that; but, sir, the very entry into the borders of our State of the Sandard Oil Company constitutes a breach of our antitrust act. The very moment that you permit them to cross our borders, the very moment that you permit them to construct this line and transmit their products, that very moment they become violators of the Arkansas antitrust law.

What will be the result, Mr. President, if an indictment follows when an act of Congress gives them the right to enter Arkansas and carry their products across our territory? Immediately, sir, a conflict between state and federal jurisdiction is brought about, very much to be regretted and deplored, and a thing that I can not believe any Senator upon this floor would be willing to sanction in this way. Just let me read you the provision of the Arkansas antitrust law. It is found in the acts of Arkansas of the session of 1905, on page 1, and it provides, in short, that—

Any corporation—

Mark the language, Senators—

Any corporation organized under the laws of this or any other State or country and transacting or conducting any kind of business in this State—

Would not the transmission of oil by means of a pipe-line system be transacting business within the meaning of this statute? I say it would. The act continues:

or any partnership or individual, or other association or persons whatsoever, who are now, or shall hereafter create, enter into, become a member of or a party to, any pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation, or understanding, whether the same is made in this State or elsewhere * * * shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy to defraud and be subject to the penalties as provided by this act—

And—

* * * shall forfeit not less than $200 nor more than $5,000 for every such offense, and each day such person, corporation, partnership, or association shall continue to do so shall be a separate offense.

* * * * * * * *

SEC. 3. Any corporation created or organized by or under the laws of this State which shall violate any of the provisions of the preceding sections of this act shall thereby forfeit its corporate rights and franchises, and its corporate existence shall, upon proper proof being made thereof in any court of competent jurisdiction in this State, be by the court declared forfeited, void, and of noneffect, and shall thereupon cease and determine; and any corporation created or organized by or under the laws of any other State or country which shall violate any provision of the preceding sections of this act shall thereby forfeit its right and privilege thereafter to do any business in this State.

Now, mark the language of this statute. It says that any corporation organized either in this State or in any other State or in any other country, and transacting or conducting any kind of business in Arkansas, that shall become a member of any pool, trust, agreement, or confederation shall be subject to the penalties of this act.

Now, Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma deny the fact that the Standard Oil Company is one of the most gigantic trusts, one of the most iniquitous trusts, one of the most damnable trusts that exists in this country to-day? By the very terms of the Arkansas antitrust act they can not come into Arkansas for the purpose of transacting any kind of business. Then will the Congress of the United States, by this special act, by this special legislation, grant to this combination the right to transact business in my State contrary to the statutes of that State?

The Prairie Creek Gas and Oil Company, Mr. President, is the same concern that has caused so much scandal in the State of Oklahoma. I remember full well when they attempted to lay their pipe lines in that State; the attorney-general of Oklahoma began proceedings of ouster and the governor of that State, Mr. Haskell, interfered in their favor, and such a scandal as arose from that transaction had never been heard of before; its stench arose to the very heavens, and the nostrils of the people of that State were filled with that stench; but onward Governor Haskell has gone, step after step, until he has been indicted by the federal court in that State. I am not here to say whether he is guilty or innocent, whether or not he ought to have been indicted; but I am here to say that just such legislation as this and just such favoritism as is sought to be given to the Standard Oil Company, under the guise and pretext that it is for the benefit of the Prairie Creek Oil and Gas Company, will bring about just another such scandal as the one in Oklahoma.

Mr. President, in Arkansas we do not want the Standard Oil Company. I would be glad to-day to drive it from our borders and let the little independent refiners transact the business of the country. The only place that I would consent that a pipe line might be constructed to carry the oil and gas of the Standard Oil Company would be straight from here to hell [laughter], and I would like to have John D. Rockefeller, the old he-trust magnate of them all, there to receive it; let it sweep around him and let its flames engulf him, just as they will at the final day.

Ah, Mr. President and Senators, before you bring this blot on Arkansas, before you bring this stain on my native State, I ask the Democrats here seriously, candidly to stop and weigh it well. I challenge a Democrat to vote in the open upon a roll call for this bill, aside from the Senator from Oklahoma, who, I am advised, has some business connections, perhaps, with the Prairie Creek Gas and Oil Company.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GAMBLE in the chair). Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the impudent speech of the Senator from Arkansas has no foundation in fact whatever.

Mr. DAVIS. My advice is that way; my informant may be incorrect, but the Senator sympathizes with them; he acts like he is interested; he talks like he is interested; and, by jingo, I believe he is interested. [Laughter.]

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, it is entirely immaterial to the Senator from Oklahoma what may be the opinion of the Senator from Arkansas. The exhibition that he is now making of himself before the country is sufficient to justify the comment of the Senator from Oklahoma that the opinion of the Senator from Arkansas is utterly worthless. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAVIS. That may be true, Mr. President; I may be making an exhibition before the country, but I thank God that I have never yet made an exhibition in favor of the Standard Oil Company. Petroleum stinks to me; it smells bad. I do not like petroleum, crude or refined; and, sir, before I make an exhibition in the interest of this gigantic monopoly may my right hand forget its cunning, may my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth, and may the mother that gave me birth disown me.

I am in dead earnest about this matter. [Laughter.] Pass this bill, Mr. President, and you at once invite a conflict in Arkansas that would, indeed, be unseemly. Pass this bill, and when we attempt to enforce this statute we will be met by the emissaries of the Standard Oil Company with an express grant from Congress that they may enter the borders of the State of Arkansas and transact business there.

Is there a lawyer here who will say that will not bring about a conflict? Mr. President, in my State in the early days we used to have on Saturdays pony horse races at a certain distance from the public highway, and in one community a certain old man by the name of "Uncle Billy" Barker—I remember him well—was always chosen as judge of the races on one side or the other. And for this reason: It was old Uncle Billy's theory of a horse race that if his side could not win he would break it up in a row. That was why he was chosen. I submit, if my contention as to the legal phase of this matter is not tenable, it will at least break this matter up in a row in the state and federal courts.

Now, Mr. President, I have said about all I care to say about this matter. Let each Senator answer for himself. Let the blood be upon you and your hands. I submit it without further comment.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I do not think any of the observations made by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS] deserve any reply whatever from the Senator from Oklahoma. This bill was recalled for the purpose of showing a courtesy to the Senator from Arkansas, who, having detained the consideration of the bill in committee meeting after committee meeting, complained finally when he was not present in the Senate on the day that the bill was passed, and that he desired to have opportunity to make some remarks upon it. It was therefore brought back on my motion for the purpose of giving him that opportunity. I leave it to the Senate whether he has deserved the courtesy.

This bill only provides that certain public lands, amounting, I believe, to fourteen or fifteen 40-acre tracts belonging to the United States, which can not be condemned by the ordinary proceedings, shall not obstruct the passage of a pipe line from Oklahoma to tide water, from the greatest oil field in the world to the markets of the world, but grants a right of way across these tracts of land belonging to the United States. Already the constructing company has nearly completed 400 miles of pipe line. Already they have been admitted into the State of Arkansas by the legally constituted authorities of Arkansas.

Mr. DAVIS. By what authority, may I ask?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. OWEN. I decline to yield to the Senator from Arkansas. The Senator from Arkansas has no claim upon the courtesy of the Senator from Oklahoma. He has forfeited such claim, and with it he has justly forfeited the respect of the Senator from Oklahoma, who desires him to remember that.

Mr. President, the matter before the Senate is striking out the word "public," in line 2 on page 2 of this bill, and inserting the word "pipe" in lieu thereof. The word "public" was a stenographic error, and should be corrected.

I have in my hand 75 telegrams from Oklahoma, praying the Senate of the United States, through the Senator from Oklahoma, that the oil producers of Oklahoma may have access to tide water for the products of their great oil field.

It was said by the Senator from Arkansas that it was not denied that the Standard Oil Company had something to do with the company which is constructing this pipe line. Not denied, because not material. I care nothing about it, nor whether the Standard Oil Company itself is constructing this pipe line. It is unbottling the great oil field of my State. No Senator from any other State would be justified in refusing the right of way across his State for the products of my State, and I would be recreant to my duty as a representative of that State if I should permit such an obstruction, if in my power to prevent it.

I ask that the bill be amended by striking out the word "public" and inserting the word "pipe."

Mr. PAYNTER. I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma a question.

Mr. OWEN. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNTER. Does this public land lie adjoining the State of Oklahoma?

Mr. OWEN. I do not know.

Mr. PAYNTER. I have no information at all upon the subject.

Mr. OWEN. I do not know.

Mr. DAVIS. I can answer the Senator from Kentucky. It does not.

Mr. PAYNTER. It would be necessary then, in order to reach this public land, to pass over private property, if the line is to be constructed from Oklahoma through the State of Arkansas.

Mr. OWEN. The right of way has been condemned across private property under the laws of the State of Arkansas. The pipe-line company has the permit of the secretary of state to do business in that State, and has paid the license fee required by the State of Arkansas of $5,000; have appointed their state agent at De Queen, in that State; and I understand that they have already under actual construction nearly 100 miles of this line in the State of Arkansas.

Mr. JONES. Will the Senator from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. OWEN. I do.

Mr. JONES. Is there anything in this bill which would permit any company coming in under its terms to interfere with or disregard any of the laws of Arkansas?

Mr. OWEN. Of course not.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have not examined this bill with particular care, and I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma if it is different from similar bills passed in relation to other States?

Mr. OWEN. No.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, just a word of explanation. The Senator from Oklahoma declares that this company has already been admitted into the State of Arkansas by legal authority. I deny that proposition. These are the facts: This company has bought certain private property through certain private lands. They have paid a charter fee to the secretary of state, as I understand, for the purpose of crossing these lands. Now, they have come to the point where they must cross public lands that belong to the Government. Were it only sought by this company to cross private lands under the right of eminent domain, or by purchase, then, of course, we could deal with that in Arkansas. But when they come to the proposition that Congress must be called upon to give them an affirmative act enabling them to cross these lands, then that at once brings into conflict the jurisdiction of the federal and state courts, as I have explained. This company has to-day no legal standing in Arkansas.

So far as concerns the respect of the Senator from Oklahoma that I have forfeited, I toss it to the winds. I never had any for him to begin with.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas a question for information.

Mr. DAVIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BACON. I did not fully catch the import of what the Senator from Oklahoma said as to the matter of condemnation. Has any land yet been condemned?

Mr. DAVIS. Private lands have been bought.

Mr. BACON. Under the law of Arkansas?

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. Then the law of Arkansas does permit this company to condemn lands within the State?

Mr. DAVIS. If a public corporation they may condemn; if a private corporation, as this is, they must buy the land.

The point I make, if the Senator from Georgia will hear me, is that when you pass this bill it gives them an act of Congress behind them, giving them an affirmative status in Arkansas.

Mr. BACON. The point I am after is this: When they are on lands which are not government lands, they must necessarily be there by authority of the State of Arkansas. They can not be there unless the State of Arkansas permits them.

Mr. DAVIS. I beg your pardon—by purchase from private individuals.

Mr. BACON. Have they condemned lands in Arkansas?

Mr. DAVIS. They could not condemn lands, being a private corporation.

Mr. BACON. I beg the Senator's pardon. They can not condemn private lands in Arkansas, except under authority of the State of Arkansas.

Mr. DAVIS. Arkansas has given them no authority, because we have had no legislature in two years; and they are not a public corporation, with power to condemn.

Mr. BACON. The Senator does not answer my question.

Mr. DAVIS. I am doing my best.

Mr. BACON. It is not asked for the purpose of controversy.

Mr. DAVIS. I understand that perfectly.

Mr. BACON. I want to know whether the Senator from Arkansas recognizes the fact that private lands can not be condemned for this purpose except by the authority of the State of Arkansas.

Mr. DAVIS. I spoke hastily a moment ago, and if the Senator from Georgia will allow me to recall that statement I will say that we have had no legislature in session for two years. They could not get authority from the State of Arkansas except by legislative enactment. My understanding is they have gone in and bought a right of way from private individuals and are not there by authority of the State. Does that answer the Senator's question?

Mr. BACON. It does not quite meet it. I am asking for information merely. The Senator contends that the Federal Government ought not to permit this company, or whatever organization it may be, to construct a pipe line across the public lands of the Government because it would conflict with the laws of the State to permit them to do so; and I was, for the purpose of securing information, asking the Senator, in order that he might throw light upon this question, whether or not they could get to the lands of the Government except in accordance with the laws of Arkansas. In other words, can they cross the private lands?

Mr. DAVIS. By purchase only.

Mr. BACON. Can they cross the private lands if their doing so is in conflict with the laws of Arkansas?

Mr. DAVIS. They can not cross private lands, of course, except by purchase or condemnation proceedings if they are a public corporation, which they are not. My understanding is in this case it is by purchase.

Mr. FRAZIER. I want to ask the Senator from Arkansas if this company or any corporation undertaking to do business in the State, in the way of the construction of a pipe line, can enter the State at all and do business, construct a pipe line, except by authority of the State, under the laws of the State?

Mr. DAVIS. Not if it is a member of any pool or trust. It would be in conflict with this statute.

Mr. FRAZIER. Is this company now in the State doing business by authority of the State?

Mr. DAVIS. It is not.

Mr. FRAZIER. Is it undertaking to establish a pipe line by authority of the State?

Mr. DAVIS. It is not.

Mr. OWEN. I will say they have constructed nearly a hundred miles through the State.

Mr. DAVIS. They have done it by private purchase.

Mr. FRAZIER. Under what authority?

Mr. OWEN. Under the general authority of the State, found in the statutes of Arkansas of 1904, chapter 31.

Mr. FRAZIER. It is usual for a foreign corporation doing business within a State to have to comply with certain provisions of the state law, to register its charter or otherwise. What I desire to know—and I merely ask the question in order to obtain information—is whether or not the statutes of Arkansas with respect to the powers of foreign corporations have been complied with by the corporation seeking this right of way?

Mr. OWEN. I am reliably informed the construction company has complied with the laws of Arkansas.

Mr. DAVIS. I am reliably informed they have not. There is no provision in the statutes of Arkansas cited by the Senator from Oklahoma permitting private corporations to condemn even private property for its use, and I challenge the Senator from Oklahoma to cite the section giving this authority, either in chapter 31, Kirby's Digest Laws of Arkansas, or elsewhere.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I desire to ask the Senator from Oklahoma a question.

Mr. OWEN. I ask leave to submit, with my remarks, telegrams sent to me from Oklahoma, and that they be published in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The telegrams referred to are as follows:

TULSA, OKLA., February 16, 1910.

Senator ROBERT L. OWEN, Washington, D. C.:

Please support amended pipe-line measures now before Congress. The relief offered under this bill means the salvation of the oil producers. Its defeat would be disastrous to the industry as well as to all other interests operating in Oklahoma.

OIL WELL SUPPLY COMPANY.

TULSA, OKLA., February 16, 1910.

Hon. R. L. OWEN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The people of this section are unanimously in favor of further development of oil industry, and pipe lines are essential to accomplish this. There are more than 40,000,000 barrels of oil now stored in this field awaiting a market or transportation to markets, and unless some relief is afforded, and at once, we may expect to see people suffering in the midst of the greatest oil production in the United States. You will serve every interest by exerting your utmost endeavor to pass the bill granting pipe lines the right of way across government lands.

WILLIAM STRYKER,
Editor Daily Democrat.

TULSA, OKLA., February 16, 1910.

Hon. ROBERT L. OWEN, Washington, D. C.:

We urgently request that you give full support to amended pipe-line bill. Business interests in Oklahoma demand its passage.

TULSA, OKLA., February 16, 1910.

Senator ROBERT L. OWEN, Washington, D. C.:

The amended pipe-line bill is of very great importance to the oil producers of this State, and your support is urgently requested in this matter.

PROGRESSIVE OIL COMPANY.

TULSA, OKLA., February 16, 1910.

Hon. R. L. OWEN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

A prompt passage of the bill authorizing the construction of pipe line across government lands in the State of Arkansas will be of great benefit to the producers of oil in Oklahoma and to the general welfare and prosperity of the citizens of that State. The refusal of Congress to pass the bill authorizing the construction of pipe lines across government lands in the State of Arkansas would not only greatly injure the production of oil in Oklahoma, but would be detrimental, indeed, to the welfare and prosperity of that State as a whole. Your influence toward an early passage of the bill authorizing the construction of pipe lines across government lands in the State of Arkansas will, indeed, be appreciated by the producers of oil in Oklahoma and will be of great benefit to this State as a whole.

TATE BRADY,
National Committeeman.

GEO. W. ADAMS.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish to ask the Senator from Oklahoma a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. OWEN. I do.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I understand the purpose of this bill is to get an outlet for the oil products of the Senator's State to the seaboard.

Mr. OWEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does it go through Texas, or does it go down through Louisiana?

Mr. OWEN. Through Arkansas and Louisiana, but not through Texas.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I can not just see how Arkansas comes in. I am looking at the map.

Mr. OWEN. It passes through the southwest part of Arkansas and across Red River and goes down through Louisiana.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I see. It does not go through Texas?

Mr. OWEN. The constructed pipe lines from the Oklahoma oil fields pass also through Kansas and Missouri and Illinois and Indiana and Ohio and Pennsylvania, as well as New Jersey, and none of those States has attempted to obstruct the oil from Oklahoma.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Wait a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. OWEN. The Senator from Oklahoma declines to yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. DAVIS. I did not ask the Senator to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma has the floor.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. OWEN. I do.

Mr. JONES. Is there any provision in this bill that would relieve any foreign corporation from complying fully with the statutes of Arkansas before doing business in that State?

Mr. OWEN. None whatever.

This bill was introduced into the Senate by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], in the House by Mr. CRAVENS, a Member of Congress from Arkansas. It was favorably reported from the Committee on Public Lands by Mr. ROBINSON, a Member of Congress from Arkansas. They all seem to favor the violation of the statutes of Arkansas, if the contention of the Senator [Mr. DAVIS] has merit—which it has not—and the wonderful thing is that the secretary of state of Arkansas also favors the violation of the statutes of Arkansas. This bill is in accordance with the same kind of bills passed heretofore. There is no reason on earth why it should not pass unanimously, including both Senators from Arkansas.

Mr. PAYNTER. How could you get your oil to the seaboard except by a pipe line if not by the use of the railroads?

Mr. OWEN. Through the air; by requiring it to flow from the well with such velocity that it will never stop flowing, through the circumambient atmosphere, until it landed at the seaboard.

Mr. PAYNTER. But if that method did not exist, you would have to transport it by railroad.

Mr. OWEN. A pipe line is the only practicable way to do it.

Mr. STONE. The Senator from Oklahoma was about to read a provision of the statutes of Arkansas.

Mr. OWEN. There is a chapter, chapter 31, Statutes of Arkansas, 1904, dealing with foreign corporations, which sets forth fully the rights of foreign corporations; and I simply called attention to it to show that the laws of Arkansas are like those of other States requiring corporations doing business in that State to do so under reasonable restrictions. That is all.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator let me ask him a question?

Mr. OWEN. With pleasure.

Mr. CLAY. Do the laws of Arkansas authorize the condemnation of private citizens' property for the purpose of constructing a pipe line of this character?

Mr. OWEN. They do.

Mr. CLAY. Has the company under the law of Arkansas organized and condemned private property and put down the pipe line under the law?

Mr. OWEN. I am so advised by reliable authority, and I have no doubt of it.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Oklahoma says this bill was introduced by my colleague, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE]. The history of that matter, as I understand it, is that it was introduced by the Senator [Mr. CLARKE] at the request of James K. Jones, jr., who is a stockholder and perhaps a director in this pipe-line company. I do not know the views of my colleague, Senator CLARKE. I would hesitate long before I would disagree with him on matters of expediency, but when it comes to a matter of duty as I see it, I do not hesitate to disagree with him.

I say this company has no legal status in Arkansas to-day. I say that a pipe line can not condemn private land in Arkansas for the purpose of crossing it. They have to do it by purchase, and that is the way this line has been constructed thus far, and that is where they have come to a hitch now; they want to cross public lands.

While I am on my feet—and I do not expect to say another word—in answer to the Senator from Indiana to the question propounded to the Senator from Oklahoma, I will say that perhaps the object of this corporation is to go to the seaboard in a way, in the dim distant future sometime, but the primary object, the real object, the present intention, of this company is to construct this pipe line to the city of Little Rock, my home town, the capital of our State. I have advices from there, and I see from the daily press that they are dickering through the board of trade for a site to establish an oil station in the city of Little Rock. This is a mere subterfuge, a mere dodge, that they only want to cross this little bit of public land in order to get to the seaboard to empty this great volume of oil. Their object, gentlemen, is to get Congress to give them a legal status by permitting them to cross this little piece of land, and then turn to the city of Little Rock, and there establish an oil station, by authority of an act of Congress. Our daily papers in Little Rock are full of it. I have telegrams and letters on my desk announcing that purpose.

This is but a means to accomplish that which they do not dare to announce publicly. They say they want to go to the seaboard to empty this great volume of oil. They want to get to Little Rock and there establish an oil station.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, the purpose of this bill, as I understand, is merely to authorize this company, whatever it is, to construct its line across certain lands owned by the United States. That is the full extent of the authority conferred by this bill—the right of way across these public lands. Am I right as to that?

Mr. DAVIS. You are. That is what it pretends to be.

Mr. STONE. Now, I will ask the Senator from Arkansas if it be true, as he seems to think, that the very presence of this corporation, proposing to construct this line, in the State of Arkansas, is violate of the law of that State——

Mr. DAVIS. The antitrust law.

Mr. STONE. If that be true, then I ask the judgment of the Senator as to this: In what way would the mere grant by Congress to the corporation of the right to cross the public lands of the United States affect the right of Arkansas in the enforcement of its own law, and affect the condemnation of private lands under the law of eminent domain or the construction and operation of work within the borders of the State?

Mr. DAVIS. I am very pleased to answer the question of the Senator from Missouri. I did not expect, however, a speech to be made in the interest of the bill in asking a question. But I will try to answer it.

I have tried to explain to the Senate my views upon this subject—that the granting of this right of way by the Government gives this company, the Standard Oil Company, an additional right in Arkansas that it does not possess to-day. They have no right of way in Arkansas to-day. They have no legal status in Arkansas to-day by an act of Congress. Just turn these gentlemen over to Arkansas, and let us run the matter without any federal interference. It may be possible——

Mr. PILES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly.

Mr. PILES. Understanding this bill as I do, that it merely grants to this company the right to cross the public domain in Arkansas, how will this company get any rights under this bill to do business in Little Rock?

Mr. DAVIS. It permits them by act of Congress to obtain access to the city of Little Rock.

Mr. PILES. But only through——

Mr. DAVIS. And the very admission by the Senator from Oklahoma on this floor is that they can not get to their desired destination, which he says is the seaboard, without going over public land. I charge their destination is not the seaboard, but Little Rock, and they have grabbed this little thing as a subterfuge, hoping it will give them a legal status in Arkansas that will enable them to fight successfully the antitrust laws of Arkansas.

Mr. PILES. Accepting that view of the case as correct, I can not see how this act of Congress would give the corporation any standing in Arkansas. It simply gives them the right to go through the public lands. If it is to go to Little Rock and do business there, it can go there and do business there only under the laws of Arkansas; and even if the Government gives it the right to pass through the public domain in Arkansas it can not stay in Arkansas and do business in Arkansas unless the laws of the State of Arkansas permit it to do so.

Mr. DAVIS. I have tried to make that point as clear as the English language would enable it to be made, and I am sorry the Senator from Washington does not understand it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. FRAZIER. I notice that, according to the terms of this bill, it grants to any citizen of the United States or any corporation the right to construct a pipe line over these government lands. I desire to ask the Senator from Arkansas or the Senator from Oklahoma——

Mr. DAVIS. Do not ask us both at once.

Mr. FRAZIER. They are both credible witnesses, and they disagree with perfect unanimity. I should like to ask if the corporation that is now seeking this right of way over public lands is a public corporation or a private corporation. If it is a private corporation, or if it is a private individual or combination of individuals, I understand it could not condemn lands in the State of Arkansas, under the Arkansas law, and take possession of the land for the purpose of building a pipe line. If it is a public corporation, over whose line any oil dealer might be enabled to transport his product, I apprehend it could condemn the land.

Mr. DAVIS. There is no doubt about that, but it is a private corporation and can not condemn land.

Mr. FRAZIER. I ask for information as to what are the facts in respect to that.

Mr. DAVIS. With respect to whether it is a public or private corporation?

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS. It is a private corporation. Let me answer the question which the Senator from Tennessee asked me just before he took his seat, and also answer the Senator from Washington. I think I can do it now a little more clearly than I did a little while ago.

The moment that you get this grant of Congress for this pipe line to go over any portion of Arkansas you bring about confusion between state and federal jurisdiction, and it will be taken from the courts of the State into the federal courts and through the various channels of federal jurisdiction until it finally lands in Washington before the Supreme Court of the United States.

While I am answering that I want to say, Mr. President, that in a recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Hammond Packing Company v. The State of Arkansas, the Supreme Court of the United States sustained every letter, every word, and every syllable of the Arkansas antitrust act by a unanimous decision of that court. Justice White, delivering the opinion of the court, sustained every word and every syllable of it, and yet Senators here turn up their noses and sneer at this law, when the federal court, the highest in the Government of the United States, says the law is absolutely constitutional in every feature.

Texas copied this law, and Texas under the provisions of their statute collected $1,800,000 in actual penalty from this corporation. It took two automobiles to carry the money and the guards from the banks to the state treasurer in Austin. I would rather have been the attorney-general of Texas collecting that money from the Standard Oil Company; I would rather have that record to my credit to-day than to be the President of the United States. Talk to me about an antitrust law! The Arkansas antitrust law is the best one ever written upon the statute books of any State in the Union. The object of this old he trust, the Standard Oil Company, is to get it in a conflict in some way with a federal statute, so that they can slip around. An old, sly fox is John D. Rockefeller, and he has so many friends in court and out of court that it is difficult to handle him.

Gentlemen, I ask you to pause before you pass this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 2, strike out "public," before "line," and insert "pipe."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and it was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. DAVIS. On that question I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The bill was passed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by M. C. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts and joint resolutions:

On February 11, 1910:

S. J. Res. 59. Joint resolution providing for the filling of vacancies, which occurred on January 27, 1910, in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution of the class other than Member of Congress.

On February 15, 1910:

S. 2523. An act for the establishment of a new land district in the State of Montana;

S. 5238. An act to abolish the United States land office at Des Moines, Iowa; and

S. J. Res. 66. Joint resolution amending section 18 of the act of July 2, 1909, entitled "An act to provide for the thirteenth and subsequent decennial censuses."

INCREASED COST OF LIVING.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Pursuant to the authority conferred by Senate resolution No. 165, authorizing an investigation by a committee of the Senate into the cost of living and any increase in the same since 1900, and whether the price of the necessaries of life which enter into the general use and consumption of the people have, since that year, increased, and so forth, the Chair appoints as the committee Mr. LODGE, Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. SMOOT, Mr. CRAWFORD, Mr. SIMMONS, and Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the Library:

H. R. 2265. An act for the erection of a memorial monument at Fort Recovery, Ohio; and

H. R. 11580. An act for the erection of a monument over the grave of Brig. Gen. James Shields, in St. Mary's Cemetery, Carrollton, Mo.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

H. R. 16037. An act to amend section 810 of the Revised Statutes;

H. R. 16342. An act to amend section 876 of the Revised Statutes; and

H. R. 18902. An act to amend an act approved August 13, 1894, entitled "An act relative to recognizances, stipulations, bonds, and undertakings, and to allow certain corporations to be accepted as surety thereon."

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGE IN OHIO.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1043) providing for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the northern judicial district of the State of Ohio.

The amendments were, in line 4 to strike out "who" and insert "and there shall be in the southern judicial district of the said State an additional district judge; each;" in line 6 to strike out "who" and insert "they;" in line 7 to strike out "whose" and insert "their;" in line 9 to strike out "the" and insert "any;" after line 10 to insert:

SEC. 2. That section 2 of an act to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the southern district of the State of Ohio, approved February 25, 1907, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act providing for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the northern judicial district of the State of Ohio, and an additional district judge in and for the southern judicial district of the State of Ohio."

Mr. BURTON. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

STATUE OF GEORGE LAIRD SHOUP.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to Senate concurrent resolution No. 23, which was, in line 9, to strike out "Representatives" and insert "Representative," so as to make the concurrent resolution read:

Senate concurrent resolution 23.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound in one volume 16,500 copies of the proceedings in Congress upon the acceptance of the statue of the late George Laird Shoup, of which 5,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 10,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and the remaining 1,500 shall be for use and distribution by the Senators and Representative in Congress from the State of Idaho.

The Joint Committee on Printing is hereby authorized to have the copy prepared for the Public Printer, who shall procure a suitable copper-process plate of the statue to be bound with these memorials.

Mr. HEYBURN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS-METHODS COMMISSION.

Mr. BOURNE. I should like to call up the bill (S. 6168) creating a government business-methods commission, for the purpose of making a few remarks relative thereto.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, believing that intelligent economy is a prerequisite for national, community, or individual prosperity and general welfare, I am of the opinion that the enactment of Senate bill No. 6168 is of as much importance as any proposed legislation now before Congress.

Last July I wrote an article for the Outlook, which was published in its issue of October 9 last, giving my views on the necessity and probable resultants from the creation of the Senate Committee on Public Expenditures, and for the purpose of getting these views before Congress and better before the country by having it appear in the RECORD, will now read the article, which is captioned "How to spend a billion dollars."

"HOW TO SPEND A BILLION DOLLARS.

[By JONATHAN BOURNE, Jr., United States Senator from Oregon.]

"For the past twenty years governmental expenditures have been growing entirely out of proportion to the increase in population and the increase in revenues from all sources. We have now come to the billion-dollar session, and are approaching the two-billion-dollar Congress; and, with expenditures increasing at a much greater rate than receipts, the Government is confronted by the necessity for increasing revenues or decreasing expenditures.

"The reader's attention is earnestly directed to the following tables, showing, by decennial periods, the population, governmental revenues from all sources, appropriations, and the increase of each over the amount at the preceding decennial period:

	Population.	Per cent of increase.
1880	50,155,783
1890	62,622,250	24
1900	75,994,575	21
1910 (estimated)	89,620,555	18

	Revenues from all sources.	Per cent of increase.
1880	$370,439,697.52
1890	470,063,080.55	27
1901	675,845,451.13	43
1910 (estimated)	825,340,712.00	22

	Appropriations for all purposes.	Per cent of increase.
1880	$372,119,629.30
1890	385,522,367.61	3.6
1900	690,667,188.54	79
1910	1,044,401,857.12	54

"If these tables were projected for a period of a few years, they would show a steadily increasing deficit and the necessity for borrowing money to pay running expenses in times of peace—a condition which has been resorted to but once since the civil war. When Tom Reed silenced criticism of the 'billion-dollar Congress' by saying that this is a billion-dollar country, the public was apparently satisfied, because there was then a closer relation than now between receipts and expenditures.

"Congress appropriates out of the Treasury all money to run the Government. These appropriations are based upon estimates of annual expenses for the next fiscal year. The various committees of House and Senate which handle appropriations study the estimates, which are submitted by all the departments through the Secretary of the Treasury, and prepare the various appropriation bills that provide for money to run the Government the ensuing year.

"Up to the present time there has been no limitation upon the estimates that the head of each department could submit to Congress, neither has there been any person or committee with authority to revise or to reconsider these estimates before they were submitted to Congress. It was probably the intention of the statesmen in the early days of the Republic to give some supervisory power of this kind to the Secretary of the Treasury when it was provided by law that the estimates for the next fiscal year should be sent to the Secretary of the Treasury, and he in turn should make up a book of estimates for the whole Government and submit the same to Congress. It was probably thought that the Secretary of the Treasury, having charge of the Government's money and being fully informed as to the receipts from all sources and the condition of the Treasury, would exert some sort of influence to keep the estimates within the bounds of the Government's income. But whatever the intentions of the early fathers were, no such power is to-day exercised by the Secretary of the Treasury. He is simply a coordinate member of the Cabinet, and it would probably precipitate a nice family row if he were to send back the estimate made by some department with instructions to cut it down to make it compatible with the condition of the Treasury.

"Congress, of course, authorizes certain work by the departments, but the departments can estimate for as much clerical assistance or for as many supplies as, in the judgment of the Secretary of each department, they will need. The departments have been especially anxious to have their appropriations made in lump sums rather than have them made for specific purposes. A lump-sum appropriation gives the head of a department much more latitude in his expenditures than is given him by specific appropriations. Congress has gradually, however, been limiting more and more these lump-sum appropriations, and has been demanding of the departments specific estimates.

"When these estimates are in the hands of the various committees, and the committees get to work, they call before them the heads of the various departments and have hearings on all items for which estimates are made. To each Cabinet officer his department probably seems the most important of all the departments. He, of course, gets wrapped up in his particular work, and becomes enthused over certain results which he thinks can be accomplished by his department, and naturally brings every pressure to bear that he can to get the money necessary to carry on his work.

"With nine departments, each containing many bureaus, it is easy to see what a tremendous pressure is brought upon Congress for money; and during the sessions of Congress, when appropriation bills are being considered by the various appropriation committees, the duties of members of these committees are not altogether pleasant. Congress is sometimes unjustly blamed for not taking up various reforms. It is an easy matter to suggest many great and good things that could be accomplished by the Government, and this is done by many people, sometimes backed up by the press, when the little detail of how to get the money to pay for these things is entirely overlooked. Therefore, when the Treasury statistics began to indicate a year or so ago that the expenses of the Government were exceeding the income, and that very soon the Treasury would be depleted, it became necessary for Congress to determine some method of solving the problem.

"The Sixty-first Congress inserted a provision in one of the appropriation bills requiring that when estimates of expenditures for the next fiscal year are submitted to Congress if these estimates exceed the estimated receipts for the same period, then it shall be the duty of the President to recommend to Congress some means of reducing the expenditures without undue injury to the public service, or, if this be not practicable, then of increasing the funds of the Government by the imposition of new taxes or by negotiation of loans.

"This provision of law was thought by many to be a wise one, as the executive departments spend the money, and they are under the direct control of the President in carrying out the provisions of law enacted by Congress. This view, of course, has some merit in it, but is not entirely a correct one, as the departments are bound to carry out the provisions of law authorizing certain work and improvements, and if Congress authorizes larger expenditures than are warranted by the condition of the Treasury, that branch of the Government ought to share the burden of meeting and remedying the conditions.

"PUBLIC EXPENDITURES COMMITTEE CREATED.

"This general financial aspect induced the Senate during the special session of the Sixty-first Congress to create a committee called the Public Expenditures Committee, consisting of Senator HALE, acting chairman, and Senators ALDRICH, WARREN, PERKINS, PENROSE, DOLLIVER, CLAPP, NELSON, GAMBLE, CRANE, CARTER, BOURNE, CUMMINS, BURTON, ROOT, MCLAURIN, NEWLANDS, OWEN, FLETCHER, and HUGHES. The first seven members of the committee are the chairmen of the seven committees in the Senate, to some one of which every bill providing for revenue or carrying an appropriation is submitted. Thus is provided a medium for better coordination and cooperation between what may be termed the revenue and appropriation committees. The powers of existing committees are not affected, but an avenue is provided for concentration and distribution of information—a committee forum for the discussion and recommendation of fundamentals affecting the Government, such as standardization, centralization, simplification, elimination of duplications—in short, the application, wherever possible, of business principles to the conduct of the Government.

"The duties of this committee are thus described in a resolution agreed to by the Senate on May 29, 1909:

"'Resolved, That the Committee on Public Expenditures be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed, by subcommittee or otherwise, to make investigations as to the amount of the annual revenues of the Government, and as to the expenditures and business methods of the several departments, divisions, and branches of the Government, and to report to the Senate from time to time the result of such investigations and their recommendations as to the relation between expenditures and revenues and possible improvements in government methods; and for this purpose they are authorized to sit, by subcommittees or otherwise, during the recesses or sessions of the Senate, at such times and places as they may deem advisable, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ such stenographic, clerical, expert, and other assistance as may be necessary, and to have such printing and binding done as may be necessary, the expense of such investigations to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.'

"The creation of this committee and the enactment of the provision of law referred to above, throwing certain responsibilities upon the President, bid fair to be landmarks in regulating governmental financial operations.

"Various committees of Congress have from time to time made governmental investigations, but never before has either branch of Congress created a permanent committee with such important and extensive duties as those with which this new committee is charged. It is true that in 1814 there was created in the House of Representatives a Public Expenditures Committee, but after two years its duties were divided among six other committees, which have since been increased to ten—one on the expenditures in each of the nine departments of the Government and one on expenditures on public buildings. These various House committees appear to be clothed with ample power to supervise expenditures, but as yet satisfactory and practical results have not come from their creation. Reforms along this line must come from some central committee with authority to supervise the expenditures of all departments, and not from ten separate committees, each working independently of every other, because out of this very method of many independent units in the government departments have largely come the difficulties and unsystematic methods of government business.

"PRACTICE IN OTHER COUNTRIES.

"The English House of Commons has a committee with duties in part similar to the duties of the new Senate Committee on Public Expenditures; that is, the committee on public accounts of the House of Commons, whose duty it is to follow up all appropriations and make a careful examination into any apparently irregular expenditure. In England, in the last two months of every year, the estimates for the army and navy and the civil service are presented by the departments concerned separately to the treasury. There they must be considered and approved. If approved, the chancellor of the exchequer then submits the same to the House of Commons sitting as the committee of supply. If as such committee the House of Commons "agrees" to the estimates, then the House sits as the committee of ways and means and votes the appropriations. There are in England also the auditor and comptroller, who perform similar duties to those of the American auditor and comptroller, but it is apparent from the annual reports of the committee on public accounts of the House of Commons that they find valuable work to be done along the line of investigating expenditures. Their annual report is voluminous and is filled with much information, and it would appear that much of the system of this committee could be very well adopted by the Committee on Public Expenditures of the United States Senate. In France the Cour des Comptes controls the finances and examines accounts judicially, and makes reports to the Chamber as to irregularities of the law of the budget. France also has an audit system similar to other nations. In Germany, Italy, and several other European nations are courts of accounts with general authority and control over public expenditures. These governments, being older than ours, and having had longer experience, have found that the ordinary system of governmental audit and control is not sufficient. In our own Government an auditor investigates the accuracy and a comptroller the legality of appropriations, but heretofore no administrative, representative, or legislative committee has been specifically empowered with general authority to consider their relative propriety.

"GOVERNMENT A BUSINESS CONCERN.

"Many people seem to have the idea that the Government is some sort of mystical piece of machinery endowed with many powers little less than supernatural and excepted from all laws of profit and loss that govern the common mortal. But the truth of the matter is that the Government is a huge business concern. This is very apparent to those who have spent some time in Washington and have seen the Government, through its officials, taking the money for the sale of public lands, patent fees, copyright fees, head tax, timber, mineral, and fishing rights, custom-house receipts, and from other sources too numerous to mention, and then witnessed the expenditure of this money for clerks, stenographers, typewriters, accountants, telephone and telegraph service, stationery—in fact, everything from a lead pencil to a battle ship.

"In one sense the United States is the largest business corporation in the world. Viewing it as such, and estimating it to have a capital of $140,000,000,000, which I estimate as our national wealth, 90,000,000 stockholders as the probable population, Congress as the board of directors, the President's Cabinet as the executive committee (with the difference that the Cabinet members have no legislative vote), and the President as chairman of the executive committee, the desideratum is seen to be the application of the best-known business principles to the conduct of the Government.

"When it is noted that the appropriations for the fiscal year 1910 are over a billion dollars, exceeding the estimated revenues for that year by over $200,000,000, it will immediately be seen that the Government must either increase its income or reduce its expenses. One of the functions of the Committee on Public Expenditures should be to ascertain whether all the estimated expenditures are immediately necessary for the proper maintenance of the Government, and if not, what proportion of the same could be postponed without militating against governmental efficiency, and especially to investigate and ascertain where improved business methods could be adopted to secure increased efficiency in the departments of the Government.

"It is true that Congress alone has the power to make appropriations, but the responsibility for the appropriations must be partially borne by the administrative branch of the Government, as the estimates are made by the administrative departments and submitted to Congress. The departmental estimates form the skeleton on which congressional appropriations are made. And probably two evils exist—the desire of the departments to secure as large appropriations as possible and the desire of the Member of Congress to secure for his district or State as large a share of the 'pork barrel' as possible.

"That Congress has been extravagant in the past is apparent when one considers that the House of Representatives has almost 400 Members and the Senate 92, most of whom seem to be interested in getting appropriations for their districts and States aside from the permanent government appropriations. Perhaps no one thing has caused more criticism of Congress in the past than the "pork-barrel bills," of which the rivers and harbors bill and the public building bill are notable examples. It will be seen that much reform along this line can be accomplished by Congress itself. These reforms will be difficult to work out until Members of Congress and their constituents take a broad national view of all matters of legislation and are not willing to sacrifice national good for their own local popularity and advantage.

"EXTRAVAGANCE ENCOURAGED.

"The truth of the matter is that until a short time ago the Government had been so prosperous and there had been so much money in the Treasury that extravagance was encouraged. A feeling existed in the various departments that they should ask Congress for all the money they could hope to get, and then spend every cent they got. More than this, the departments formerly came to Congress with great deficiency statements and asked for additional money to pay expenses of the previous year. This custom became so general that they paid little attention to the regular appropriations and expected Congress to make good the deficiencies. To stop this, Congress enacted a provision directing that no deficiencies be created except under extraordinary circumstances arising out of unforeseen conditions involving the loss of life or destruction of property. The creating of a deficiency for the ordinary expenses of the Government was prohibited. This resulted in a saving of millions of dollars annually. In my opinion, a still further improvement would be gained if Congress prohibited all deficiencies, unless specifically authorized by the President.

"In addition to the great good the Committee on Public Expenditures can do by arousing in Congress a more hearty cooperation in limiting appropriations to the actual needs of the Government and in enacting legislation with a view to national rather than local interests, it is probable that this committee can accomplish material results by stimulating the departments, by legislation or otherwise, to adopt improved business methods. There are at present nine departments of the Government, each containing many bureaus, and these, together with the Government Printing Office, Smithsonian Institution, the Congressional Library, and the Interstate Commerce Commission, comprise each a separate unit of business. In many instances each bureau has it own particular methods of purchasing supplies and transacting its public business. Within the last three years an investigation by the Keep Commission along this line showed that the Government was purchasing 28 different kinds of ink, 278 different kinds of pens, 11 different kinds of typewriter ribbons, and 132 different grades of pencils. One department was paying $1.70 per dozen quarts for ink, another was paying $3.70 per dozen quarts. This was a fair example of the lack of standardization and system in the government service, and when it is recalled that each Congress is appropriating over a billion dollars which is spent in this irregular, haphazard, and unsystematic way, it can readily be seen that the time is at hand for improvements. It would seem that there is great opportunity for simplification, centralization, and standardization in governmental methods.

"Of fraud in the government service there can at present be but very little. The government officials are, as a rule, high-class men, and the great majority of government clerks are efficient, capable, and honest. But the Government has grown so rapidly that it is questioned by many whether or not the departments have been able to keep up with modern methods in the conduct of their business. This will present to the committee many problems for solution, which will probably result in various readjustments of governmental methods.

"Some of the large appropriations for the last fifteen years can be explained by the expense incident to the Spanish-American war and the expense of carrying out the reform legislation under President Roosevelt's administration. These explanations, however, do not suffice for many heavy appropriations. But whatever the cause of this tremendous increase in expenditures, or however justifiable it may be, there is presented the question of a probable deficit in the Treasury. Whatever has been done, the money that has been spent can not be recovered. But the time is at hand when the people of this country will demand of Congress that economy be practiced and that the best business methods be installed in all the government departments. The people of the United States do not want their Government run on a parsimonious policy, nor are we a penny wise and pound foolish public, but Americans are probably the most practical people in the world, and when their attention is properly called to this subject they will demand economical management.

"There is no incident of government that comes home to people any stronger than the subject of taxation, and this whole matter is so closely related to taxation that it is of great public concern, because, if reforms are not adopted along this line, the citizens will soon be paying direct taxes to run the Government.

"GOVERNMENT'S MONEY IS PEOPLE'S MONEY.

"After all, the most important consideration is not the amount of money taken in by an individual or the Government, but the amount that is spent and the manner in which it is spent. The Government's money is the people's money, and the Government's business is the people's business. Certainly the people are entitled to know that their money is being expended according to the best known business methods and that not a dollar is needlessly wasted. In this matter, as well as in many others, the Government of the United States sets an example to its individual citizens. In this matter of improving the business methods of the Government and limiting extravagant appropriations the general public ought to give strong support to Congress, for this is good administration and for the benefit of the whole people. Viewing it from the standpoint of party policy, it is my judgment that good administration is the best politics, and, in fact, no other kind of politics should receive the approval or indorsement of any public official. But this, as is the case with many other reforms, passes out of the class of partisan politics and enters the realm of general national welfare.

"The Committee on Public Expenditures of the United States Senate establishes a medium in the legislative branch of the Government for unified collation of data and dissemination of information. It should also act as a further medium for the better cooperation and coordination of the legislative and administrative branches of the Government. Its functions do not necessarily infringe upon or minimize the powers of any other committees, and especially those committees to which appropriation bills are referred. It is not a committee of espionage, either on other committees of Congress or on the administrative branch of the Government, but a committee of coordination and cooperation.

"Therefore it can readily be seen that probably the most important committee that has been created in Congress in many years is the new Senate Committee on Public Expenditures."

Mr. President, in order that Congress and the country may follow the evolution of the Committee on Public Expenditures, I will now read the report of the subcommittee made to the full committee, from the adoption of which Senate bill 6168 is one of the resultants, as the senior Senator from Rhode Island was instructed by the committee to introduce said bill in the Senate as a committee bill.

The subcommittee's report is as follows:

To the Committee on Public Expenditures:

The Committee on Public Expenditures was charged by the resolution of the Senate creating the committee "to make investigations as to the amount of the annual revenues of the Government, and as to the expenditures and business methods of the several departments, divisions, and branches of the Government, and to report to the Senate from time to time the result of such investigations and their recommendations as to the relation between expenditures and revenues and possible improvements in government methods."

On the 20th day of May, 1909, the acting chairman of the committee appointed as a subcommittee of the Committee on Public Expenditures Senators BOURNE, ALDRICH, CARTER, ROOT, MCLAURIN, and HUGHES "to suggest and report to the full committee upon the method and order of procedure of the full committee in the transaction of its public business."

Upon consultation between members of the subcommittee and the acting chairman of the full committee the conclusion was reached on the 2d of June that it would be expedient for the subcommittee "to secure and lay before the full committee such data as shall be appropriate to determine the scope and character of the committee's action."

The subcommittee met during the remainder of the extraordinary session of Congress as frequently as the engrossing nature of the duties of the session permitted and discussed very fully the subject with the consideration of which it was charged. Senator BOURNE was selected as chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. Thomas P. Littlepage as clerk of the subcommittee, and Mr. R. H. Turner as assistant clerk of the subcommittee at a salary of $100 per month; and on the 3d day of August, the Senate being about to separate during the summer, on motion of Senator

ALDRICH, a smaller subcommittee, consisting of Senators BOURNE, ROOT, and HUGHES, was appointed to continue the work of the Subcommittee on Public Expenditures and to report from time to time the result of their conclusions.

This smaller subcommittee has continued the work and has accumulated a large amount of material and data which it believes to be valuable, which has been laid before the subcommittee and which is at the service of the full committee.

In the opinion of the subcommittee the course of procedure of the full committee should be based upon a recognition of the essential distinction between the work of the existing appropriation committees and the special duties indicated by the resolution of the Senate for the action of the Committee on Public Expenditures. Clearly, it should not be regarded as the function of this committee to duplicate the duties of the appropriation committees or to undertake supervision of their action.

MEANS OF COORDINATION PROVIDED.

There is, however, one service which the new committee may render to the existing Appropriation Committees—a service which is suggested by the presence of the chairmen of all the Appropriation Committees in the new committee. That service will afford an opportunity for the existing Appropriation Committees to coordinate their work, and through a recognized established machinery to confer and reach common conclusions regarding appropriations as to which there may be danger of duplication or doubt as to the particular agency of the Government, which should properly be charged with the expenditure of the money. An appropriation by one committee may render appropriations for similar objects by other committees unnecessary. It may frequently happen that the amount of an appropriation for a particular object by one committee would be materially affected by the knowledge that appropriations were about to be made or were under consideration by another committee for a similar or allied object. For the purpose of rendering this service the subcommittee recommends that a series of subcommittees of the whole committee to be created, so constituted as to their personnel as to bring together representatives of the different Appropriation Committees dealing with allied subjects.

The other field for the action of the Committee on Public Expenditures is suggested by the limits which are imposed by law upon the Appropriation Committees. Those committees are confined in their action to providing means appropriate for the execution of existing laws; they are obliged to follow the organization already provided by law, and are not at liberty to question the propriety or usefulness of the statutes calling for expenditures.

MANY EXISTING METHODS ANTIQUATED.

The subcommittee is satisfied that there ought to be changes in existing laws and methods of government business not coming within the powers of any appropriation committees. The investigations already made by the subcommittee indicate that the business of the Government is conducted by methods in many respects antiquated, which, growing up by accretion from time to time during a long series of years, are cumbersome and susceptible of simplification; that many improvements in organization can be effected; that the application to the business of the Government of improvements in system and method similar to those which have produced the high degree of business efficiency in the great business corporations of the country will result in the saving of many millions of dollars annually and in a much higher degree of efficiency in the conduct of the government business. This view has been confirmed by conferences with representatives of many of the largest and most successful business concerns in the country, whose representatives have kindly taken the trouble to examine the department reports showing the method of organization and transacting business, with the result that they universally concur in the judgment that very great and radical improvements are needed and are practicable to put the government business on the same footing of efficiency and economy attained in other great business concerns. This conclusion is also confirmed by the results of an independent investigation which has recently been conducted in the Treasury Department by the Secretary of the Treasury. The result of this investigation, pursued by a well-known and established firm of experts in accounts and business systems, has led to the conclusion that without any changes of statute a saving of $800,000 per annum can be made, and with certain changes in statute a much larger saving can be made in the business of the Treasury alone, and this is only a part of the Treasury business, for the investigation has not been extended over all branches of the Treasury Department.

NECESSITY FOR GOVERNMENT BUSINESS-METHODS COMMISSION.

Several facts have become apparent to us in our consideration of this subject:

1. That it is not probable that such reforms and improvements in organization and method as will be necessary can be accomplished on the initiative of the ordinary department agencies, for the reason that the employees of the departments have for many years been accustomed to follow established methods and naturally prefer methods with which they are familiar. Such means should be taken as to bring into the solution of the problem the experience of others who are familiar with the most approved and successful modern methods of conducting business on a large scale.

2. That the accomplishment of the work requires a more thorough and extensive study of all departments in all their ramifications and details than it is possible for a committee of the Senate to give themselves. The work must be done by persons who are able to give up all of their time for a considerable period to an exhaustive and systematic study of the subject.

3. That the work is too extensive and would involve too large an expense to be conducted at the expense of the contingent fund of the Senate.

4. That the cooperation of both branches of Congress and the executive departments will be necessary to the prosecution of the work and the realization of the results which are to follow.

The subcommittee therefore recommends that the participation of the House of Representatives and of the Executive be sought through the instrumentality of a commission, to be composed of three Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the presiding officer; of three Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker; and three members to be appointed by the President of the United States; this commission to have authority to employ experts and clerical assistance adequate for the performance of their labors.

The subcommittee presents a draft bill for the establishment of such a commission.

JONATHAN BOURNE, Jr.
NELSON W. ALDRICH.
THOS. H. CARTER.
ELIHU ROOT.
CHARLES J. HUGHES, Jr.

Mr. President, it is incomprehensible to my mind that any Member of Congress can oppose this bill. Its purpose is to shed light upon and improve present governmental methods.

Last session we enacted what I think is one of the most important laws of recent years, namely, the publicity feature of the corporation net-earnings tax, yet what seems to be an inspired protest comes from different sections of the country to Members of Congress.

To investors in our securities this must seem a sad commentary on corporate management in the United States. Are the corporations afraid of the light? If they are honestly conducting their business, can they not realize that the greater the publicity the greater the protection to honest business and greater confidence resulting in a wider market for their securities and a greater credit for their operations? Is it not equally true that the failure of Congress to provide for a coordinated medium of ascertainment for existing governmental methods and improvements therein must shake the confidence of the people either in the intelligence or in the sincerity of Congress?

Mr. President, the time has come when construction rather than destruction, recognition rather than suspicion, merit rather than demerit, should be the aim of every public servant, and results rather than verbal souffle the measure of his achievement.

During the delivery of Mr. BOURNE's speech,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon will suspend for a moment. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 5436) to create a legislative council in the district of Alaska, to confer legislative powers thereon, and for other purposes.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, that order is made. The Senator from Oregon will proceed.

After the conclusion of Mr. BOURNE's speech,

CRIMINAL JURISDICTION OVER CORPORATIONS.

Mr. CUMMINS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 5899) to amend section 1014 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. KEAN. What is the calendar number?

Mr. CUMMINS. Calendar No. 209. It is a bill that has been before the Senate twice, and I hope it may be disposed of this afternoon.

Mr. KEAN. Has the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] been agreed to?

Mr. CUMMINS. There is no objection to it, so far as I know.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill named by him. Does the Senator mean to temporarily lay aside the unfinished business?

Mr. CUMMINS. I understand the unfinished business has been temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa asks for the consideration of the bill named by him.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I understood the Senator's motion to be to proceed to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have not in mind to interfere with the unfinished business, but I understood the Senator from Indiana yesterday to say that he did not desire it longer to remain the unfinished business.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is correct.

Mr. CUMMINS. Therefore I made the motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill I have named.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have no objection whatever to the Senator's motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 5899. The question is on that motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 5899) to amend section 1014 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 8, of the bill, before the word "shall," insert the words "when indorsed by the judge of such district," so that, if amended, the clause will read:

Such notice shall be directed to the marshal of any district of the United States in which service may be made, and when indorsed by the judge of such district shall be served upon such offender agreeably to the methods prescribed by law for the service of civil process upon artificial persons in the district in which such service is made, and not less than twenty days before the time of such hearing.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I will restate that I have no objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York, although I regard it as unnecessary. I may also state that the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], who seemed to have grave objection to that amendment, has, I think, upon reflection concluded that it will not seriously impair the efficiency of the bill. Therefore I hope the amendment may be adopted and the bill passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CERTIFICATES OF INDEBTEDNESS AGAINST THE RECLAMATION FUND.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 5705) to authorize the issue and sale of certificates of indebtedness against the reclamation fund.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Montana.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CARTER. There are committee amendments, and I ask unanimous consent that they now be considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the first amendment reported by the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 3, after the word "maintenance," it is proposed to strike out:

The certificates authorized by this act shall be exempt from taxes in any form by or under state, municipal, or local authority. That all money borrowed under authority of this act shall be devoted exclusively to the completion of work on projects heretofore begun.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

The certificates of indebtedness herein authorized shall be exempt from taxes or duties of the United States as well as from taxation in any form by or under state, municipal, or local authority. That the money borrowed under the authority of this act shall be expended in the completion of such feasible projects as have been heretofore approved by the Secretary of the Interior and in the construction of such extensions thereof as may be proper and necessary to the successful and profitable operation and maintenance of the projects or to protect water rights claimed by the United States.

So as to make the section read:

That to enable the Secretary of the Interior to complete and properly extend reclamation projects already begun the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to borrow from time to time, at a rate of interest not exceeding 3 per cent per annum, such sum or sums as in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior may be necessary to complete the reclamation projects heretofore begun, including necessary extensions thereof by the Secretary of the Interior, and to issue therefor certificates of indebtedness in such form as he may prescribe and in denominations of $50 or of multiples of that sum; and each of said certificates, together with interest thereon, shall be payable out of the reclamation fund created in pursuance of the provisions of an act of Congress, approved June 17, 1902, entitled "An act appropriating the receipts from the sale and disposal of public lands in certain States and Territories to the construction of irrigation works for the reclamation of arid lands," and such payment is hereby guaranteed by the United States: Provided, That the aggregate issue of such certificates shall not exceed $30,000,000, and the provisions and penalties of existing law respecting counterfeiting and other fraudulent practices are hereby made applicable to the certificates of indebtedness authorized by this act. Interest on such certificates shall be paid quarterly, and each certificate shall be payable with interest thereon accrued, at such time after five years from the date of its issue as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe. That said certificates of indebtedness may be disposed of by the Secretary of the Treasury at not less than par under such regulations as he may prescribe, giving all citizens of the United States an equal opportunity to subscribe therefor; but no commission shall be allowed, and the interest on said certificates and any expense incident to preparing, advertising, and issuing the same shall be paid out of the reclamation fund and shall in due course be restored to said fund by including the same with all other expenses in future estimates of construction, operation, or maintenance. The certificates of indebtedness herein authorized shall be exempt from taxes or duties of the United States as well as from taxation in any form by or under state, municipal, or local authority. That the money borrowed under the authority of this act shall be expended in the completion of such feasible projects as have been heretofore approved by the Secretary of the Interior and in the construction of such extensions thereof as may be proper and necessary to the successful and profitable operation and maintenance of the projects or to protect water rights claimed by the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, this bill, as I understand the legislative situation, is before the Senate upon motion of the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] to proceed to its consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Of course, being before the Senate, the Senate will have to consider it, but as I see the scope and purpose of it—and I do not know whether I concur or not—it seems to me on the face of it to be a matter of very considerable importance. How many million dollars are involved?

Mr. KEAN. Only $30,000,000.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Only $30,000,000! It seems to me that perhaps it would not injure the public welfare if the bill were a little bit more carefully considered than it is likely to be this afternoon. I merely make that suggestion to the Senator from Montana. I am sure, however, that he has full information about it.

Mr. CARTER. It is quite important that this bill receive early consideration for the purpose of enabling the Department of the Interior and the Reclamation Service to prepare for the work which is to begin early in the spring. If the consideration of the bill is deferred to any considerable extent, it will necessarily involve the loss of one season of construction. A reading of the report will impress the Senator with the importance of the measure and the desirability of its passage.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I understood the Senator to say that that bill would not come up for some days. It seems to me almost unprecedented to bring up a bill here involving a new policy, the issuance of certificates of indebtedness amounting to $30,000,000, on such short notice as this. I do not desire to postpone the consideration of the bill for a long time, but it seems to me that it ought to go over. For one, I am willing to consent that it shall come up, say, on Tuesday or Wednesday of next week, and that no objection be made to its consideration then. But it was reported only—how many days ago—two days ago?

Mr. CARTER. It was reported on the 14th of February.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The bill can go over, but only, I will say, by the will of the Senate. It now stands in the status of the unfinished business and can not go over except by the will of the Senate.

Mr. BURTON. I was not present at the time of the reading of the bill, but I had understood from the Senator from Montana that some little time would elapse before it would be brought up.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the bill was reported on the 14th instant and the report was printed the next morning. The bill and the underlying principles connected with it have been under consideration, I presume, by Senators and others for a good while, for the President of the United States, in a special message to Congress, advised the passage of some such legislation as this. As I have heretofore suggested, the mere reading of the report would very speedily demonstrate to any Senator the need for the legislation and the wasteful policy of delay should delay occur.

The situation, Mr. President, very briefly stated—I presume it would be better to state it for the benefit of Senators who have not read the report—is this: The reclamation fund is made up of receipts from the sales of public lands. These receipts were thrown into a fund by the act of June 17, 1902. Since that time something over $50,000,000 have been paid into that fund, probably fifty-eight or fifty-nine million dollars, of which sum some $49,000,000 have been expended.

Mr. CLAY. Right at this point the bill says distinctly that the $30,000,000 of indebtedness shall be paid out of that fund. If $49,000,000 has already been expended—and there is only a small amount of the fund left—how does the Senator expect to pay the $30,000,000 of new indebtedness out of that fund?

Mr. CARTER. The report elucidates that point very clearly, and if the Senator will bear with me I will endeavor to make it plain.

The act contemplated the beginning only of such work as could be completed with expedition by the normal receipts at the land offices from the sales of public lands. A very large proportion of the fund was invested in the beginning in work in the Territory of Arizona, a considerable amount in the State of Colorado, and other amounts in Nevada and States to the south and west. Very naturally the Senators and Representatives from the States of the Central West and the Northwest insisted that this apportionment of the fund wholly to the Southwest was inequitable and unjust and contrary to the spirit of the law.

This contention was recognized as being meritorious, and thereupon works were commenced in the Central West and the Northwest, so that in the long run some thirty-odd different projects were outlined and work begun. We now have——

Mr. FLINT. May I interrupt the Senator to ask him if he has a communication showing the amount of money that has been expended upon the projects and the amount contemplated to be expended on the various projects?

Mr. CARTER. I have that communication.

Mr. FLINT. Will the Senator please have it placed in the RECORD?

Mr. CARTER. I will place it there; but I should be glad to make a statement complete in itself without referring to that at this time.

We are now, in short, constructing thirty-odd different reclamation projects, and to complete these projects, or the approved portions of them, which constitute but a small part, some thirty-odd million dollars is immediately necessary or will be necessary within the next two years. The normal receipts of the fund amount to about $7,000,000 per year. Head gates and great head works have been built. I will cite an instance.

At the headwaters of the Platte River in the State of Wyoming the service has invested about $1,200,000 in constructing a dam built of cut granite. It is a noble structure, splendidly placed, calculated to impound about 1,000,000 acre-feet of water. But the service is not possessed of funds to provide an adequate system for the distribution of the water thus impounded.

The same is true of the great Roosevelt dam in the Territory of Arizona, a structure upon which many millions have been expended. The structure will soon be completed, but the distributing system is not available to convey the water to the land.

This is likewise true of the Shoshone project in the State of Wyoming.

Now, in the meantime, expecting that this work would all be expeditiously completed, settlers have gone forward, in advance of the building of canals, and have there been waiting patiently, in some instances as long as five years, for the Government canals to be built to bring down the water to the land and make it possible to raise crops. If we depend upon the normal receipts of this fund this period of anxious waiting will be continued beyond human endurance in some cases.

Moreover, the initial investment of a large sum having been made, it is wasteful to impound the water and do nothing more. The water can not be made useful unless it is distributed and made available for these ranches.

The purpose of this bill is to enable the Secretary of the Treasury, on the request of the Secretary of the Interior, to issue 3 per cent interest-bearing certificates against the receipts of this fund, so the receipts may be anticipated and the amount necessary be made available for prompt and efficient construction.

It is manifestly poor policy to leave the preliminary investments in the great head works standing as they are, because they are unproductive; the money is not drawing interest; the water is not doing service; and the people are suffering for the water which should have been delivered in most cases long, long ago.

Mr. President, this is not a bonded indebtedness of the United States. It does not increase the resources of the reclamation fund one farthing. But it does allow the anticipation of the receipts of that fund to the extent of $30,000,000, if that amount may be found necessary, to promptly complete the work heretofore begun in which large investments have been made that are now in most cases of no avail to the Government or to the citizen.

As the report states, and as the bill itself indicates, the fund is primarily responsible for the repayment of this indebtedness, to be created by the act. The payments from the fund are not to begin until after the lapse of five years. But after that time one-half of the receipts will be applied each year to the retirement of these certificates.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. So that the payment of these certificates of indebtedness, issued by the United States for this purpose, is absolute and certain; and they do not constitute in any proper sense a debt against the United States.

Mr. CARTER. In no proper sense.

Mr. KEAN. Of course they do. They must, necessarily. If the money is going to be taken from the fund for five years the United States has to pay the interest on it for five years.

Mr. CARTER. The interest is to come out of the fund annually, as provided by the bill.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

I do not desire to occupy the floor at all, but I do wish to say that the statement which the Senator from Montana has made is one of the most lucid and convincing statements I have ever heard on any subject. If we do not make some provision for distributing these waters, on the faith of the distribution of which people have gone on the land, and for which they are waiting, we not only do an improvident thing by failing to utilize an investment already made, but we almost commit a wrong against the people themselves.

As I understand—and the Senator will correct me if I am wrong—it is secured even by being a lien upon the land.

Mr. CARTER. Upon the land reclaimed; and to make it quite clear that this investment is eminently desirable at this time and that the bill should be passed, I will state that the land thus far reclaimed amounts to only about 750,000 acres, with all this expenditure of forty-odd million dollars. By the expenditure of the amount here provided we will bring under water something in excess of 3,000,000 acres, and these acres when furnished with water will begin at once to return to the Treasury, under the terms of the law, the amount invested in their reclamation.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I want to get this clearly. As I understand, the great expenditures thus far made have been almost altogether made in the impounding of the water.

Mr. CARTER. Very largely.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The expenditure now necessary is for the utilization of the water thus impounded, without which the whole investment for this purpose is worse than folly.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator from Indiana is correct.

Mr. BURTON. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana if the report called for by the Committee on Public Lands by resolution passed here last week has as yet been presented to the Senate?

Mr. CARTER. I do not know as to that; but I will say to the Senator that the answers to all of the questions there propounded I think will be found in the report here presented. I do not recall all the questions presented in that resolution for answer by the department, but this report shows, on page 3, as the Senator will observe, the total computed cost of each project, the net cost to October 1, 1909, the irrigable area in each one of these projects, the acreage charge for the water right, the water-right payments to October 1, 1909, and the estimated value of the land when reclaimed. The land, when reclaimed as contemplated by the projects now in course of construction, will have a market value, very moderately estimated, of over one-quarter of a billion dollars, and will make homes for thousands upon thousands of home seekers.

Mr. BURTON. As I understand, the report has not yet been filed with the Senate.

Mr. HEYBURN rose.

Mr. BURTON. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. I introduced the resolution to which I think the Senator refers. I have just sent to the desk to learn whether or not a reply has come to the Senate in response to the resolution which was adopted. I understand it has not. That resolution was intended to gather information for use, not upon the discussion of this measure, but upon the discussion of items in the agricultural appropriation bill as they come to us from the House.

Mr. BURTON. It may be, Mr. President, that the report here contains all the information pertaining to the irrigation projects which the Secretary of the Interior would send under the resolution of the Senator from Idaho.

I will state for myself, however, that I have anticipated the coming in of that reply to this resolution for data relating to the subject.

Mr. HEYBURN. I could not accept the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio that the Secretary of the Interior does not intend to respond to the resolution which the Senate passed and which has gone to the Secretary. Should it occur to me that such is the condition of mind of the Secretary of the Interior, I would then call up the matter before the Senate for further action.

Mr. BURTON. I will say to the Senator from Idaho that I think he misapprehended the tenor of my remarks. I did not in the least intend to imply that there would be any reluctance on the part of the Secretary of the Interior to send this information, but thought it would be fuller and more complete than anything we have here.

Mr. HEYBURN. It goes far beyond this report in its scope.

Mr. BURTON. The question now is whether we shall continue the discussion of this bill at the present time. I would suggest that it would be absolutely unprecedented to take up on so brief notice and after a half hour or an hour's discussion pass a bill for incurring indebtedness to the amount of $30,000,000. We have authorized no certificates of indebtedness since the Spanish-American war in 1898, and I really submit there should be before us more complete information, that the Members of the Senate should have at least a few days for the consideration of the merits of this proposition. I am reminded of the Panama bonds; but they are to be issued under exceptional circumstances.

What I wish to do first is to obtain an agreement as to some time when this bill shall come up for consideration. I do not wish any long delay, but I do ask for sufficient time for its careful consideration.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BURTON. I do, at least for a question.

Mr. BORAH. I thought the Senator from Ohio had concluded.

Mr. BURTON. No; but I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the friends of this measure have no objection, I presume, to any reasonable time for investigation, although they are very desirous of having it considered as promptly as may be. I want to make a suggestion or two before the matter is passed over.

When the reclamation law was passed, in 1892, it provided in a general way, as has been suggested, for using the funds derived from the sale of public lands in certain States to reclaim the arid lands of those States. The law as it was passed was intended to be, as was said in the public prints and as was generally understood, a poor man's law; that is to say, it was designed that men of most moderate means might go upon the public lands and, under these projects, initiated and carried on by the Government, obtain homes. That was the design and purpose of the law; but without the fault, perhaps, of anyone, in its workings it has proved to be other than was the original intent. Those who take up lands under these projects must take them up under the homestead law, and they must remain upon the land in order to hold their title. They can not leave the land for the purpose of earning a living elsewhere; and, on the other hand, so long as the water is not placed upon the lands, it is impossible for them to raise crops on the land.

The result of it is, where they have gone upon the land and remained for a number of years, they have been driven almost, if not quite, into bankruptcy, and many of them have been compelled to give up their titles. In view of the fact that they enter under the homestead law, and the further fact that the water is not there to raise crops, it makes it practically impossible for them to remain there beyond a reasonable length of time.

As has been suggested by the Senator from Montana, a number of settlers have gone upon these lands. They have remained there, some of them, from three to five and six years. It is impossible for them to raise crops, because the water is not there. It is impracticable for them to leave the land, because if they do so, they forfeit their title. We should bear in mind that, notwithstanding the fact that they have remained upon the land five years, they can not get title to this land until they have paid for all the water. Therefore they are held there without the possibility of securing title and without the probability of securing water, by means of which they may raise crops and finally secure title.

The second matter which I desire to call to the attention of the Senate is this: This can in no wise be any expense to the Government. It is simply anticipating the receipts of this fund. Every dollar of the fund must be made whole, and every dollar of the expense must be charged up to the settler, and he pays for it before he obtains title from the Government. It is, in other words, simply permitting the settlers to avail themselves of the credit of the Government to secure the means by which to complete these projects, they themselves in the end paying the entire amount. If it was an expenditure on the part of the Government, if it was a liability on the part of the Government, it might require more consideration than it does at present. But the law is designed and so framed that the settlers must pay the entire expense, both interest and principal. This is no liberality on the part of the Government; it is doing simple justice to these settlers so as to enable them to make homes.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President, this bill in a general way meets with my approval. My idea is that the bill should have provided that this $30,000,000 could only be applied to the completion of that portion of the projects that had been approved, which is estimated by the department to be $30,000,000. The reason why we are now asking for a bond issue or the issuance of certificates, as stated by the chairman of the committee, is that the projects have been scattered, too many projects have been approved, and it requires more money than is coming into the fund to complete the projects in a reasonable time. In addition to that, there is complaint made, and justly so, that on many of the projects there have been settlers on the land; that they have been permitted to enter upon this land, and there was no way of stopping it, and these settlers are desirous of having the projects completed.

But if we permit the bill to pass as it has come from the committee we are likely to find ourselves in a few years in the same position again that we are now in, finding other projects approved, other settlers upon the land, and requiring again a further issue of bonds to complete projects. I am desirous of having it limited to the projects which have been approved by the department, finishing up the work they have commenced, and taking the money that is now in the fund and as it comes in from the sale of land and using it for new projects.

I believe that an amendment should be adopted by the Senate limiting the expenditure of this money to that portion of projects that have been approved.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Just for a question.

Mr. FLINT. Very well.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does not the amendment on page 3 of the bill cover the point the Senator is discussing, where it provides that the money borrowed under the authority of this act shall be expended in the completion of such projects as have been heretofore approved by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. FLINT. The projects that have been approved by the Secretary of the Interior amount to $30,000,000 and the extensions to $55,000,000, and of that amount of money three-fourths of it would be expended in three or four States. What I want is to have it limited not to the projects approved, but to the portion of the project that is approved. The entire projects amount to $85,000,000, whereas the approved portions of the projects amount to $30,000,000.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. FLINT. Certainly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not quite understand what the Senator means by a portion of the project approved. If the whole project is approved, every portion of it is approved.

Mr. FLINT. The reason for it is the manner in which they have conducted the business in the Interior Department.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. FLINT. I do.

Mr. SHIVELY. Does not the Senator mean to distinguish between projects that have been commenced and projects that have simply been approved?

Mr. FLINT. If, as a matter of fact, the bill limits the expenditure to that portion of the project that is approved, then I am satisfied; but if the expenditure of this money is not limited and can be expended on any of the projects where work has been commenced, as the Senator from Indiana suggests, then we are committed to a further amount of $55,000,000.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. FLINT. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator from California very well knows that I agree with him in his position on this matter; and I would not consent to a bill that I thought did not reasonably accomplish what he desires to accomplish. I wish to ask the Senator to consider the amendment proposed to section 1, namely:

> That the money borrowed under the authority of this act shall be expended in the completion of such feasible projects as have been heretofore approved by the Secretary of the Interior—

I call the Senator's attention particularly to this language:

> and in the construction of such extensions thereof as may be proper and necessary to the successful and profitable operation and maintenance of the projects, or to protect water rights claimed by the United States.

Does not the Senator think that what he desires to accomplish is accomplished by that language? The Senator will agree with me, I think, that the $55,000,000, of which he speaks, applies entirely to extensions of projects.

Mr. FLINT. The $55,000,000 applies to extensions.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It applies entirely to extensions; that is, to unapproved portions of existing projects. No portion of the $55,000,000 applies to an existing approved project.

Mr. FLINT. The Senator is correct.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Therefore no part of the money borrowed could be used for the purpose of doing work upon those extensions except under the provisions of the latter part of the amendment which I read to the Senator, namely:

> In the construction of such extensions thereof as may be proper and necessary to the successful and profitable operation and maintenance of the projects.

Certainly the Senator ought not to object to that. If it is necessary to make an expenditure in order to make the project itself successful and profitable, we ought to make it; or, if it is necessary further, as provided by the amendment, to protect water rights claimed by the United States, we ought to make it. But under the amendment the Secretary of the Interior would be precluded from expending any portion of this borrowed money upon any of the extensions embraced within the $55,000,000 class, except as provided by the provisions I have called to the attention of the Senator.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator will pardon me, I will say to him, as he already knows, that I am quite as anxious to accomplish the result the Senator is aiming at as the Senator himself is.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. FLINT. Permit me to answer the Senator from Utah, and then I will yield. I agree in the main with what was stated by the Senator from Utah. I am not certain that there is any way of carrying out my idea any better than is provided in the bill, but I want to place on the record my views in reference to approving new projects until the projects which have already been approved are completed. I do not object to the expenditure of this money in the States, as set forth in the letter to the committee from the Secretary of the Interior, and that is where the Senator from Utah and myself agree.

But what I object to, and what I want to cover in the amendment, if I can, is that there shall be no further projects approved and the Government committed to further expenditure beyond the income and this bond issue until the projects already approved as set forth in this communication are completed; for, as I said a moment ago, if we do not do this we will find ourselves in a few years in the same position again. The department will be importuned by Members of Congress to approve this project and that project, and we will again go beyond our means, and they will be unable to complete the projects and will have to ask for a further issue of certificates.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

Mr. FLINT. Just let me finish. So I say that, as far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing to have the money expended, not only this $30,000,000, but any additional money necessary to complete the projects set forth in the communication to our committee; but I want it understood that the Secretary shall not approve any other projects or commit the Government further.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it seems to me that the amendment, which is found upon page 3, covers the subject, as has been suggested by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] as completely and efficiently as it could be covered by human language. It limits the action of the Secretary of the Interior to projects which have been approved, not commenced but approved for completion.

Mr. FLINT. That amounts to $30,000,000.

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the Senator from California will permit me a question, the Senators understand apparently between themselves quite clearly what they are discussing when they refer to the $55,000,000, but to the rest of us the reading of the bill and of the report does not furnish the information. I should like to have one of the Senators explain what the facts are with reference to the $55,000,000 proposition.

Mr. FLINT. Fifty-five million dollars is the amount estimated by the Reclamation Service for carrying out the extensions for the approved projects in addition to that portion which has been approved, which amount to $30,000,000.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does that appear anywhere in the report? I am unable to find it.

Mr. FLINT. It is shown by the report of the Interior Department.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the question of approval is one upon which the Reclamation Service and Interior Department have no clear definition. Projects have been approved in different fashion. For instance, a general scheme of irrigation has been approved, to be completed by the application of the waters of a given stream. Some parts of the project have been surveyed and are definitely fixed and contracted for. Other parts remain to be surveyed, the trial lines having been run, but the cross-section work not completed. So it will be observed that in the general word "approved" the whole project is encompassed, whereas in another section a certain amount of construction has been begun or the surveys have been prosecuted to definite results.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. FLINT. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I supported the irrigation act, as the Senator from Montana will remember, though the section of the country from which I come had no direct interest in it. I wish to ask the Senator from Montana a question. I have not had time to refer to the act. Did the act give unqualified authority to commence these projects in any State or portion of the country that the Interior Department saw fit?

Mr. CARTER. The act was made applicable to certain States, I will say to the Senator, and there were certain limitations in the act. One was that the amount of money collected in a given State should, to the extent of a certain per cent, be expended within the limits of that State. Further still, it was the evident intent of the law that work should not be commenced without available funds, in prospect at least, to complete the work.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is my recollection of the matter; and we have been told from time to time that there was an accumulation of funds for this purpose. As I understand it now, the sum has been exhausted, has it not?

Mr. CARTER. There is about $8,000,000 in the fund, but the $8,000,000 will make such a small moiety distributed over the 30 different projects that work can not be economically or forcefully done at any point. It will take many years to complete the work. In the meantime that which has been done is deteriorating, with loss of interest, and the waiting process by the settlers is going on. I think it may be an answer to the Senator's question by freely admitting that a mistake was made—a clear, unquestionable mistake—in attempting to cover too much ground simultaneously.

Mr. GALLINGER. That was my impression from what knowledge I had of this subject, which, I confess, is elementary. It seems to me that it was spread over too much territory, and that we ought to be careful in this legislation, or we will find ourselves in just the position we are in in our legislation for rivers and harbors. While we make an appropriation of $150,000 this year, it relates to a project that is going to cost a couple million dollars, and we have a large number of uncompleted projects on hand, amounting to an enormous sum of money.

I feel that while I shall give my support to this bill, as I have done to all measures relating to the great West, the bill ought to be very carefully guarded, and I trust it is carefully guarded. I observe that future projects can only be commenced upon the direct order of the President of the United States.

Mr. CARTER. That section was put into the bill in order to forestall inconsiderate and hasty approvals. It was put in at the suggestion of the Secretary of the Interior, who desires to prevent the recurrence of the unhappy situation in which we find ourselves. We thought it well that such a showing should be made to the President of the United States with reference to new projects as would impel him to approve on the merits.

Mr. GALLINGER. And the purpose, as I understand it, of the friends of the bill is to obtain this money by the issuance of certificates of indebtedness to complete as soon as possible the projects that are now under way.

Mr. CARTER. Now under way.

Mr. GALLINGER. And to extend those projects where it is necessary to protect the expenditure already made, and to protect the Government in the matter of water rights and so forth.

Mr. CARTER. That is the whole and sole purpose of the measure.

Mr. GALLINGER. If that is done, it seems to me that this is wise legislation.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. CARTER. I think the Senator from California [Mr. FLINT] has the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield?

Mr. FLINT. I do.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I notice that the original section had the following language at the end of the section:

That all money borrowed under authority of this act shall be devoted exclusively to the completion of work on projects heretofore begun.

That language is certainly very clear, very specific, and answers the demand of the Senator from California; but it appears to have been stricken out and an amendment proposed in its place which apparently opens the door to ambiguity and uncertainty. My question is, Why is the language of the amendment preferred to the language used in the original section?

Mr. FLINT. I suggest as an amendment to the amendment, on page 3, line 13, to strike out the word "feasible" before "projects;" and in line 14 to strike out the word "and" after "Interior;" and to strike out all of lines 15, 16, 17, and 18.

Mr. BURTON. Will the Senator from California yield to me for an interruption?

Mr. FLINT. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. I understand the Senator desires to strike out the word "feasible" and lines 15, 16, 17, and 18. It would then read, would it not?—

That the money borrowed under the authority of this act shall be expended in the completion of such projects as have been heretofore approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

Unless you interpret the word "completion" as meaning the finishing of something already begun, it would throw the door wide open for new projects, as well as old, would it not?

Mr. FLINT. Those projects that have been approved. There are certain projects that are approved now by the Secretary of the Interior, which amount to $30,000,000.

Mr. BURTON. Have those approved projects also been commenced?

Mr. FLINT. They have all been commenced.

Mr. BURTON. The work has been commenced?

Mr. FLINT. Some work has been commenced.

Mr. BURTON. The work has reached a certain degree of advancement?

Mr. FLINT. I think so, on all of them.

Mr. BURTON. And no project has been approved on which work has not been done?

Mr. FLINT. I will say that my idea about it is that if we limit this bond issue to the completion of projects, or that portion of them that have been approved, then we leave the fund that is coming in from the sale of lands for any new project the Secretary of the Interior may desire to approve. But it means that this $30,000,000 will complete the projects that have been approved.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. FLINT. I do.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator secures the amendment which he asks for, he will accomplish that which he does not desire to accomplish, it seems to me. He proposes, in the first place, to strike out the word "feasible," and to complete these projects whether they are feasible or nonfeasible, practicable or impracticable.

Mr. FLINT. I take it the Secretary of the Interior would not approve of any project not feasible.

Mr. BORAH. Then I take it there is no danger of leaving him with the exercise of a little judgment in the future.

Mr. FLINT. There would be some danger in leaving to the Secretary in the future the question of the approval of projects, if we are to judge by what has been done in the past, because the chairman of the committee has stated, as we all know, that there have been many projects approved on request of Senators and Representatives. The Secretary of the Interior has been importuned to approve this project and that project; and that is the reason why we are here to-day asking for this bond issue.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the fact that projects have been begun in a great number does not relate to the question of feasibility or nonfeasibility. It is true that there have been more projects begun than some people think should have been begun; but they have been begun by reason of the fact that the people in the different States have asked for them. Now, they are perfectly feasible and they should be completed. It is to the interest of the Reclamation Service and of the people generally to complete them. But notwithstanding that fact, the committee saw fit to limit the expenditure of the money which is raised by the bond issue to the projects which have been approved. If the Senate will observe the language which is used here, it is specific and certain to that limitation. For instance, it says:

That the money borrowed under the authority of this act shall be expended in the completion of such feasible projects as have been heretofore approved by the Secretary of the Interior and in the construction of such extensions thereof as may be proper and necessary to the successful and profitable operation and maintenance of the projects.

Mr. FLINT. Right there the word "extensions" would add $55,000,000 more.

Mr. BORAH. The settlers upon these projects are paying every cent of this money. Does the Senate of the United States want to deprive them of the opportunity of using these projects in a reasonable and successful way? That is the reason why the clause is in the amendment which says that it shall be used "in the construction of such extensions thereof as may be proper and necessary to the successful and profitable operation and maintenance of the projects." What are we constructing them for if not for successful and profitable operation? And in view of the fact that every dollar of this money comes from the pockets of the settler, we need not be uneasy about the words "successful and profitable operation."

Mr. FLINT. Then, instead of having a part of the projects completed, let us meet the issue squarely and have an issue for $85,000,000, for the reason, Mr. President, that the money as we have provided it here, the $30,000,000 and the $55,000,000, means committing ourselves to these projects in the several States. It means that there will be no other projects approved in any other State. I want to see that we make provision to take care of the $85,000,000 in this issue of certificates, if that is the intention of Congress; but I do not want to provide for an issue of $30,000,000 with the intention of having the other $55,000,000 approved as extensions.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator has reached the precise point where he knows I have been all the time in this matter. There is no possible reason to my mind why we should not issue certificates sufficient to complete all the projects.

Mr. FLINT. I will vote with the Senator if it is stated in that way.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator will frame language which will cover it, I do not know whether anybody else will vote with him or not, but I will be very glad to support the amendment.

Mr. FLINT. The Senator misunderstands me. The Senator's idea is that we should have $100,000,000 expended on irrigation projects. That would be more than sufficient to complete the projects approved, amounting to $30,000,000, and $55,000,000 of extensions. I will support such an amendment, for the reason that it leaves to the Secretary of the Interior a fund to apply in other States to projects that should have been approved and have not been approved. If we do not have a bond issue of $100,000,000, we are committing ourselves to expenditures in four States and nothing can be done in any of the other States.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I made an inquiry sometime ago and it was not an idle inquiry; it was made in good faith. I asked why the language originally used at the close of section 1, which appears to be clear and specific, was changed into this proposed amendment. I have received no answer to it, unless the subsequent discussion discloses the fact that the purpose of the amendment is to simply open the door to projected extensions instead of projects already begun.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, answering the question of the Senator from South Dakota, the language as it originally appeared in the bill was not satisfactory to the Senator from California [Mr. FLINT] and some others, at least not to that Senator, as I understand it, because he wanted to confine it not only to the projects already begun but to those portions of projects that had been heretofore officially approved.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And upon which work had not been commenced?

Mr. WARREN. On the projects, but not upon the particular parts of the project.

Mr. FLINT. I want to make myself clear about that. I am entirely satisfied with the wording of the section by adding the word "approved," so that it would read "approved portions of the projects," which are estimated by the Secretary of the Interior to be $30,000,000.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if I may be allowed a moment, here is the condition: The Senator from California is seeking what I think we are all seeking, only he is taking it a different way. What we are seeking to do is to complete the projects that have been commenced and that are feasible. If any of them have been found not feasible, and I think the Senator will agree with me that one or two of them have not, no further work is to be done on them. There is one case of a reservoir without a drop of water in it, and they have not been able to accumulate any in it for a couple of years. The purpose of this bill is to complete those feasibly approved projects and such feasible extensions as are strictly necessary in order to get the water to the land and get the money back from the settlers where the Government has already made large investments, but not yet available because of a lack of funds.

I perhaps can illustrate it in this way: If a farmer should buy a span of horses, should buy a wagon, should approve both of them, but was not able to get at that date the harness he wanted and should be waiting until he had a harness made by a harness maker, and somebody should ask him how much he had approved of his paraphernalia, and he should send in a memorandum showing he had approved of the horses, he had approved of the wagon, but that he had not approved of the harness, it would not mean that he did not propose to have a harness. It would not prove that a harness was not necessary in order to connect his wagon and his horse so that he could do the work.

Now, we have certain of these projects that have been commenced, and large amounts of work have been done upon them that are incapable of use to-day and will be for a long time if you put in the amendment which the Senator from California seeks to adopt.

I want to say that this talk of approval on this particular list of $30,000,000 is a mere figure of speech. The Reclamation Service, at a time when its director was absent on field service, was called upon to make a report to the Secretary of the Interior upon such projects and portions of projects as were then approved. This was sent to the department and came to us, not with the intention that the $30,000,000 bonds or warrants should be for that identical list without considering the necessary links or connections to make the projects productive. That list meant simply that they had then proceeded that far in the work of approving parts of projects. That is the whole question.

To put in the language that the Senator seeks and say upon only such portions of such projects already begun as have been heretofore approved would be to throw some of the most deserving projects with large expenditures already made out of business entirely.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I do not know whether the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] is satisfied with the information he has obtained in answer to his question, but it does not seem to me that the question thus far has been very clearly answered. I do not know whether I can succeed in throwing any light upon it or not, but I am going to try.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The Senator from South Dakota is not satisfied as to the reason why the language used in the section was not left as it was originally drawn.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That was the question, as I understood it. Mr. President, in reply to the question of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD], as I understand the matter, it is this: There are two classes of this irrigation work: First, a class of work that has already been approved by the Secretary of the Interior. That work is outlined in the communication which was before the Committee on Irrigation. In the aggregate it amounts to $30,000,000. There was another class of work called "extensions of these existing projects," which are unapproved, and which, in the aggregate, amount to $55,000,000. The bill as originally drawn read:

> That all money borrowed under authority of this act shall be devoted exclusively to the completion of work on projects heretofore begun.

It was the fear of some of us in committee, including the Senator from California [Mr. FLINT], that, by reason of the generality of that language, it would be construed to include those extensions which had not been approved, as well as those portions of the projects which had been approved, because the language is "to the completion of work on projects heretofore begun."

Now, to take an illustration: We have a project up in Washington the approved portion of which amounts to, say, two or three million dollars. But it is contemplated——

Mr. FLINT. One million——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Just a moment. It is contemplated that at some time in the future extensions may be made to that project which will aggregate $14,000,000 more. We do not want this bill——

Mr. CRAWFORD. But those proposed extensions have not been approved.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The proposed extensions which have not been approved, but the project of which these are extensions has been begun, and the project itself has been approved, although the extensions of the project have not been approved. So the language "to the completion of work on projects heretofore begun" would not only apply to that portion of the project which had been approved, but to the contemplated extensions in the future. We do not want to so frame the bill as to admit of that construction.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. With pleasure.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will ask the Senator if it would not be a very simple matter to merely add a clause to that language which would make it clear that it did not include proposed extensions not approved, instead of adding this ambiguous phraseology?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator from South Dakota is quite correct in that. It was the notion of the committee that it was a simple matter, and it has proposed this amendment to the section for that very purpose. It seems to me that it is clear and explicit. Let me read it again:

> That the money borrowed under the authority of this act shall be expended in the completion of such feasible projects as have been heretofore approved by the Secretary of the Interior—

If we had stopped there, we probably would have narrowed the general language of the original project very little, but we proceed further—

> and in the construction of such extensions thereof as may be proper and necessary to the successful and profitable operation and maintenance of the projects or to protect water rights claimed by the United States.

By having both of these provisions in the bill—the provision with reference to the completion of the work upon feasible projects and also the provision to extend it to certain extensions—we differentiate between the two things and make it clear that this money can not be expended for the completion of these extensions unless they come within the limitations of the amendment itself.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let me ask the Senator from Utah a question. The language read by the Senator, including these constructions, does not provide that the extensions shall be extensions now contemplated and now approved, but it is so broad that it includes all extensions that may be proper and necessary, and no provision is made as to who is to determine that they are proper or necessary or when the determination is to be made that they are proper or necessary. It seems to me that that language throws the doors wide open to extensions that are not even yet projected.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is quite true. It does apply to extensions of any character or description, but they must be such extensions as are both proper and necessary to the successful and profitable operation and maintenance of the project. Now, surely——

Mr. CRAWFORD. But, Mr. President——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Just a moment. Surely the Senator from South Dakota would not want to frame the bill in such manner that the Secretary of the Interior would not be permitted to do something which would be necessary to make a given project successful and profitable.

Mr. CRAWFORD. No; but, Mr. President, it seems to me that there must be a limit here somewhere; that there must be a boundary line with some distinction and clearness to it. We are interested in the West—my State for one is interested—in the completion of projects that are in process of construction. To use the phrase of the street, the Government has "bitten off more than it can masticate," and here we are with these projects on our hands. We want them completed if the $30,000,000 will do it. We do not want to leave the bars down, so that the money may be scattered into the building of extensions not even now contemplated. So I must say that I think the language as originally drawn is much safer than this limitless amendment which is proposed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me ask the Senator from South Dakota if he does not think, under the language as originally drawn, that the Secretary of the Interior would be permitted to use this money not only for the construction of that portion of the project approved, but for everything which could be considered an extension of it? The only limitation in the original language is that the project itself shall have been theretofore begun. Any extension of it is a part of the project, and the project itself has been heretofore begun.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not quite see why there should be a distinction between projects, why that language is not plain enough, and why there should be some question about whether the word "project" means something else, to wit, the extension of a project. A project is a project; and this authority is to complete a project begun—not the extension of a project begun, but the completion of a project begun.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I think the difficulty of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] arises somewhat from the two terms "projects" and "extensions thereof." I think the term "project" in this bill is used in a narrower sense than that in which the Reclamation Service commonly use it. For instance, in my section we have what is known as the "Yakima project." That project contemplates the ultimate reclamation of almost 500,000 acres of land. It contemplates the construction of reservoirs at the headwaters of the Yakima and Naches rivers.

It is the reclamation of land in distinct quarters or units. For instance, at Tieton about 30,000 acres will be reclaimed; in another place 40,000 acres will be reclaimed; in another section, a distinct section, 125,000 acres will be reclaimed; and in another section over 200,000 acres will be reclaimed. That has all been designated as the Yakima project, but they have commenced a distinct part of that, you might say, for instance, a reservoir. That reservoir in the sense of this bill, as I understand it, is a project.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The reservoir by itself?

Mr. JONES. The reservoir by itself is a project. After that reservoir has been commenced we want to complete it, and we do not want to have the reservoir without being able to use the water. So we provide for the necessary and proper extensions to make that reservoir available. That is the sense in which I understand these terms here. Under the preceding language the fear of some friends on the committee was that we would get a little too much of this money; that we would get about $14,000,000 or $15,000,000 to complete the entire Yakima project. The committee did not think that was entirely fair, and there was considerable justice in their contention. Therefore I was willing that it should be limited, instead of using this broad language; and it was the intention of the committee to limit it by this other language, because the fear was, as has been suggested, that the language to which the Senator refers was too broad and would allow the Secretary to carry on an undesirable work, a work that it was thought we had not the money to carry on. But where we had commenced a distinct unit of a project—using the word "project" in the sense in which the Reclamation Service uses it—it was thought best to limit the expenditure simply to the money which was necessary to construct those projects and necessary to make each unit or portion of a project in the sense here used available.

For instance, I know of one project where a big dam has been constructed across a river, which has cost nearly three or four million dollars. The dam is worth it, provided we can get the land under it reclaimed. It is necessary to construct, you might say, an extension of that project—for that dam would be called "a project"—to reclaim the land to make it available for the use of that dam.

While I am on my feet, I am going to refer to a suggestion, made a short time ago by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], that we have begun too many projects, and that a mistake was made in that respect. I admit that that is true, but I do not want the impression to prevail that the Reclamation Service was entirely to blame for that condition of things. The chairman of the committee has said that mistakes have been made in the adoption of projects, the beginning of them, but the situation was simply this: When the reclamation act was passed, every Senator and every Representative from the States affected pressed their claims upon the Reclamation Service just as strongly and just as urgently as possible, and if there is any blame to be attached for undertaking too many works, that blame must be divided, at any rate, between the Reclamation Service and the Members of the House and of the Senate from those States, and I am willing to take my share of it.

I trust the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] will not feel that he should oppose this proposition, because I am endeavoring to carry out the principles that I have largely learned from him in the construction of river and harbor work in the construction now of reclamation work. I have always felt that the Government is wasting a large amount of money by carrying on river and harbor works by piecemeal, and taking on so many of them, that we could only appropriate a small portion of the money necessary to apply to the work, and scatter it all over the country. With the mistakes that have been made, we have taken up more projects than we now have the money to carry on economically and rapidly. Therefore, I am in favor of this legislation, following the principles which the Senator has instilled in me with reference to river and harbor works. I want to get enough money to do this work economically and bring it under these plans, so that the Government will get back the money which we have so generously appropriated for the purpose of reclaiming the arid lands.

Mr. CRAWFORD. For one, I am greatly obliged to the Senator from Washington for his explanation, in which he has shown the difference between extensions and the original project. I wish to ask the Senator if it would not be much safer, and if it would not be sufficient if in this proposed amendment a period were placed after the words "Secretary of the Interior," so that the projects or extensions would be such as he had approved, and leave out the remainder of the proposed amendment?

Mr. JONES. There would be no extensions then provided for.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Put in the word "extensions" in connection with projects. At any rate, it seems to me that the utmost scrutiny and care should be given to this matter, if there would be danger in the case of the project in the Senator's State of embracing extensions in what narrowly would be called a "project," so that it would take $14,000,000 of this appropriation.

Mr. JONES. No; the extensions to which I refer are entirely feasible in that project, and they are absolutely necessary to the successful operation of that project.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is for all the lands, but not necessary for the successful operation of part of the lands.

Mr. JONES. Of course the whole project contemplates the building of three or four reservoirs for storing the tremendous amount of water.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the Senator will permit me, we are proposing to provide only $30,000,000. We can not complete all of these projects and all of these extensions——

Mr. JONES. That is right.

Mr. CRAWFORD. They might take $150,000,000.

Mr. JONES. That is right.

Mr. CRAWFORD. So that we must put a circumscribed limit here somewhere.

Mr. JONES. That is what we have tried to do.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Have you done it at all in this amendment where you take in all feasible extensions?

Mr. JONES. No; the Senator is reading it wrong. The amendment provides that the money—shall be expended in the completion of such feasible projects as have been heretofore approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

I suggest to the Senator that there have been a great many projects approved in one sense, but, as has been suggested here, there is no definition of the term "approved," or "approval." The Senator from California [Mr. FLINT] has spoken of a letter from the department, in which reference is made to "approved portions" and "approved projects." I will say that I talked with the Director of the Reclamation Service, and he said he did not know just what would be considered as an "approved project," or just what the word "approved" meant.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the Senator will permit me, it seems to me that there ought to be in the language which shall finally be left in this section no question as to what "approved" means. If there is doubt in the use of it by the Reclamation Service or by the Secretary of the Interior, there ought not to be any doubt as to what it means as we are to use it in this section, involving, as it does, the carrying on of this work.

Mr. JONES. I was going to suggest to the Senator that there have been a great many projects that have been approved in one sense of the term. The Secretary of the Interior has said that he would take up those projects whenever money was available. Putting in the term "feasible" here leaves the present Secretary of the Interior, or whoever may be in that office when this act takes effect, to determine whether projects that have been approved are of such a feasible character as he thinks should be taken up; in other words, it still leaves him some discretion even where projects have been approved.

If you simply use the term "approved," then he has no discretion. When you put in the words "feasible projects" or "feasible projects heretofore approved," it leaves him to discriminate between those projects that have been approved and select from them those that he considers ought to be taken up.

I will say to the Senator that there are some projects involving the expenditure of several million dollars that have not been approved in the ordinary sense of the term, but upon which practically nothing has been done, and which can be left for a few years just as well as not. The language that was put in here was put in for the purpose of eliminating projects like that.

Mr. CRAWFORD. But it would not.

Mr. JONES. I will say that the committee has spent a great deal of time in trying to get wording here that would not be too restrictive. We recognize that there must be some discretion given to the administrative officers. I will add that I framed a provision which it seemed to me accomplished that purpose even better than the provision of the amendment, so far as that is concerned, and I believe the Senator would think so if he saw it; but all of us had different opinions and different constructions. We tried to harmonize them and we finally agreed upon this as a proper limitation as well as placing in the Secretary a proper discretion with reference to this great work.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, it seems to me we should readily pass this question as to the technical language to be employed in this measure. When the Government, right in the midst of a system of procedure, changes the laws upon which that procedure must be based, the Government should not be too technical in providing a substitute for it. When this act was passed the condition as to the public-land laws of the United States was so different from that of to-day that the Government should be very slow to interpose any objection to remedial legislation that would put the Reclamation Service back upon the plane where it was originally placed by the legislation.

What do I mean by this? At the time that the reclamation act was passed, in 1891, I believe about June, the Government was engaged in selling its lands to the settlers at a rate not thertofore known. There was a condition of prosperity in the country that was prompting men to go out hunting new fields of enterprise and obtaining the land upon which to build them up. No sooner had we inaugurated the great system of reclamation of the public lands, based upon the proceeds derived from the sale and income of the public lands, than we set about destroying the market and the income from the public lands. At the rate of increase, or based upon the conditions existing at the time of the passage of the reclamation act, there would have been no deficiency had those conditions remained, and with those conditions restored to-day there would be no occasion to ask anything at the hands of the Government. Inasmuch as this fund was to be derived entirely from the sale and the proceeds of the public lands of the United States, in order to maintain the fund we would naturally suppose that the Government would have maintained the market for the lands; but, lo and behold! no sooner had we started upon this prosperity than they begin to withdraw the land from sale, and they have withdrawn from sale, since the passage of this act, in 1891, 200,000,000 acres of land. Put it back in the market and see how soon we will be relieved of the necessity of calling upon the Government for money to guarantee and to carry out these great enterprises. They have starved the fund by destroying the source from which the fund was to come. They were warned of it. In the days when we were discussing that question here through so many Congresses, the attention of Congress was called to the fact that they were pursuing a policy that would destroy the source from which this great plan of reclamation was to draw its revenues. You can not withdraw the lands from sale and at the same time derive a fund from the sale of the lands. That is obvious enough. Here, all at once, we find that a great beneficent plan for the building up of the substantial property and the population of the country has been prostrated by a short-sighted policy that has received the approval of Congress in its hours of thoughtlessness. There we are now. Is the Government in any position to raise technical questions, or is Congress in a position to interpose technical objections to the use of this word or that, inasmuch as it has been suggested by several of the Senators who have spoken, not a dollar of this money comes out of the Public Treasury and no proposition is presented to take a dollar out of the Public Treasury at any time? You are not even loaning money; you are simply making it possible for this crippled enterprise to provide itself with money to fulfill the original purpose of the act.

The pending bill merely provides that there shall be issued certificates, none of which shall be payable until after five years, bearing a rate of interest at 3 per cent, and the proceeds of the sale of those certificates, which are merely promissory notes of the Government, are to make good the pledge it has partially broken, to make it possible to carry out this great plan that provides thousands and hundreds of thousands of homes and millions and hundreds of millions of dollars of taxable property and adds to the greatness and success of our whole country.

We stand here quibbling over the use of language. It would not be asking too much were we to ask Congress to take the money out of the General Treasury of the country, inasmuch as the General Treasury of the country has benefited $7,400,000 by the sale of the very subject from which this fund was to be withdrawn. I refer to the income in these years from the forest reserves. Notwithstanding the pledge contained in the reclamation act, the Government took the lands from market and then made a use of them from which they have derived something over $7,000,000, not one dollar of which went to the reclamation fund. Now, why should we hesitate to make good the wrong that has been done? We have sent thousands of people out there with their families and the little accumulation of their lifetime, some of them in the railroad train and some of them in the white-covered wagon, and, relying upon the promise of the Government that the public lands would be sold and that the proceeds would be used to make this land available as homes, they have rested there, at first in joyous expectation, but as the years have rolled along, with despair growing deeper upon them every day, until to-day thousands of them are suffering for the want of the necessities and comforts of life.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think that the question here is not a question of the merits of the proposition to issue bonds to carry forward this work. Upon that question I doubt if the Senator would find many who are hostile to the proposition. But the question is one simply of making the language specific and clear so that we will know what the $30,000,000 provided for each year——

Mr. HEYBURN. I understand perfectly well what that question is. Now, let me develop the idea as it comes to me.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Very well; I will not further interrupt the Senator.

Mr. HEYBURN. The real question is not how close down can you crimp or shall you crimp this enterprise, but how broad and liberal shall you treat it in the light of the treatment it has received. I understand the question the Senator has in mind as to whether or not the enterprise shall be further limited. The estimate originally and the estimate now is based upon about $120,000,000 expenditure. We have spent $50,000,000, and we are asking for thirty millions more. We are asking it in the hope that conditions will change and that we will not be compelled to ask for more; but this measure should be liberal enough in its provisions to complete the work that is contemplated and that has been laid out. I do not care if it costs the whole $117,000,000 contained in the estimate. That is the reason I am criticising a disposition here to put a limitation to-day that may send us back to Congress to ask for further relief.

If you continue to withdraw the public lands from sale there will be no fund to redeem these warrants; there will be no fund to represent the margin between the warrants and the admitted necessities for the construction of this work. So there should be no hesitation in voting for the measure of relief contained in this bill, and there should be no attempt or desire to so crimp it with conditions that would put us upon the basis of an apology should the revenues entirely fail us, or fail us to the extent that we would not be able to complete these works.

What benefit can come to anyone from an incompleted work of this kind? It is like building a house up to the square and providing no roof for it. It is like building a dam out in the mountains to collect the water and making no provisions for its use. Let us be reasonable and broad-minded in this matter.

and if we need the $30,000,000 of credit give it to us because the lands that are already settled upon will repay that much, we know.

There is no condition that can possibly arise which would defeat the Government in the repayment of this money from the rentals and from the payments required to be made by those who have settled upon the lands. So let us not attempt here by imposing words of limitation to place any possible obstacle in the way of the completion of the work not only under construction, but of all the work as contemplated.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, in the framing of the committee amendment to this bill an effort was made to limit the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, which was ample under the original act, and to confine the expenditure of this money practically to projects already begun. Individually I have been opposed to putting any limitation upon the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. I think Congress acted wisely, in the first instance, in leaving the selection of these projects and the expenditure of the money to the Secretary of the Interior and the Reclamation Service organized by him, the only limitation in the original act being that no contract should be made for work unless the money for the payment of the contract was in the fund. I think that was a wise provision, originally. I think it would be wise to-day to maintain that large discretion.

It must be recollected that this discretion is not that of an individual. It is the discretion of a service, the great Reclamation Service, consisting of over 300 engineers. Probably the greatest engineering force in the world has been built up under the administration of different Secretaries of the Interior, under the leadership of Mr. Newell, the present director of that service. The methods of selecting the projects are most discriminating. They have an engineer for each project. They have a supervising engineer, whose district embraces four or five or six projects. Whenever a project is under consideration the project engineer meets with the supervising engineer and with a board composed of all the supervising engineers, and all these matters are thoroughly thrashed out before they are presented to the Secretary of the Interior, the intervening judgment of the Director of the Reclamation Service being also secured.

So, a project is only entered upon after the most thorough examination of the region in which it is proposed to locate it, of all the elements of expenditure and cost and reimbursement of cost; and board after board will sit upon these projects in the various stages of their progress, and at every stage they have to pass the judgment of the Director of the Reclamation Service, and finally the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior himself.

When this bill was originally under consideration I thought that method was infinitely preferable to the method which had theretofore been employed in river and harbor work in this country, under which the selection of projects was left to the control and direction of a political body, subjected to all the evils of the spoils instead of the merit system.

Now, this work has been done well. The projects for the most part have been wisely selected. Some mistakes have been made—not serious mistakes. Some mistakes have been made as the result of the extraordinary pressure brought to bear upon the Reclamation Service by the political representatives of the regions affected. Some mistakes may have been forced by the rigid terms of the reclamation act itself, for under the terms of that act it is compulsory upon the Secretary of the Interior to expend at least one-half of the moneys raised from the sales of lands in any particular State upon feasible projects within that State.

Now, unfortunately, or fortunately, perhaps, some of the States which contributed the largest amount to the fund were States in which there were few, if any, feasible projects. It was incumbent upon the Secretary of the Interior, under the act itself, with the good faith required by the act, using extraordinary diligence and every care in the selection of a project, to assign to a State which generously contributed to the fund some portion of the projects; and thus the law itself enforced the location of projects in States which contributed largely to the fund, which money should have been spent upon projects in States which contributed little to the fund. My own State contributed little to the fund, because it is probably the most arid of all the States.

After the money is spent upon these projects, after the lands are vitalized by the introduction of water, lands will be entered and water rights sold, and will richly reimburse the fund from which these works were constructed. But initially Nevada could contribute little to the fund, while the State of Oklahoma contributed most generously, and yet in Nevada there are numerous feasible irrigation projects, and in Oklahoma there are almost none because of the topography of the country. And so a portion of Oklahoma's money has been spent in Nevada, and North Dakota's money has been spent in Nevada, but ultimately it will be returned to the fund by Nevada when its arid lands are reclaimed.

But, as I have stated, the law itself has compelled the Secretary of the Interior to use every care and diligence to find a project in the State of Oklahoma, even though it may not be so feasible as one in Nevada. And so it is in North Dakota. Inferior projects have been entered into there simply because of the generosity of the contribution of those States to this great fund. Hence the mistakes have been forced by the act itself.

I may say when the act was originally framed I was opposed to that provision which compelled the expenditure within the boundaries of a particular State of the funds coming from the sale of land in that State. I anticipated these very difficulties. I felt that so far as the reclamation of the arid region was concerned, imaginary state lines should be entirely obliterated; that it should be considered in its entirety, the moneys received from the entire area being spent upon the most feasible projects in that area, regardless of state lines.

So I would acquit the Reclamation Service of blunders in this respect, if mistakes have been made in preferring less feasible projects to more feasible projects—mistakes that were made obligatory by the very terms of the act itself.

Mr. President, I have contended that the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior has for the most part been wisely exercised. We have had one of the most capable and honest construction services organized that has ever existed in the history of this country. The Committee on Irrigation of the Senate has been engaged during the past year in visiting these various works, and not a whisper of corruption has reached them. It has been a work conducted with rare intelligence, with rare integrity, and with rare speed. Twenty-three of these projects have been almost brought to completion or are approaching completion in various sections, and now $30,000,000 is required for the purpose of utilizing the water which we have stored, to be poured upon these arid lands, thus enabling the rapid return to the fund of the moneys spent. I believe that the discretion should be as wide as it was in the original act, and I object to any terms of limitation whatever. But if terms of limitation are to be employed, I think the Senate committee has acted wisely in these limitations. It provides that the money raised from the certificates:

> Shall be expended in the completion of such feasible projects as have been heretofore approved by the Secretary of the Interior and in the construction of such extensions thereof as may be proper and necessary to the successful and profitable operation and maintenance of the projects or to protect water rights claimed by the United States.

What does that mean? It means in the first place that it is limited to the projects already approved, so as to require their immediate completion. But it also provides that the money can be applied to such extensions of those projects—that is to say, such other sections of the projects as have not already been commenced—as may be necessary to the successful and profitable operation and maintenance of the sections completed.

As the Senator from Washington stated, assuming that a project to-day approved is the construction of a particular reservoir, and that the extension of that project involves the construction of canals necessary to irrigate 40,000 acres of land, the sale of which would reimburse the fund, would you so limit the power of the Secretary of the Interior as to enable him to complete the reservoir, but not to build the high-line canals and the distributing canals necessary to make that water serviceable in the irrigation of the arid lands, with a view to the sale of the water rights to the reimbursement of the fund?

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the Senator from Nevada will yield, I think there is no serious dispute about the carrying out of these projects, so as to make them completely efficient when they are equipped, extensions and all. But the immediate question here is this: In issuing certificates for $30,000,000, which is insufficient to do all that, the money to accrue from the placing of these certificates or bonds, which sum is to be applied toward the carrying out of this work, we necessarily must fix some limitation within which the $30,000,000 shall be expended; and the question is one simply of having the language of the act clear and specific as to the extent and purpose of making the expenditure of $30,000,000, which is only a part of the total amount that must be expended.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I understand the Senator, and I claim the limitations are imposed, and that they are imposed just as he himself would impose them if he had the framing of this act. If he had in view any project which involved for the present simply the construction of a reservoir, and there was another section of the project not yet approved which involved the laying out of canals and ditches necessary to utilize the waters of that reservoir, would he simply give the Secretary of the Interior power to complete the reservoir without completing the extension, as yet unapproved, but necessary, in order to make the water useful?

Mr. CRAWFORD. In answer to that I will say to the Senator it seems to me that the language of the act could be made clearer than it is now by simply providing that the money should be expended in the completion of feasible projects and extensions approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. NEWLANDS. That is what it does.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It uses a great many more words than that, and when it gets through it is not nearly so clear.

Mr. NEWLANDS. That is what it says:

Shall be expended in the completion of such feasible projects as have been heretofore approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

Now, the Senator indorses that. Let us read the rest of it:

And in the construction of such extensions thereof as may be proper and necessary to the successful and profitable operation and maintenance of the projects.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Where is there any provision in that language requiring the expenditure to be approved by the Secretary?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Nothing whatever can be done——

Mr. CRAWFORD. That language is without limitation as to time or expenditure.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, on that point—and I think the point made by the Senator from South Dakota is well taken—I have interlined my bill as it would read if an amendment I intend to propose shall be agreed to. After the word "be," in line 15, to insert "in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior," so that he would likewise have to approve the extension, which certainly he is not required to do under the amendment as it stands. I think there will be no objection to it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I am not in charge of the bill, but I certainly should not have any objection to such an amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should think there would not be any.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Because, of course, nothing can be done under this bill that is not satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior. Not a dollar of this money can be spent unless it is expended upon the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior. The Secretary of the Interior is the controlling power throughout this entire work. He caps the entire edifice.

Mr. FLINT. Why, then, if it is the view of the Senator from Nevada that the Secretary of the Interior should have full power over this fund, without any limitation, would it not be better to simply have the certificates issued for the $30,000,000 and have the money covered into the fund and let him expend it just as he sees fit and proper?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I would prefer it. I would rather have the judgment of the entire Reclamation Service, consisting of its 300 engineers, with all these cautionary and precautionary boards, capped by the judgment of the Director of the Reclamation Service, capped finally by the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior, than I would the judgment of an inexpert body on this question. But I do not contend for that, of course.

I am accepting this amendment as framed by the committee, and it seems to me it expressly confines the expenditure of this money to the projects which have already been begun and to the "extensions thereof" which are necessary and proper "to the successful and profitable operation * * * of the projects." Then, it says, "and to protect water rights claimed by the United States." The Senator realizes the insecure tenure of water rights in the West, depending, as they do, not only upon appropriation, but upon beneficial use which must be commenced and extended in good faith.

The United States has there now under the right of appropriation under the laws of the various States water rights which may be lost by reason of the neglect of the Government to commence in good faith the works necessary to utilize them. Would the Senator in such a case deny the Secretary of the Interior the right to apply a portion of the fund to the protection and utilization of these valuable water rights upon which future projects may depend? It seems to me we have gone far enough in limiting the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior and that it would be very much wiser to take this whole thing out of the hands of an inexpert body and submit it to the judgment and the discretion and the conscience of an expert body of scientific men, supplemented by the final judgment of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CARTER rose.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the Senator from Montana makes the statement which I believe he is going to make, may I ask him if he has any objection to inserting in the proposed amendment of the committee, after the word "may," in line 15, on page 3, the words "in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior?"

Mr. CARTER. I have no objection to that.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that amendment.

Mr. CARTER. However, I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that it would probably be better to say "in the judgment of said Secretary."

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; "in the judgment of said Secretary."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, in the proposed committee amendment, in line 15, after the word "may," it is proposed to insert "in the judgment of said Secretary."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Montana if he has any objection, on page 4, line 1, after the words "have been," to insert "recommended by the Secretary of the Interior and," so as to read:

Shall be begun unless and until the same shall have been recommended by the Secretary of the Interior and approved by the direct order of the President of the United States.

Mr. CARTER. I have no objection to that.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that amendment—"recommended by the Secretary of the Interior and."

The SECRETARY. On page 4, in the proposed amendment of the committee in line 1, after the words "have been," at the end of the line, insert "recommended by the Secretary of the Interior and."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I call the attention of the Senator from Montana to the fact that the word "and," in line 22, page 2, should be "an," and I move to make that change. It is a mere misprint.

Mr. CARTER. That is correct.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. I suggest that the letter "s," in the word "projects," in line 24, page 3, should be stricken out so that it will read "project" instead of "projects."

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; that is right.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 24, in the proposed committee amendment it is proposed to strike out "projects" and insert "project."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, with these amendments adopted, I defer to the desire of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] for some time to consider this bill and the amendments pending. I give notice that upon Monday next I will ask the Senate to resume consideration of the bill, in the hope that a final vote may be taken on the bill and amendments before adjournment on that day.

I think the discussion has proceeded to such an extent as to demonstrate the need not only for this latitude in dealing with this matter, but likewise the need for the expeditious passage of the bill. The work of preparing contracts and letting them can scarcely now be completed in season for the commencement of actual work when climatic conditions permit in the spring. If the adoption of the measure is deferred very long, it will be equivalent to the loss of an entire season of construction work.

With this statement, believing there is no executive business to be transacted, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana does not desire action upon the committee amendments?

Mr. CARTER. Not at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Montana.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 36 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 18, 1910, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 17, 1910.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ACT TO AMEND AN ACT PROVIDING FOR THE EXAMINATION OF CERTAIN OFFICERS OF THE ARMY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 3637) to correct the lineal and relative rank of certain officers of the United States Army, and to prevent the occurrence of like cases by amending the act approved October 1, 1890, entitled "An act to provide for the examination of certain officers of the army, and to regulate promotion therein," with a Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

MODIFYING ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-SECOND AND ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-FOURTH ARTICLES OF WAR.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 13410) to modify the One hundred and twenty-second and One hundred and twenty-fourth Articles of War, with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. HULL of Iowa, Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota, and Mr. HAY.

EXTENSION OF TRACKS OF ATCHISON, TOPEKA AND SANTA FE RAILROAD.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 101) authorizing an extension of the tracks of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad on the military reservation at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

THE THIRTEENTH CENSUS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 18364) to amend section 8 of an act to provide for the thirteenth and subsequent decennial censuses, approved July 2, 1909, with a Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House agree to the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (H. R. 17755) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, with a Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House agree to the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 17752) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 5573) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and wars other than the civil war, and to certain widows of such soldiers and sailors, with House amendment disagreed to.

Mr. DRAPER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its disagreement and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, Mr. DRAPER, and Mr. RICHARDSON.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 5237) granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, with a House amendment disagreed to by the Senate.

Mr. DRAPER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist upon its amendment and agree to the conference.

The motion was agreed to, and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, Mr. DRAPER, and Mr. RICHARDSON.

WILLIAM MARTINSON.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 2828) for the relief of William Martinson, with a Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE, ISAAC MYERS v. J. O. PATTERSON.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following letter from the Clerk of the House, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEBRUARY 16, 1910.

Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

SIR: I transmit herewith the contested-election case of Isaac Myers v. J. O. PATTERSON, of the Second Congressional District of South Carolina, which was received at this office February 14, 1910.

Very respectfully,

A. MCDOWELL, Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The letter and accompanying papers will be referred to the Committee on Elections No. 3.

ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT TAFT, STATE FAIR GROUNDS, MILWAUKEE, WIS., SEPTEMBER 17, 1909.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the President's speech or address delivered at Milwaukee, Wis., on September 17, 1909. This is the speech on the postal savings-bank bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the speech of the President indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The address is as follows:

"Mr. President, governor, senators, ladies and gentlemen, and citizens of Wisconsin:

"I am only too conscious of my lack of experience and knowledge in the presence of farmers. You have a governor who is a farmer. You have senators who are farmers. I think all your business men must be farmers, if I can judge by the crowd that greets me here. I must admit that I am a city-bred man, and while the spirit would be willing, I am afraid I could not milk a cow. Nevertheless, he must be blind, indeed, to the interests of his country, he must be lacking, indeed, in acquaintance with the progress of the world, who does not realize what, in the fifty years since that noble patriot, Abraham Lincoln, stood here, has been accomplished in the way of improvement of agriculture and scientific investigation into the methods of breeding and into the methods of treating the soil. But I do not intend to occupy your time in discussing something that you know a great deal better than I do. I want to get on to something that perhaps we are both equally ignorant of, but which it will help us to discuss.

"Something was said about a man's being a ruler and a servant of the people. I have had occasion to say a number of times that it is perhaps true that the President of the United States has a great deal of power, but while he is in office the thing that strikes him is the limitations and the difficulties of exercising that power. The real power is in the House of Representatives and in the Senate. But the man who gets the blame for everything is the fellow at the top. Now, parties make platforms. They are said to be, in the language of the cynical, something to get in on, but not to stand on. Our party—if I may make a partisan reference when I am here only in a nonpartisan capacity—the Republican party agreed that we ought to have an institution, the benefit and virtue of which I wish to discuss this morning, in the shape of postal savings banks. We heard discussed in the Senate last winter the question of how planks were introduced into a party platform, and when they grew a little burdensome to carry out it was said that they were put in at 3 o'clock in the morning, when more than half of the convention were asleep, and when the minority was awake enough to push them in. I do not mean to say that the question of postal savings banks binds everybody who calls himself a Republican—I mean that a plank binds everybody who calls himself a Republican—because that is not the kind of people the Americans are. If they do not like a plank in the platform, or if they do not like the platform, they cease to be Republicans, or they are Republicans with an exception, and that indicates a free, enlightened, and discriminating people. But I am here to uphold the doctrine of postal savings banks, because I believe that they will fill in this country a long-felt want.

"In the first place I want to describe a little bit what it was proposed to put into the savings-bank law in order that you may understand something about what we are speaking. It was proposed to make every money-order office in the United States, of which there are 40,000, and such other post-offices as the Postmaster-General might think fit, postal savings banks. It was proposed to allow anybody to deposit there a dollar or anything more than a dollar in multiples of 10 cents. It was proposed to limit the amount of the deposit in any one month to $200, and to limit the amount of total deposits to $1,000, and to agree to pay interest at the rate of 2 per cent on not more than $500. The money thus accumulated was to be invested by a committee consisting of the Postmaster-General, the Attorney-General, and the Secretary of the Treasury, either in the neighboring national bank in the county, or, if there was no such bank, in the nearest national bank, or, if that was impracticable, in state, county, or federal bonds. They were required to secure in everything but federal bonds 2½ per cent annually. Now, our friends, the bankers, and they are friends; I am not attacking them. It is not wise to attack bankers, either, for really we have a right to be proud of our banking fraternity; but there are a good many who object to the postal savings banks on a number of grounds, and I wish to take up those objections.

"In the first place it is said that the postal savings bank is a very paternal institution; that it has a leaning toward state socialism, and that it proposes to take the banking business out of the hands of private persons and put it in the Government. Now, I am not a paternalist, and I am not a socialist, and I am not in favor of having the Government do anything that private citizens can do as well or better. We have passed beyond the time of what they call the laissez faire school, which believe that the Government ought to do nothing but run a police force. We do recognize the interference of the Government because it has great capital and great resources behind it, and because sometimes it can stand the lack of an immediate return on capital and help out. We did it on our Pacific roads. We have done it in a great many different ways, and this particular postal savings banks business is a business which the Government is especially fitted to do and which no system of private banks can do. In the first place they have this great organization of the post-office, with skilled employees sprinkled all over this country, in every nook and cranny of it. Whether there are many people or few, the post-offices have to be maintained. Therefore it will be a most economic means of establishing a system of savings banks merely to add one function to the duty of the postmasters all through this country. It can be done most cheaply. The Government can afford it, and nobody else could do it. It is said that we have enough banking in this country, and therefore we ought not to put the Government into it. It is said, moreover, that if we did put the Government into it, it would not be very long before the Government would do all the banking, discounting, and everything else, and the bankers would be driven out of business.

"I do not think that that argument amounts to much. It is to say that the American people have not sense enough to discriminate between what is a right use of the post-office and what is a right thing to do with reference to savings banks and the going into the general business of discounting and banking, which the Government has no business to do. I believe in the discriminating sense of the American people to know the degree to which they ought to go in a good thing and then to know that when they get beyond it, it becomes a bad thing, and to say that if you go into one thing you are going to get into something which is worse, is to question the intelligence and the discrimination of our people, and do not propose to do it.

"Let us see about banking and the amount that the people of the United States have in the way of opportunities to deposit money. In 14 States the deposits of savings banks amount to $3,600,000,000. I will not say that in these States there was a crushing demand for postal savings banks, although even there they would discharge a certain function, but when you come to consider the other 32 States and Territories, the deposits are only $70,000,000. In other words, 98 per cent of all the deposits in the savings banks in the country are in 14 States, which tends to show conclusively that in the 32 States the banking facilities—at least the savings-bank facilities—for the deposit of funds to encourage thrift on the part of the people are very inadequate, and it is in those States that we expect, if the postal savings-bank system is put in, that the people will be induced to save more money instead of spending it, or instead of putting it into the sock, where it does not do much good until it is withdrawn. Now, in New England, in the savings banks, there are two citizens to one savings-bank account. In every other part of the United States the savings-bank accounts are 1 to every 157 people, which tends to show the concentration of savings-bank deposits in the East. Another means of determining the need for such a system is the fact that to-day, in the distant States to which I have referred, there are $8,000,000 deposited by men who take out money orders and just leave the money in the money-order office of the post-office without drawing any interest at all. They just put it there because they do not know where else to put it, which is an indication that they ought to have some place where they can put it and draw some interest. We send abroad every year over $90,000,000, and a very large proportion of that goes into the savings banks abroad. Our new immigrants when they come here are distrustful of the local banks, they are distrustful of the private savings-deposit banks, and what they want is a government stamp in order to secure to them the certainty that when they want their money they can get it. They are not so insistent on the rate of interest as they are on the certainty of getting their money back, and if they have the government guaranty that they will get it they can be counted upon to deposit their money; they can be counted upon rather to deposit than to waste it.

"The great usefulness of the postal savings bank is an encouragement of thrift on the part of those who are just wavering in the balance whether they shall save the money or use it, because they do not know where they can put it safely. It is said that this will interfere with the system of savings banks and other banks. I most urgently deny that, because we only propose to pay 2 per cent, and every savings bank that you know of pays at least 3 and sometimes 3½ or 4. Therefore those who put their money in a postal savings bank at 2 per cent are not those who would be likely to put the money in a savings bank at 3. Instead of that it will furnish more money to the savings banks, and I will tell you how, and I will tell you this in confidence, because this is the way it is worked in other countries. You stir up a lot of people to begin to save money and put it in at 2 per cent, and they put it in there because they know they can get the money back. That is the whole idea they have at first, but after they get in there and after they begin to calculate what a small per cent 2 per cent is they begin to look around; they learn for themselves; they acquire some discrimination, and they understand that in the neighboring bank they can get 3 or 3½ per cent. They acquire more intelligence and more knowledge in respect to the matter, and then they begin to estimate the security of the private or state savings bank. Under these conditions this fund which never would have come at all will be available for the savings banks as the intelligence of the depositor grows greater and as his willingness to risk a little more in order to get a little more interest becomes more acute. We are not usually backward in adopting new and proper assistance to our people and to the Government, but we may look abroad frequently to learn lessons in the matter of finance, and even in the matter of some departments of the Government. I want to read you a list of the countries that have postal savings banks. Let me first say, in Italy there are $273,000,000 deposited in the postal savings banks of the country; in Russia, $130,000,000; in Great Britain and Ireland, $766,000,000; in Canada, $47,000,000; in Japan, $47,000,000. Now, I want to say about Canada: Canada has postal savings banks, and what is the result along the border up in the Northwest? You find Americans going over the border and making deposits in those savings banks. Why? Because they have the guaranty of the Canadian government. Now, it is right that when the Government takes custody of money it should agree to return it. It is upon the agreement to return that the basis of the postal savings bank may be put. There are postal savings banks in Austria, Belgium, Japan, France, Hungary, Italy, Holland, Russia, Sweden, Great Britain and Ireland, Bahamas, Canada, India, Ceylon, Straits Settlements, Cape Colony, Tasmania, Western Australia, New Zealand, and the Gold Coast, and, I may add, in the Philippines, because I had something to do with putting them there. In Germany they do not have them, but they have a system of town and provincial banks, which fills the measure of the demand.

"You know we have issued upward of $700,000,000 of 2 per cent bonds of the United States, and we have prided ourselves and our heads have been a little bit swelled on the theory that we could float bonds at 2 per cent and no other country could. We did float these at par at 2 per cent—I do not know but that it was a little more—but we did it by getting the banks into a corner so that they had to have under the law some government security, and so they were obliged to buy those 2 per cent bonds. Now they are liable to be on the market. We have to take care of them in some way. We have got to prevent their going down below par, because the normal interest rate that a government can get is quite above 2 per cent—somewhere between 2 and 3 per cent—and if we have the postal savings banks, if we have a large fund of $500,000,000 or $600,000,000 or $700,000,000, as we may expect to have in view of what has happened in Great Britain, we can use that fund to put in government bonds and take care of that issue which is our child and which, after all, we ought not to be so proud of, because we fooled the world into thinking that we were getting something at 2 per cent and that our credit was worth that, when, as a matter of fact, we were forcing the banking fraternity into taking them because of certain other advantages which they had to have. It was just a little bunco game which the Government played, and it is necessary that in any legislation which comes along we should take care of that issue of 2 per cent and not take on too heavy issue of bonds. This question is one that will doubtless involve a great deal of discussion.

"I observed yesterday in the convention of bankers the proposition was urgently and ably fought. Nevertheless, it seems to me, looking at it from a larger field of view, possibly, than bankers can have, because we are all subject to the prejudices of our profession—I am a lawyer, and I know I am prejudiced as a lawyer—and I think bankers are likely to be prejudiced as bankers; nevertheless, I believe that the arguments in favor of instituting such a system, backed up by the experience of so many other nations as those I have named to you, justify our going into the business of encouraging our people by something that will be inexpensive to the Government, encouraging our people, those of them who have not the sense of security in private banks, encouraging them to a thrift and furnishing the means by which they shall save on small interest. We are justified in urging the passage of the savings-bank law. We are looking forward, I hope, with confidence, to a readjustment of our whole financial system and banking system. Certainly it needs it, and it has been suggested that the postal savings bank might well await that. I am bound to say that I do not see the necessity for uniting them. It seems to me that one system can stand by itself, and if we adopt the postal savings bank it would be easily worked into a general system of banking, because those savings banks will furnish us $500,000,000 or $600,000,000, and that is a very tidy pile to have around for the Government to use legitimately in order to carry on any financial operations."

COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 397.

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture is hereby authorized to have such printing and binding done as may be required in the transaction of its business during the Sixty-first Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Is that committee actually in operation now or not?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Yes; and it has been for weeks at a time holding investigations, and we desire to have the matter printed for the benefit of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

AGAINST REPEAL OF OLEOMARGARINE LAW.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I present and ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD resolutions adopted by the Minnesota State Dairymen's Association at their annual convention, January 18, 19, and 20, 1910, protesting against the repeal of the antioleomargarine law or the reduction of the tax on colored oleomargarine imposed by that law. These resolutions were adopted by an association that represents the dairymen of our State, who are a unit in their opposition to the enactment of the legislation now pending before committees of this House proposing to reduce the 10-cent tax on oleomargarine colored in imitation of butter and otherwise destroying the color distinction between butter and oleomargarine.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolutions are as follows:

THE REPORT OF RESOLUTIONS COMMITTEE.

Whereas the present law enacted by Congress May 9, 1902, and commonly known as the "Grout bill," is in danger of being repealed by the Sixty-first Congress, and in lieu thereof the bill (H. R. 13842), known as the "Burleson bill," substituted; and

Whereas we believe the Grout law to be a just law and enacted solely for the purpose of protecting the dairy interest and the consuming public from the fraudulent selling of oleomargarine as butter; and

Whereas the color distinction as defined by that law in imposing a greater tax on colored oleomargarine than when uncolored works no hardship on the oleomargarine manufacturers or the consumers of oleomargarine; and

Whereas it is further claimed that the said law is a discrimination against the cattle raising and cotton-growing interests of the United States, in that it is a prohibitory tax on those manufacturing oleomargarine, and incidentally raises the price of the "poor man's" butter; and

Whereas we believe that the only practical way to prevent fraud in the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine is to preserve the color distinction, as is now done by the present law; and

Whereas the claims of discrimination are clearly disproved by the fact that in December, 1909, the manufacturing of oleomargarine has increased 100 per cent over the output of 1906, and that in December, 1909, 10,126,562 pounds were manufactured and that only 2.71 per cent paid the 10-cent tax as colored oleomargarine: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, By the Minnesota dairymen in convention assembled, at the annual convention of the Minnesota State Dairyman's Association at Hutchinson, Minn., January 18, 19, and 20, 1910, that we protest against the enactment of the Burleson bill (H. R. 13842) or the repeal of the Grout law as enacted May 9, 1902; and be it further

Resolved, That we urge upon our Senators and Members of Congress to use all honorable means to prevent the passage of the Burleson bill and to prevent the repeal of the Grout law; and be it further

Resolved, That we also urge upon our Senators and Members of Congress the importance of amending the present Grout law so as to prevent evasions of the law and prevent the illegal sale of colored oleomargarine; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of this association be directed to transmit to each of our Senators and Members of Congress copies of these resolutions, with the request that they take such steps as they deem necessary in view of the above facts set forth.

CERTAIN CHANGES IN THE PERMANENT SYSTEM OF HIGHWAYS PLAN, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 16916) to authorize certain changes in the permanent system of highways plan, District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to prepare a new highways plan for that portion of the first section of the permanent system of highways plan lying between Georgia avenue on the east, Sixteenth street on the west, Kalmia street on the north, and Butternut street on the south, under the provisions contained in the act of Congress approved March 2, 1893, entitled "An act to provide a permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of cities," and an amendment to said act approved June 28, 1898.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the report, which is brief, be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 16916) to authorize certain changes in the permanent system of highways plan, District of Columbia, report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

This proposed change in the plan of the permanent system of highways for the District of Columbia received the approval of the District Commissioners for the reasons set forth in the following communication:

OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, January 17, 1910.

SIR: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to submit the following on House bill 16916, Sixty-first Congress, second session, "To authorize certain changes in the permanent system of highways plan, District of Columbia," which you referred to them for examination and report.

The object of preparing a new highway plan for that portion of the District lying east of Georgia avenue and west of Sixteenth street, north of Butternut street and south of Kalmia street, which is proposed by the bill, is to provide for the abandonment as a highway of North Dakota avenue between these limits. The reason for this is that the grounds of the Walter Reed Army Hospital and certain of the buildings on this site lying west of Georgia avenue make the extension of North Dakota avenue impracticable.

It is further proposed to change somewhat the directions of the north and south and east and west streets through this tract to enable its development more in keeping with the topography of the tract than is possible on the basis of rectilinear streets now laid down on the highway plan in this section. The changes proposed will be to the advantage of the District as well as to the owners of the property involved, and will facilitate improvements. None of the streets which will be affected by the new plan are now owned by the public, so that no abandonment of public space is involved.

The commissioners recommend favorable action on the bill.

Respectfully,

HENRY B. F. MACFARLAND,
President Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Hon. S. W. SMITH,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I do not think I can add anything to what is contained in the report, and I ask for a vote.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

INDEX IN OFFICE OF RECORDER OF DEEDS.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 18156) directing the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia to keep an index to recording instruments by lots or tracts.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the 1st day of January, 1911, section 555 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia be amended by adding thereto:

"Provided, That the recorder of deeds for the District of Columbia shall keep and maintain, by lot, square, tract, or parcel, an index to all deeds and instruments affecting real estate in the District of Columbia received for recordation. Said index shall show under the square or parcel number, as said squares or parcels are now or hereafter may be shown on the plats and plans of the District of Columbia compiled for purposes of taxation, the lot or parcel of ground affected by the instrument recorded whenever it is practicable to locate the said real estate intended to be affected within such square or parcel; and whenever it is impracticable to locate the real estate in such square or parcel, then he shall index the same under the name of the parties given in the deed or instrument recorded, and shall, as far as possible, indicate the property intended to be affected by such deed or instrument after such name: And provided, That after the 1st day of January, 1911, all instruments tendered for record in which original lots, subdivision lots, squares, or tracts are mentioned shall, in addition to any other description, contain a reference to the square or parcel shown on the plats and plans of the District of Columbia for taxation purposes in which the real estate intended to be affected is contained, and the recorder of deeds shall not, unless for good cause shown to him, receive any instrument for record unless the provisions of this act are therein substantially complied with."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a reading of the report in this case.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 18156) directing the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia to keep an index to recorded instruments by lots or tracts, report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

This bill, which proposes legislation which will greatly facilitate and promote accuracy in the searching of the records of real estate titles, came to this committee with especially strong recommendations. Its original suggestion is the result of the experience of the present recorder of deeds, Mr. John C. Dancy, as detailed to the President of the United States in a letter which was afterwards transmitted to this committee by Hon. George W. Wickersham, Attorney-General of the United States. The communication of the latter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., December 23, 1909.

MY DEAR SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a letter from the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia, dated December 14, 1909, transmitted to me by the President, together with a draft of a bill prepared by the recorder of deeds, authorizing and directing him to keep an index of certain instruments recorded in his office. The attorney in charge of titles of this department says that, in his opinion, this bill would facilitate the examination of titles in the District of Columbia, and I therefore concur in his recommendation that its passage be procured, if possible.

Respectfully,

GEO. W. WICKERSHAM,
Attorney-General.

Hon. S. W. SMITH, M. C.,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,
House of Representatives.

OFFICE OF THE RECORDER OF DEEDS,
Washington, D. C., December 14, 1909.

MR. PRESIDENT: This office having received many requests that it shall index all instruments recorded therein affecting real estate under a square or parcel number, and I being doubtful of my authority to do so in the absence of express legislative authority and direction, I have the honor to herewith submit for your consideration draft of a bill which, if enacted by the Congress, would authorize and direct the recorder of deeds for the District of Columbia to institute and maintain such an index, the proposed bill also making it compulsory for persons drawing such instruments to describe the real property affected by square and parcel number.

During the more than one hundred years' existence of this office instruments recorded therein affecting real property have been indexed only by the names of the parties thereto, the result being that the searching of titles to real property in this District has been made a matter of great length of time and no little confusion. It is contended by those requesting an index by square or parcel that such waste of time and confusion would thereby be avoided, and that the institution of such an index would place this office on a modern and up-to-date footing in that respect. In this contention I concur and respectfully ask that you lay the matter before the Congress, or that you authorize me to present it to the chairman of the Senate and House Committees on the District of Columbia, I having presented the matter to you for the reason that a recent order of yours precludes me from submitting it directly to the Congress.

I have the honor to be, your most obedient servant,

JOHN C. DANCY,
Recorder of Deeds, District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT,
White House, Washington, D. C.

The above communication of the honorable Attorney-General was referred by the chairman of this committee to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for their consideration. They thereupon submitted the draft of the bill herewith reported, with additional reasons for its enactment, as follows:

OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, January 12, 1910.

DEAR SIR: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to recommend the introduction and enactment of the following draft of "A bill directing the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia to keep an index to recorded instruments by lot or tracts."

This proposed legislation is a copy of the draft inclosed in the letter of the clerk of your committee, under date of the 4th instant, written at your instance and said by him to have been received from the Attorney-General with a letter from the recorder of deeds of the District, by whom the draft was prepared.

The commissioners have conferred with the assessor on the subject. They are advised by that official that the proposed legislation would be a great help to his office in keeping its records. Some of the ideas contained in the bill are embodied in his annual report for the fiscal year 1909, as follows:

"The notation of transfers upon the cards of this office by square and lot suggests a method of keeping track of deeds in the land records of the District which is superior to the method now in vogue of having an index by name only. It has even been suggested that deeds when recorded should be placed in books bearing the square numbers, as is done in New York, so that in order to find any transfer it would only be necessary to find the book with number corresponding to number of square, and quick reference would then be insured by having a small number of names to be looked over. Where this book method is not used, a card-index system in some public office, based on the method of squares and lots as used in this office, would materially assist the property owner, especially as the public is recording each year a larger number of papers relating to transfers in the District, making the system by names more complex and cumbersome."

Very respectfully,

HENRY B. F. MACFARLAND,
President of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Hon. S. W. SMITH,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,
House of Representatives.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

CHANGE OF NAME OF PART OF FIFTEENTH STREET NW. TO M'PHERSON PLACE.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 19787) to change the name of the west side of Fifteenth street NW., between I and K streets, to McPherson place.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the portion of Fifteenth street NW., between I and K streets, on the west side of McPherson square, shall be, and the same is hereby, designated McPherson place, and the surveyor of the District of Columbia is hereby directed to enter such change on the records of his office.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

WASHINGTON, SPA SPRINGS AND GRETTA RAILROAD COMPANY OF MARYLAND.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 17531) entitled "An act to amend an act authorizing the Washington, Spa Springs and Gretta Railroad Company of Maryland to enter the District of Columbia, with amendments," approved February 18, 1907, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

The SPEAKER. What is the motion of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. What is the number of that bill?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. This is H. R. 17531. It is the bill which passed the House a week ago, and has passed the Senate with the amendment just read. It is a bill extending the time of the Washington, Spa Springs and Gretta Railroad.

The SPEAKER. The bill is disposed of, and the House has concurred in the Senate amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the District business.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. GAINES in the chair.

EXTENSION OF FOURTH STREET SE.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 13864) to extend Fourth street SE.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to open for use as a public thoroughfare a 50-foot roadway along the line of Fourth street SE. through the United States reservation lying between Congress Heights and Washington Highlands, so as to connect Fourth street, Congress Heights, with Fourth street, Washington Highlands.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I will not ask for the reading of the report, but will ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred H. R. 13864, to extend Fourth street SE., report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

On March 15, 1909, Hon. WALTER P. BROWNLOW introduced in the House of Representatives H. R. 16, to extend Fourth street SE. from Congress Heights to Washington Highlands, D. C., and on December 7, 1909, H. R. 13431, granting a right of way through land of the Government Hospital for the Insane to connect Fourth street, Congress Heights, D. C., with Fourth street, Washington Highlands, D. C.

These two bills were referred to this committee and by the chairman submitted to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for their examination and report. On H. R. 16 the following report was received from the commissioners:

OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, December —, 1909.

SIR: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to submit the following on House bill No. 16, Sixty-first Congress, first session, to extend Fourth street SE. from Congress Heights to Washington Highlands, D. C., which you referred to them for examination and report:

The object of this bill is to open a connecting roadway between Congress Heights and Washington Highlands, two subdivisions in the southeastern part of the District of Columbia, by having the Secretary of the Interior set aside for highway purposes a portion of the grounds of the Government Hospital for the Insane. The bill provides that such connecting highway shall be 90 feet in width.

The commissioners do not believe that a greater width than 50 feet is necessary or desirable. While they believe that the purpose of the bill is desirable, they do not believe any appropriation for the physical improvement for such a connecting highway would be justified for many years to come. The highway would connect Congress Heights and Washington Highlands, from which latter locality there is but a small amount of traffic, which is now served by the indirect route of Livingstone road and Nichols avenue.

The commissioners would suggest that as the land proposed to be taken for highway purposes is part of a reservation under the control of the Secretary of the Interior, it would be advisable that the bill be referred to him for an expression of his views. A plat showing in red the land proposed to be taken for the highway, and an amended bill providing for a 50-foot roadway and properly describing the reservation through which it would run, are inclosed.

Respectfully,

HENRY B. F. MACFARLAND,
President Board of Commissioners District of Columbia.

Hon. SAMUEL W. SMITH,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

On December 18, 1909, a report was received from the commissioners on H. R. 13431, which was identical with the report made on H. R. 16, with the exception of the title of the bill, and the same amended bill, or substitute, was submitted by the commissioners in each report. This substitute was introduced in the House by the chairman of this committee and became H. R. 13864, to extend Fourth street SE., the subject of this report.

Acting upon the suggestion of the District Commissioners, this bill was submitted to the honorable the Secretary of the Interior for his examination and report, and the following report was received:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 17, 1910.

SIR: I am in receipt of your letter inclosing, with request for report thereon, H. R. 13864, Sixty-first Congress, second session, to extend Fourth street SE. through the reservation now used by the Government Hospital for the Insane. The bill in question is as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to open for use as a public thoroughfare a 50-foot roadway along the line of Fourth street SE. through the United States reservation lying between Congress Heights and Washington Highlands, so as to connect Fourth street, Congress Heights, with Fourth street, Washington Highlands."

A bill similar in character (H. R. 12415) was submitted to this department for consideration by the Committee on the District of Columbia in January, 1908, and in an adverse report thereon it was stated, amongst other things:

"This bill provides for putting a public thoroughfare through one portion of a piece of land owned by the Government Hospital for the Insane and used as a truck garden. In regard to this specific proposition, and all other similar propositions to construct public thoroughfares running through the hospital grounds, I can best repeat what I said in a report on House bill No. 9, to wit, as follows:

"'Several bills have been introduced within the past two or three years with a view to cutting public thoroughfares through some portion of the hospital reservation. It is to my mind very important that no precedent be established along these lines.'

"The hospital can not continue to do its work efficiently if it is to be invaded on all sides in this manner. A certain amount of isolation is required for the peculiar problem with which it has to deal.

"For the above reasons I do not think the bill should be passed."

Since the receipt of your request for a report the department has had before it in conference the superintendent of the Government Hospital for the Insane and a representative of the Citizens' Association of Congress Heights. After a thorough discussion of this matter the department is strongly of the opinion that the purpose of the bill under consideration affords a needed relief to the citizens involved, while at the same time it is equally firm in its conviction that the measure here presented is but the forerunner of numerous requests of a similar character; and conceding that the Government Hospital for the Insane is to continue upon its present basis, this reservation should not be divided, but should be allowed, as stated before in a former report, "a certain amount of isolation for the peculiar problem with which it has to deal."

I find that the opposition of the hospital authorities may substantially be put upon two grounds—

(1) That the privilege herein sought tends to destroy the isolation needed by an institution of this kind.

(2) That it takes from the hospital lands urgently needed for its purposes.

In the consideration of this matter I would urge upon Congress the necessity which clearly exists at this time for defining the future of this institution. The Government Hospital for the Insane had on January 1, 1910, 2,883 patients and 790 officers and employees, or a total population of 3,673, and it had approximately 800 acres of land.

As is well known, this institution, under existing law, is constantly receiving patients, from the Army and Navy, Marine Corps, Revenue-Cutter Service, National Homes for Disabled Volunteers, indigent and others from the District of Columbia, and insane criminals in the custody of officers of the United States, or after conviction.

If the laws governing admission to this institution remain substantially as they are, the inference is plain that the population of this institution will gradually and steadily increase, both as to patients, attendants, and physicians. It is, therefore, at no distant date, and, in fact, in the opinion of the superintendent of the institution, the time has now arrived when preliminary steps should be taken toward the acquisition of more ground and further buildings to supply future needs.

With this condition before us, it is therefore evident that as settlements around the hospital reservation increase the value of the land increases and the difficulty and cost of acquiring more land increase in steady ratio.

Therefore, while the department feels that there is merit on the part of the citizens interested in opening the street referred to, it still feels that there is also a problem confronting the Government Hospital for the Insane which should have serious attention at the same time.

I will therefore interpose no further objection to the passage of this bill, provided the future needs of the hospital are carefully considered along the lines suggested above and that the text of the bill be so changed that it shall not be mandatory upon the Secretary of the Interior to open the reservation through which this proposed extension shall pass until such time as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall certify to this department that they are prepared to expend the necessary funds to improve the strip proposed to be opened for public traffic.

Very respectfully,

R. A. BALLINGER,
Secretary.

Hon. SAMUEL W. SMITH,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,
House of Representatives.

This committee is also in receipt of the following communication from the Public Improvement Association of Congress Heights, urging the passage of the bill:

PUBLIC IMPROVEMENT ASSOCIATION OF CONGRESS HEIGHTS,
Congress Heights, D. C., January 8, 1910.

SIR: The undersigned has been requested by a unanimous vote of the members of this association to inform you of their hearty approval of the proposed measure to connect the subdivision of Congress Heights with Washington Highlands by a right of way through the land of the Government Hospital for the Insane, and to extend to you their sincere gratitude for the interest shown by you for this locality, with the hope that Congress may pass H. R. 13864 at the favorable recommendation of your committee.

Very respectfully,

RICHARD F. JONES,
Secretary.

Hon. SAMUEL W. SMITH,
Chairman Committee on District of Columbia,
United States House of Representatives.

The committee has also recently received a communication from the president of that association, giving additional reasons for the extension proposed. He says:

PUBLIC IMPROVEMENT ASSOCIATION OF CONGRESS HEIGHTS,
Congress Heights, D. C., January 31, 1910.

MY DEAR SIR: Aside from the numerous reasons that have been given and may be given for the extension of Fourth street SE. (H. R. 13864), I wish to particularly call your attention to the advantages in fire protection that would follow the eventual opening of this street through the grounds of the Government Hospital for the Insane.

In the vicinity of Fourth street, Washington Highlands, and along the district line farther south are several settlements that are under the protection of the one fire engine at Congress Heights. With no through street to reach these people, such as Fourth street would give, the fire apparatus must travel around the numerous windings of the Livingston road, traveling at least 10 squares out of the way to combat a possible fire. Such a situation is peculiar, to say the least, and the officers and men of the Congress Heights station realize the dangers more than others.

Police protection would likewise be quickened by the opening of this street, saving much time in reaching the settlements referred to.

Congress has been fair in opening through streets and avenues in other suburban portions of the District, thus beautifying the District and giving quick access to citizens going to and from their homes. In all the wide territory from Pennsylvania avenue southeast, all the way round to the Potomac River southwest, a distance of 4 or 5 miles on an air line, there is not a single through street or avenue reaching the District line. Country roads, with their many windings, are the means of travel for those passing in or out of the District or to its farther borders.

It is seen from the reports of the Secretary of the Interior that the merits of the matter, from the standpoint of the citizens, is clearly recognized, although the department naturally dislikes to yield any portion of its land, even so small a part.

Under these circumstances, together with the favorable report of the District Commissioners, it is the hope of citizens throughout this region that the House District Committee will see fit to make a favorable recommendation to the House of Representatives for the passage of this bill.

Respectfully,

W. W. PRICE, President.

Hon. SAMUEL W. SMITH,
House of Representatives.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF FORTY-FIRST STREET NW.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 13893) to authorize the extension of Forty-first street NW.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That under and in accordance with the provisions of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, within six months after the passage of this act, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the supreme court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary for the extension of Forty-first street NW., from Belt road north to Keokuk street, as now dedicated, with a width of 90 feet: Provided, however, That the entire amount found to be due and awarded by the jury in said proceedings as damages, for and in respect of the land to be condemned for said extension plus the costs and expenses of said proceeding, shall be assessed by the jury as benefits: And provided further, That nothing in said subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of said code shall be construed to authorize the jury to assess less than the aggregate amount of the damages awarded for and in respect of the land to be condemned and the costs and expenses of the proceeding hereunder.

SEC. 2. That there is hereby authorized to be expended from the revenues of the District of Columbia an amount sufficient to pay the necessary costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto, and for the payment of amounts awarded as damages; to be repaid to the District of Columbia from the assessments for benefits and covered into the Treasury to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Also the following committee amendment:

Strike out of line 10, page 1, the words "Belt road" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Harrison street."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill as amended be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

DESIGNATING LAND IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 16330) to authorize the surveyor of the District of Columbia to adopt the system of designating land in the District of Columbia now in force in the office of the assessor of said District.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the surveyor of the District of Columbia be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place upon the official record of each and every plat of land in the District of Columbia, outside of the city of Washington, the new numbers given the blocks or squares or lots or parcels of ground by which said land has been designated upon the recorded series of volumes of plats, under the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 23, 1905, entitled "An act to designate parcels of land in the District of Columbia for the purpose of assessment and taxation, and for other purposes," and the new numbers so placed upon the record shall become the official designation of said blocks, squares, lots, and parcels of ground for all purposes.

SEC. 2. That to carry out the provisions of this act the sum of $4,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, one-half from the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half from any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, said sum to be expended by per diem services under the direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill H. R. 16331.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That under and in accordance with the provisions of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, within six months after the passage of this act the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary for the extension of Belmont road to Calvert street, and to connect said extension of Belmont road with Waterside drive, and to extend Waterside drive to the southerly line of the Zoological Park, as shown on plans on file in the office of the engineer commissioner.

That there is hereby appropriated, one-half from the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an amount sufficient to pay the necessary costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto and for the payment of amounts awarded as damages, the amounts assessed for benefits to be paid to the District of Columbia and covered into the Treasury to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia and the United States in equal parts.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if this relates to the crossing over that ravine out there where there is a bridge and the stream is diverted by the sewer?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think you have reference to what is known as the "Piney Branch," or Sixteenth street, bill, the next bill we intend to call up.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation?

The question was taken, and it was so ordered.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I am going to ask that the report be printed in the RECORD in this case.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The following is the report:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 16331) to acquire land in the vicinity of the Connecticut Avenue Bridge for the extension of certain streets, report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The draft of this bill was submitted to this committee by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and its passage strongly urged by them in the following communication:

OFFICE COMMISSIONERS DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, December 23, 1909.

SIR: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to forward herewith a bill to acquire land in the vicinity of the Connecticut Avenue Bridge for the extension of certain streets, which they have prepared after considerable study.

The Connecticut Avenue Bridge has been completed and opened for public use. It becomes evident that to preserve the effect of the improvement and to eliminate the possibility of houses being constructed in a position to detract from the beauty of the series of handsome arches spanning the valley, that a rearrangement of highways in the eastern side of the valley at an early date is imperatively necessary. The eastern abutment of the bridge lies now directly across the former line of Belmont road. It will be necessary to deflect the line of this road nearly 100 feet in order to have it pass under the first arch. It is also desirable that a connecting road should be constructed just east of the end of the bridge, descending to old Belmont road, in both directions, and in order to get a road of proper gradient (not to exceed 8 per cent) it will be necessary to take off from Belmont road some 500 feet from the bridge.

Similarly it is advisable to construct a drive from the intersection of Twentieth and Calvert streets toward the bridge on a descending gradient, to connect near the end of the old abandoned bridge with the road formerly known as "Waterside drive," and to bring the Belmont road down to this junction, turn this driveway at this point back on itself, dropping, on a proper gradient, on land at present owned by the District in Rock Creek Valley, under the Calvert Street Bridge, and through a short strip, making a connection between the end of this road and the Zoological Park. A plat is submitted herewith showing the land which it will be necessary to condemn to carry this project into effect. It is believed that the cost of acquiring this land will be about $65,000.

The bill is drawn to leave the amount to be assessed against abutting and surrounding property in the discretion of the jury. It is estimated that about $15,000 will be returned in assessments. The commissioners believe that this project is of sufficient public importance to justify the enactment of the bill which they have prepared into law at an early date, and they have the honor to recommend that this be done.

The desirability and urgency of securing this ground for the protection of the Connecticut Avenue Bridge, and the consequent rearrangement of frontages overlooking that structure, are strongly suggested by the rapidity and amount of building development that has already taken place in that vicinity.

Very respectfully,

HENRY B. F. MACFARLAND,
President of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Hon. S. W. SMITH,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia, House of Representatives.

The purpose of this bill is to acquire certain ground to the south and east of the Connecticut Avenue Bridge for the purpose of laying out a road crossing over the south approach to the bridge, which will replace the old Belmont road, across which it was necessary to construct the south abutment of the bridge. It will make possible, also, a second lower level road running under the first arch of the bridge and connection with Belmont road to the east and west thereof. It will further make possible a connection between Connecticut avenue and Calvert street, which are at high level, and Waterside drive running along the low level of Rock Creek Park. It will further secure the ownership of a small piece of ground at the present north end of Waterside drive, thereby affording an entrance to the Zoological Park from the latter.

Private ownership at the south end of the bridge and to the east thereof is such that dumping and building may be undertaken to the very great detriment of the bridge. The topography of the ground in this locality is such that for a great many years to come there is bound to exist under present ownership the combined objection of extensive dumping and building development, with the tops and back yards of houses in evidence from the bridge. The unsightliness of such condition is manifest, as should also be the desirability of its prevention. The bridge cost over $1,000,000. More than $500,000 of this was spent to secure sightliness and a monumental structure, and this would be practically lost unless the land be obtained in accordance with this bill.

It is estimated that the cost of acquiring the land concerned in this measure will be about $65,000, of which it is believed that at least $15,000 will be returned in assessments.

WIDENING SIXTEENTH STREET NW. AT PINEY BRANCH.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill H. R. 16334.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That under and in accordance with the provisions of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, within six months after the passage of this act the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the supreme court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary for the widening of Sixteenth street where it crosses Piney Branch, on the east side, between Shepherd street and Spring road, so as to preserve the valley grade and connect with Piney Branch parkway, in accordance with plans on file in the office of the Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia, the area of the land to be acquired not to exceed 4½ acres.

SEC. 2. That there is hereby appropriated, one-half from the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an amount sufficient to pay the necessary costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto and for the payment of amounts awarded as damages; the amounts collected as benefits to be repaid to the District of Columbia and covered into the Treasury to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia and the United States in equal parts.

SEC. 3. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to make a new highway plan for that portion of the District of Columbia in the vicinity of said widening and along the Piney Branch parkway, under the provisions contained in the act of Congress approved March 2, 1893, entitled "An act to provide a permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of cities," and an amendment to said act, approved June 28, 1898; that upon the completion and recording of said new highway plan it shall take the place of and stand for any previous plan for said portion of the District of Columbia.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield me some time?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yield the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill which has for its purpose the acquirement of nothing more and nothing less than a "hole in the ground" out here, which is to cost the United States Government $4,000, and which is absolutely worthless to anybody for any purpose. The statements made before the committee were to the effect that there was no other object to be obtained except for beautifying the District. An additional object was, however, stated that it would give a beautiful road to some of the adjacent parks. I want to say to the committee that I have been out there and examined this place, and find that according to the measurements made by the engineer, that it is, as I said, simply a hole in the ground, 84 feet deep, which is to cost, if acquired, about $4,000. They say that a beautiful road can be made to one of the parks, and that there is no other road to the park. That is a mistake. There is already a road to the park, which is near to the bridge, without acquiring any more property at all. In my judgment a monumental mistake toward the waste of public money has already been made at this point. They have constructed a bridge there at great cost over a creek. Now they have adopted a plan almost simultaneously with the construction of this bridge to divert the waters of that creek through a sewer, so that there will no longer be any necessity for the bridge; and there was no necessity for the bridge, in my judgment, when it was erected. It is not yet quite completed. I can see no earthly use of this bridge across a stream, and at the same time to spend thousands and thousands of dollars to divert the water of that stream through a canal.

This, Mr. Chairman, is my objection to the bill. I believe it is an absolute waste of money, and therefore I am opposed to it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to answer the gentleman from Kentucky on his own argument, that the principal purpose is to beautify the park. I consider that a sufficient reason, without any other reason whatsoever. I consider that it is the duty of every Member of Congress to take all possible steps to beautify the national capital. The situation is even stronger than that which is stated by the gentleman. His figures are not quite accurate. It is 65 feet instead of 84. The purpose of building this bridge was to carry Sixteenth street across this hollow, not to span the stream or anything like that, but to carry a boulevard.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. WILEY. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will ask the gentleman if this ravine could not have been crossed for the purpose of extending this street by a fill instead of the bridge, the fill to cost not more than 5 cents on the dollar that the bridge cost?

Mr. WILEY. I believe that the fill would have cost more than the bridge, and would have been most unsightly from every point of view. The bridge, which cost $160,000, or will when completed, is the most sightly object in that locality, and has greatly improved the property in that vicinity.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will interrupt the gentleman to say that it appeared before the committee that the bridge was to cost $200,000.

Mr. WILEY. I refer the gentleman to the report of the commissioners touching this. It is at the service of the gentleman if he cares to read it. But this project is also to protect the approach to the bridge. This hollow would not be used for any purpose except, probably, for the erection of houses of an inferior kind—shanties, and all that sort of thing. We propose to make an entrance to the park. While there are ways of getting to the park, there is no suitable entrance going directly to Rock Creek Park. We have already allowed the approaches to the park to be marred by suffering buildings to be erected near Connecticut Avenue Bridge, which is the finest cement bridge in the world, perhaps. We took no precaution to acquire land near the approaches to the bridge, with the result that houses have been erected, shutting out the view of this fine bridge and approaches from the north side, and the effect has been very bad; and what we desire to avoid is a repetition of this blunder in the present case.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. There is a very clear report in this case, and I will ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 16334) for the widening of Sixteenth street NW. at Piney Branch, and for other purposes, report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia recommended the passage of this bill in the following strong communication:

COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, December 27, 1909.

SIR: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to forward herewith a bill to provide for the widening of Sixteenth street at its intersection with Piney Branch, and rearranging the highway-extension plans in the vicinity of that point, together with a plat which will explain the plan, and to recommend the passage of the bill during the present session of Congress.

The board of control of Rock Creek Park, consisting of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, some years ago decided that instead of requesting from Congress relatively large sums of money for the improvement of the park it would be better policy to request a sufficient sum to keep the park in good condition without providing at present for any extensive improvements. They have, however, recommended to Congress two measures of vital importance, one of which the board of control has already recommended to your committee, with request for its enactment by the present Congress, namely, the rectification of the eastern boundary line of Rock Creek Park beyond the Brightwood reservoir. The second measure was granted by Congress, and involved the condemnation of the parkway entrance along the Piney Branch Valley from Sixteenth street to Rock Creek, and under the authority of this legislation the proceedings have now been completed and a natural and beautiful entrance to the park from Sixteenth street is assured.

Some years ago, following recommendations of the commissioners in line with the development of the improved boulevard of Sixteenth street, Congress authorized the construction of a bridge across Piney Branch on the line of this street. This bridge has been completed in the form of a handsome concrete arch, and, under appropriations for grading Sixteenth street, the fills at the two ends of the bridge have been also about completed. The condemnation of the parkway referred to has assured the preservation of this bridge from the west, and private property on the east, while much below the elevation of the bridge, comes to within a few feet of the face of the bridge, and a small portion of the valley should be acquired for the protection of the valley itself, and of the bridge.

The commissioners have made a careful study of the situation within the past year and have devised the plan which is shown on the drawing herewith submitted. It involves the condemnation to the east of the bridge of the area of a little more than 4 acres, shown within the heavy red line on the plat; outside of which it is proposed to locate a highway at a fairly high elevation, behind which buildings will ultimately be constructed, the area within the plat to be held at a comparatively low elevation, thus giving a small bowl-shaped park to the east of the bridge, with a road leading gradually down around the slope and underneath the bridge into the parkway driveway, which is the entrance to the park. The cost, it is estimated, will not be large, being estimated by the commissioners at $20,000, of which probably $2,000 or $2,500 will be returned, under the terms of the act, as assessments. The bill also gives the commissioners authority to rearrange the highway system in this locality to fit the general scheme.

If the legislation is enacted, there will be provided several ways, as shown on the plat, of descending into the valley from the streets, which are at considerably higher grade, all driveways being at much more practicable grades than can be devised under the present plan. The commissioners specially invite attention to the fact that with this arrangement the park will be made especially accessible to the public from the Fourteenth street car line, which will be but a short block away, by Randolph street, and but slightly longer by either Shepherd street or Spring road, giving the public an easier access to Rock Creek Park than is now provided at any point.

Very respectfully,

HENRY B. F. MACFARLAND,
President of the Board of Commissioners, of the District of Columbia.

Hon. S. W. SMITH,
Chairman Committee on District of Columbia,
House of Representatives.

And the passage of the bill is also urged by the Washington Board of Trade in the following letter:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 28, 1910.

MY DEAR SIR: The bill H. R. 16334 received careful consideration of the committee on streets and avenues of the Washington Board of Trade at its last meeting, and as chairman of the committee I was directed to inform yourself and your committee that in its judgment the bill ought to receive favorable consideration, as it provides for an improvement that meets a public need and can be better carried into effect at this rather than at a later time. Trusting that the bill will receive favorable consideration, I have the honor to be,

Very respectfully,

WM. G. HENDERSON,
Chairman of the Committee on Streets and Avenues,
Washington Board of Trade.

Hon. S. W. SMITH,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

The committee finds that to the east of the Sixteenth Street Bridge, crossing Rock Creek, there exists a low, bowl-like area whose general level is about 65 feet below that of the street. Public ownership in this locality includes merely the limits of Sixteenth street. It is desired under this bill to acquire this low ground, to the extent of about 4½ acres, for two main purposes:

(1) To permit the construction of a connecting road from the south end of the bridge around the rim of the bowl-like area referred to, with gradual descent to the bottom thereof, thereby effecting a connection with the low level of Rock Creek Park (a strip affording entrance to the same having been recently purchased on the west side of the bridge) from the high level of Sixteenth street. This strip would be practically wasted unless connection can be made between it and Sixteenth street.

(2) To prevent the destruction of all natural beauty in and about the Sixteenth Street Bridge. This bridge has cost $160,000, of which at least $100,000 was spent for æsthetic reasons. This latter amount would be practically lost unless the site be protected as proposed in the bill. The depression referred to, if left in private ownership, must necessarily become a dump for whatsoever material is available for filling, in order that the general elevation may be increased to a practicable building grade. The private ownership and present layout of streets to the east of the bridge are such that under present conditions building must advance with back yards, side yards, and house tops, with all their objectionable features in direct view of the Sixteenth street structure.

The acquirement of 4½ acres, as proposed, with authority to rearrange the highway plan to the east of the bridge, will correct in very attractive manner the objectionable features of the present condition and will afford an entrance to the park.

The immediate cost of this measure should not exceed $25,000 and the ultimate cost to the public $15,000.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken, and the chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 39.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] will take their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and tellers reported—ayes 54, noes 55.

So the committee refused to lay the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

ROAD ALONG ANACOSTIA RIVER.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 19038) to authorize the opening of a road along the Anacostia River, in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That under and in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia,' regulating proceedings for condemnation of land for streets," approved April 30, 1906, known as subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law of the District of Columbia, except section 491g of said subchapter, which section shall not be applicable to this act, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the supreme court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn and acquire the fee simple and absolute title, including all riparian rights and all other rights pertaining thereto, to a strip of land for a public highway along the Anacostia River and bounded by said river, from Monroe street extended to the right of way of the outfall sewer at and near Poplar Point and from the southwest corner of the grounds of the Government Hospital for the Insane along said Anacostia River to Giesboro Point, near the western terminus of Memphis street, as shown on the permanent system of highway plans for the District of Columbia. The northern and western boundary of said strip of land shall be coincident with the high-water line of the said Anacostia River, and the southern and eastern boundary of the said strip of land shall be not more than 160 feet therefrom: Provided, That of the amount found due and awarded as damages for and in respect of the land condemned under this act for the said public highway not less than one-half thereof, together with all the costs and expenses of the proceeding or proceedings taken pursuant hereto shall be assessed as benefits by the jury in said proceeding against the lots, pieces, or parcels of ground lying on the side or sides of the extension of the said public highway and also on all or any adjacent pieces or parcels of land which will be benefited by the said public highway as herein provided: And provided further, That the sums to be assessed against each lot, piece, or parcel of ground shall be determined and designated by the jury, and in determining what amount shall be assessed against any particular lot, piece, or parcel of ground the jury shall take into consideration the situation of the said lot, piece, or parcel of ground and the benefits they may severally receive from the opening of the said public highway.

SEC. 2. That there is hereby appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia an amount sufficient to pay the costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto and for the payment of amounts awarded as damages, one-half of the said amount to be repaid to the District of Columbia from the assessments for benefits and covered into the Treasury to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, in my judgment this is a vicious bill, for the reason that the cost of it is without limit, and may be interminable. It is proposed to build a roadway a mile and a quarter long along the Anacostia River, which will open up a lot of farm land for building sites. The owners of the abutting property are not to pay a cent, as, I am sorry to say, is the rule pertaining to all such matters in the District, and nobody can tell what is going to be the cost.

On page 2, line 4, there is a provision that the width of the road shall be not less than 50 feet. There is no limit to its width. It can be made any width that they choose, and there is no limit to the cost. As nobody knows how much money is going to be expended under this bill, in my judgment it is a very vicious one, and should be defeated.

Mr. COX of Indiana. What is the length of the proposed road?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. A mile and a quarter.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Here in the District of Columbia?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Over on the Anacostia side.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Is there any estimate at all of the cost?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I failed to get one in the hearing before the committee. There can be no accurate estimate, for the reason that the width of the road is not determined. It shall be not less than 50 feet wide, but nobody knows how wide it will be.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Then as the bill stands the width of the road is unlimited, and the amount that can be expended is unlimited?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is correct.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is not the proposed width 50 feet?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The minimum width is 50 feet.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Has the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] yielded the floor?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Then I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I believe that my colleague on the committee from Kentucky has overlooked a portion of the report of the committee on page 3, which says that the cost of this contemplated improvement will be about $4,000—that it should not exceed $4,000 as the burden on the public funds.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Does the bill place any limit?

Mr. BORLAND. The bill does not place any limit.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. May it not, therefore, be in conflict with the report of the committee?

Mr. BORLAND. In all these bills for the opening of roads it is provided that the property to be taken is condemned, but the estimated cost is stated by the engineers of the District.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. What is the immediate, pressing necessity for the opening of this road?

Mr. BORLAND. That is the point which I care particularly to discuss. I simply wanted, in passing, to call the attention of my colleague [Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky] to the fact that the engineers have estimated, as nearly as they can, the probable cost of this improvement.

Mr. TAWNEY. The entire cost is payable from the revenues of the District of Columbia, and the jury is to assess one-half of the benefits to the adjacent property.

Mr. BORLAND. That is correct.

Mr. TAWNEY. So there could be no express limitation of the amount necessary to secure the opening of this street, until that award has been made.

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; that is a more accurate statement.

In reply to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD] as to the need for this road, it was stated by the engineer commissioner in the hearing before the committee that this is a part of a plan to secure to the District of Columbia, for public use, the water front adjacent to the city of Washington, and in that lies its chief benefit. The only way in which the District of Columbia can secure to itself public ownership of its water front is by placing a road along the present water front, so that when land is accumulated by reclamation between the public highway and the water front it will pass to the District of Columbia for public use. I regard it as an important policy to establish, if it be not already the established policy of this District, that the water front of the District of Columbia should belong forever to the public, and there should be absolutely free access from the Potomac River to every part of the city.

I understand there are commercial cities not far from the city of Washington, where the whole water front, of the value of millions of dollars, is in the absolute grasp and control of the railroads of the United States centering in those cities. It is the universal practice of all railroad and transportation companies to seize at the earliest possible moment terminal facilities on the water fronts of cities. If we are to have our transportation free from domination and control of railroad companies, we must begin with the public ownership of our water fronts.

In the city I have the honor to represent we have begun that fight. We own a portion of the water front of Kansas City and another portion has been reclaimed by the railroad company, and the fight is now going on to reclaim the water front for the benefit of the public.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. BORLAND. I would like three minutes more.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. BORLAND. It is absolutely useless for us to encourage water transportation; it is absolutely useless for us to look for competition with the railroads; it is absolutely useless for us to promise the public relief from the domination of the railroads and high cost of transportation if we allow the railroads to control the terminal facilities of our water fronts; and as sure as the sun rises and sets they will control every foot of this water front unless the public steps in and controls it. I do not care if it costs $400,000 instead of $4,000—that water front opposite the city of Washington should belong to the Nation.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. This is to acquire a water front. Will the next proposition be for the Government to improve it with docks, and so forth?

Mr. BORLAND. I do not know what the next proposition will be. I would say that the cost in this bill is not only moderate, but nominal; it is based on the idea of putting a road along there so that when the flats are reclaimed instead of their being added to private property they would pass into the hands and control of the public. The cost in this particular bill is nominal.

Mr. MANN. Is this to be construed as a bill for a road, or as acquiring the water front?

Mr. BORLAND. It is a road, and will be so used.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman's argument to be based on the necessity of the Government having not a road, but the water front.

Mr. BORLAND. I will say that this proposition is justified as a road, as a public highway, but I am calling attention to it and the incidental benefits which controlled the judgment of some members of the committee.

Mr. MANN. Can that incidental benefit accrue except by the improvement of the water front with docks?

Mr. BORLAND. I think it could not accrue in any case unless we first seize the water front.

Mr. MANN. That is perfectly patent.

Mr. BORLAND. Whether we shall improve the water front for navigation will depend on navigation. If navigation reaches the point where the water front needs improvement, I should be very glad. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], the title of this bill is to authorize the opening of a road along Anacostia River in the District of Columbia. The title is misleading. According to the title it has no other purpose than to open a road, whereas on page 2 you will find that the commissioners "are further authorized and directed to condemn and acquire all land lying between the northern and western boundaries of said road and the aforementioned highway."

Now, no man has stated to this committee how much land is to be acquired, or at what cost. I say it is a leap into absolute darkness.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Did not Commissioner Judson come before the committee and say that it was absolutely impossible, owing to the fact that they were going to pump out the Anacostia River to make new land, to tell just exactly where the roadway would run, and that the object of the bill is to save the riparian rights? Day before yesterday we passed a bill appropriating $150,000 to pump out the river and make new land which we are to use for park purposes, and unless this bill is passed private owners will claim it instead of the District of Columbia.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say that the commissioners did make that statement, but the statement was not based on the bill. No man can tell how much land is going to be condemned and at what cost, and if this bill is for the purpose, as stated in the title, to open a road, that is an entirely different proposition from opening a road and condemning untold land at an untold cost. The engineers, I believe, have stated it is impossible just now to state how much money will be required to carry out the objects of this bill, and until we know the amount of money necessary, I am opposed to it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I want to read to the House from the report the statement of Major Judson:

> The bill provides for the assessment of benefits equal to not less than one-half the damages, wherefore it is estimated that the burden against public funds should not exceed about $4,000, while by the assessments provided parties benefited will, it is thought, bear an equal burden.
> The total cost estimated is $8,000; benefits to be assessed, $4,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And I will say to the chairman that his statement is directly in conflict with the one he has quoted from the commissioner, that it was impossible for them to determine now how much land must be condemned.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I said it was impossible to tell exactly where the road would go, and I do not think Congress does any great thing when they leave such a case as that to the discretion of the commissioners.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. How much of this land along the Anacostia River is there that will be necessary to be condemned; how many acres?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Well, of course I can not say; that will be left to the discretion of the jury, of course.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. To the discretion of the jury as to how many acres shall be condemned?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. As to how much they will condemn, of course.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Well, what is the maximum that can probably be condemned under this bill?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The proposed road is probably a mile and a half in length and then it will depend upon its width.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Does not this bill provide for condemning some land for park purposes in addition to the road?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Oh, no; what we are trying to do by this bill in addition to building this road is to save the riparian right on the river to the District of Columbia. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that if we dig the river out and make acres and acres of new land private parties will come in and reap the benefit. We passed a bill day before yesterday appropriating $150,000 for the improvement of this river.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. That is the very point I am trying to get light upon. What will become of the lowland between the roadway and the river? When this road is located there will be some land between the road and the river. Now, who is the owner of that?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The District of Columbia.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Does it own it now?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I want to know how much of the land the District will own in addition to the road.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not think that is possible to state without a survey.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Surely you can give it approximately.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I would not like to try to give an accurate statement.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Can you give it approximately?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman from Michigan yield?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Will the gentleman from Michigan undertake to give any estimate as to how much of this land the District is going to own and what it will probably cost?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Well, here is the estimate of cost which I read a moment ago.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. That is the estimate of cost of making the road, but what is the cost of condemning and paying for that land?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is the estimate that is named here, which is for the condemnation of the road and the securing of the riparian rights.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand that the gentleman is proposing to do anything more here by this bill than to condemn a right of way for a road. Is that right?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. KEIFER. Well, then, will the District of Columbia acquire title to anything outside of the line of the road?

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, if the gentleman from Michigan will pardon me, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio to the fact that they will not only acquire an easement or right to use this land condemned for the purpose of a road, but also will acquire the fee simple and absolute use of the land under this bill.

Mr. KEIFER. Now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. TAWNEY. Therefore they become the riparian owners.

Mr. KEIFER. I want to ask a further question, because it is something new to me to say that it is possible, unless for some purpose of a public character, to acquire the fee simple to land of a private owner by condemnation proceedings to acquire the right to build a public road or street. There must be some other and different public purpose to acquire the fee to lands by condemnation proceedings. Is all the land extending to the river to be condemned for the road or street?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The further object of this bill is ultimately to secure for park purposes the land all along the river there—this land that will be made by the Government.

Mr. KEIFER. Is that stated as the ground for the appropriation of the land?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes. It states——

Mr. KEIFER. I understand you can acquire no title or even right or easement in the land of the individual unless for some public purpose, and that has to be specifically set out in the application when you go into court for the selection of a jury to assess the value, and the land sought to be taken must be specifically described and the purpose set forth for which it is to be condemned. Otherwise a court will not take jurisdiction in condemnation at all. Now, you propose to get the fee simple, but for what purpose?

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question? I was going to ask the same question as the gentleman from Ohio asked.

Mr. KEIFER. Allow me just a second.

Mr. MANN. I want to ask the gentleman a question. The bill provides to "condemn and acquire the fee simple and absolute title, including all riparian rights and all other rights pertaining thereto to a strip of land for a public highway." I would like to ask the gentleman if, in his opinion, we have the authority to condemn anything more than an easement for a public highway?

Mr. KEIFER. I am sure that we have not, if that is the sole object or purpose for which the land is to be condemned, and I am trying to get some information.

Mr. MANN. That was the only object stated in the bill.

Mr. KEIFER. If that is all the object, I do not understand how we can acquire anything more than the mere easement for the purposes of a public road or street. But, if I understand the bill, it is intended to go outside of the line of the proposed public road and condemn property in one proceeding for other purposes than a public highway.

Mr. TAWNEY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question. What is the line of distinction, legally, between the acquisition of property by condemnation for the purpose of erecting and maintaining a building thereon by the Government and the acquisition of property for the purpose of constructing and maintaining a highway on that property?

Mr. KEIFER. It is very easy to answer that. One is acquired for a permanent purpose. A public road may be abandoned, it may be by nonuse, as happens sometimes. Sometimes it is vacated by the proper public authorities. If land is acquired to put a building upon, such as the Capitol of this country, or for some other such public permanent purpose, the fee simple may go to and be continued in the public, and therefore it is not in such cases a matter of a mere easement.

Mr. TAWNEY. When the land is acquired under this authority for the construction of a highway the fee would be acquired by the Government, because under the act it says that the District of Columbia is authorized to institute proceedings in rem to condemn and acquire the fee simple and absolute title, including all riparian rights and all other rights pertaining thereto, to a strip of land for a public highway along the Anacostia River and bounded by said river, from Monroe street extended to the right of way of the outfall sewer, and so forth.

Now, under this authority the only distinction between the case referred to by the gentleman from Ohio and this would be in the measure of damages. The commissioners would be authorized to assess the damages on the basis of the Government acquiring the fee-simple title, together with the riparian rights to the land adjacent to the river.

Mr. KEIFER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I only wish to add, with permission, that you can not acquire a fee simple to land merely for road or street purposes at all. In other words, you can only acquire the easement or a right in the property of an individual for a particular use, and if that use is such as a street or a road it is only acquired for that, and for no other purposes whatever.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman say where there is any authority for the legal proposition that a government, a state, a municipality, can not exercise the right of eminent domain, and acquire, if it wishes, the fee in the property for its highways?

Mr. KEIFER. Never has been and never will be in the history of this country.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. On the contrary, there are a large proportion of States, or, at least, a considerable number of them, who do that identical thing.

Mr. KEIFER. I never heard of it before.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio two or three question. Is not a highway a public necessity?

Mr. KEIFER. That is the reason why you get the right to construct and establish it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Exactly.

Mr. KEIFER. If it was not, you could not do anything toward acquiring any right in lands belonging to private persons.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The Constitution asserts this, and nothing more: Private property shall not be taken for public use except on due compensation for the property. It does not say you can take it for the purposes of an easement; but you can condemn it, so far as the absolute ownership of it is concerned, and that is the fee.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, we are getting something entirely new to some of us.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It is not entirely new.

Mr. KEIFER. Now, let me finish this, and I am through. It never has been so that you could acquire private property for any other purpose and to any other extent than the uses to which it is to be put to. Then if you want an easement you can get an easement, and when the easement is abandoned the title reverts to the dominant owner.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then if you acquire the easement, you have the easement, but when you get the fee you have the easement and the fee and acquire the title.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I am informed and believe that in conformity with existing law in the District of Columbia where Congress obtains the right of way over any of the lands in the District, that instead of acquiring simply an easement, the title obtained is a fee to the land over which the street or road is created.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. But this is outside of the old city of Washington.

Mr. DAVIS. This is outside?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. This is outside, and hence the provision of the section.

Mr. DAVIS. Hence where the Government desires to obtain a street or road over lands outside the old city, the bill is drawn as in this particular case in order to acquire the fee-simple title?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And we expressly amend section 491g so that we can get it through.

Mr. DAVIS. I came in when the discussion was going on. I full well knew that as to the streets inside of the city of Washington the fee was owned by the Government. The fee to the street itself is acquired by virtue of existing law, and if it is not so in the land outside of the city I suppose it is well to provide for that as this bill does.

Mr. OLMSTED. Just one suggestion. If it were competent to condemn the property and acquire the fee within the city, why is it not equally competent to acquire it outside?

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly; I can see no distinction whatever.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Just one word more, please.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the discussion in this matter has led into a field that serves no other purpose than to cast a cloud upon the real issue in this bill. This bill has an innocent title, "To authorize the opening of a road along the Anacostia River in the District of Columbia," while its real purpose, as is stated from the floor, is to acquire riparian rights; and no man can tell what it is going to cost.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman would permit an interruption there. You say that one of the purposes, whether direct or incidental, is to acquire the riparian rights. Now, in view of the fact the river and harbor bill we have passed has authorized the expenditure of $160,000 for the dredging, with a view to making land there between the river and the highway, ultimately intending to use it for park purposes, is it not a wise thing for us to acquire the riparian rights while at the same time we are acquiring the right to construct and operate a highway?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will answer the gentleman by saying that I am not willing, in acting for the future, to incur a debt that no man can tell me the size of, and then I will say further to him that these riparian rights could be acquired without opening the road, and the opening of the road could be accomplished without acquiring the riparian rights.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. I should like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota if we acquire the fee simple absolute title to a piece of property, what do we acquire in addition when we acquire the riparian rights attached to that property?

Mr. TAWNEY. We do not acquire anything additional.

Mr. MANN. Then what is the use of saying "including all riparian rights?"

Mr. TAWNEY. If we do not acquire that property by condemnation for the construction of a road, and then go on and dredge and make land there, the present owner will become the owner of all the made land.

Mr. MANN. That is not the point I am talking about. Under the terms of the bill, do you think we can, by condemnation, acquire riparian rights for a public highway?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not think we acquire riparian rights under this bill for a highway, but I think in acquiring the fee of the land we necessarily acquire riparian rights.

Mr. MANN. That would be incidentally. Now, the bill provides for the acquiring of the fee simple, the absolute title, which is permissible for highway purposes. Then you include all riparian rights, which you have no right to condemn for a public highway, and it means nothing if you have already acquired the absolute title to the property, which carries the riparian rights with it.

Mr. TAWNEY. It will do no harm to have that language in there.

Mr. MANN. The only harm is that it would render the bill invalid.

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, no; the expense of this comes out of the District of Columbia wholly.

Mr. BORLAND. If we acquire the water front of the highway, then why may we not thereby acquire the riparian rights?

Mr. MANN. I think you can acquire the riparian rights as an incident to acquiring the absolute title to the property, but you can not condemn riparian rights for the use of a highway.

Mr. BORLAND. Why not?

Mr. MANN. The riparian rights can not be used for a highway. They have nothing to do with a highway.

Mr. BORLAND. The riparian rights may be necessary to protect the highway.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no.

Mr. BORLAND. In many cases.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Can the Government acquire property by condemnation for any other than a public purpose?

Mr. TAWNEY. Why, certainly not; the Government would not acquire property for anything except a public purpose.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. If it is only acquired for a public purpose, what is the necessity of acquiring the fee simple title in this instance?

Mr. TAWNEY. I think perhaps the necessity is just the same as the necessity for having acquired the fee simple to all of the highways in the old city of Washington.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Does not the gentleman know that if the title in fee is vested in the Government, it might within twenty-four hours dispose of it and convert it in that manner to private purposes?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; I do not.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. And thus overcome the very limitation which is imposed by the Constitution?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; they can not dispose of it without authority of law, and the only way in which the authority of law can be obtained is through the Congress of the United States.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. But if the Government has the fee, it can dispose of it the same as anybody else.

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly it can, if Congress passes a law authorizing its disposition, but in no other way.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] five minutes.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, it is very difficult to state all of the matters that grow out of so important a question as the right of the public to condemn land for a public use. I understood the gentleman who followed me before to say that he rested his claim of the right to acquire land by condemnation in the District of Columbia upon the fact that there was an act of Congress providing for it. I should like to see it and find out whether it contains provisions repealing two or three of the imperative requirements of the Constitution of the United States. I do not deny that for a public purpose you may condemn and get the fee, but that public purpose must be one that requires the fee to the land. If it is for a street, you can only take private property for the particular use stated, and you can not take it for any incidental or unclaimed purpose. In every court of record in this country when a petition is filed for the condemnation of land for public purposes, there must be an accurate description of the land and a careful statement of the public use to which it is to be dedicated, and the jury are instructed to assess the damages measured by the uses the land is condemned for, and for that purpose and for that alone. If land is condemned for a public highway, and its public use as a highway is afterwards abandoned, the title goes back to the original owners by reversion, and that is the way this whole matter would work out.

I do not believe that you can condemn anything more than is absolutely necessary for the street as you propose to construct it, and anything outside of it can not be condemned in the same proceeding for any purpose or for any character of title. The fee simple can not be condemned under the Constitution of the United States at all solely for road purposes. The Constitution prohibits it and no statute can change the Constitution.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the legal phase of this question having been thoroughly discussed, I want to say a word about the advisability of passing the bill. All along the Atlantic coast the question that troubles the shippers is the question of terminal facilities. It is the same question that is agitating this whole country over. It is not with me a question so much whether this bill shall provide a highway and park as it is that the District of Columbia should acquire this river-front property for public use. I agree in the main with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] that we ought to take this land in the name of the public and hold it for public purposes. No gentleman will deny that if the rivers and harbors bill, passed a few days ago, becomes a law, and the $150,000 appropriated to improve the Anacostia River is used in dredging it and throwing the dirt upon the banks, that that dirt so thrown will not accrue to private owners. If there is any increment there, it ought to accrue to the public; the riparian rights should be held for public use. Is the land to be any less valuable ten years hence than it is now? I ask the gentleman from Kentucky, who raised the question of value, whether the land will ever be cheaper in the future than it is to-day, and whether the time to take it for highway and park purposes, or for the preservation of the commercial interests of this community, is not now, at this particular time?

I listened to the statement of Major Judson before the committee, and I thoroughly agreed with him that unless the District should take this ground and take it at once, it might fall into hostile hands, and that we, later on, might have to take it from them at a very materially increased price. I hope the bill will pass in its present shape.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I will answer the gentleman from Pennsylvania by saying that the construction of this road is proposed down there at a cost not limited, at a width not limited, upon farm lands for city building sites, and that this property can be acquired along the river front without doing that. I make the declaration that this property along the river front should not be acquired under the guise of simply opening a road.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD].

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, being otherwise engaged, I was not able to attend at the hearings on this subject in the committee, but it seems to me that the law is such that the District might acquire this land for riparian purposes by condemnaion as readily as they could for a highway. If it is needed for public purposes of that sort a bill could be brought in condemning it for that purpose. What is the effect? They say they are doing this only to control the river front. If that is the desire, let us declare the real purpose we have in mind. Here is a mile and a half of roadway building through a farming country; it will make a mile and a half of town lots fronting on this roadway that will be worth a very large sum, which will go into somebody's pockets who is not paying a particle of money toward the project, the money that is going into the building of the highway.

It is the very sort of thing that too frequently slips in here without our knowing that it is loaded. Do we need a road on Anacostia River? Then let us condemn the land for the purpose. As the gentleman from Ohio said, let us be honest in the bill; let it be stated in the bill the purposes for which we condemn the land. I agree with the gentleman from Ohio that no law will allow us to condemn land for incidental purposes, but we must condemn it for the purpose stated in the bill, and for no other. You can not condemn land for a ferry landing and use it for a highway; you can not condemn land for a highway and use it for a ferry landing; you can not condemn land for a highway and use it for wharf purposes. If it is needed for wharfage, let us be honest and let it be so stated and condemned for that purpose. Let it be held by the District for the purpose, but do not come in here and for navigation purposes and riparian rights get through a bill to get a mile and a half of macadamized street in order that there may be a mile and a half of farm property brought into the market to be sold by the square foot as city property.

If these people want to sell their land for town lots, if these farms are going to be built upon as city lots, if it is to become a part of the city of Washington, let the people who own that land and who will get the benefits of the increased value coming to it by this bill pay their part.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption? This bill expressly provides for that. It expressly provides for assessing the benefit on the property owners.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Then it is merely a real estate proposition. I am told by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] that there is no such provision.

Mr. TAWNEY. There is, and I will read it.

SEC. 2. That there is hereby appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia an amount sufficient to pay the costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto and for the payment of amounts awarded as damages, one-half of the said amount to be repaid to the District of Columbia from the assessments for benefits and covered into the Treasury to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Now, we acquire all the right on the other side of the road, and the benefits accruing to the people on this side of the road are assessed against them.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. In response to that I will say, Why should the District pay half the cost of making that street, or any portion of making that street, if it is not needed for the citizens who now live in that part of the city?

Mr. TAWNEY. The city not only obtains the fee to the road, but also to the land between the road and the river under this condemnation.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the fact that this could not be used for any other purpose than a highway, notwithstanding the provisions of this bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. We acquire expressly here the riparian rights.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. You can not do that.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is a matter for the courts to determine.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. But why send to the courts a question to be determined when we know before we send it that it is not tenable.

Mr. TAWNEY. We do not know it.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. There is not a lawyer on this floor who will not admit it.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; a number.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman know any provision under the Constitution of the United States, or of any State in the Union, that permits the Government to acquire fee simple and title to property by condemnation?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Well, I can not say offhand that I do, but I certainly know you can not condemn land for one purpose and use it for another, no matter what you put in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. One minute, to offer an amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I rise to offer an amendment. The bill has been read, I understand.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill has not yet been read, and the committee is proceeding under general debate, and the Chair will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the amendment is not in order at this time. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That under and in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia,' regulating proceedings for condemnation of land for streets," approved April 30, 1906, known as subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law of the District of Columbia, except section 491 g of said subchapter, which section shall not be applicable to this act, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the supreme court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn and acquire the fee simple and absolute title, including all riparian rights and all other rights pertaining thereto, to a strip of land for a public highway along the Anacostia River and bounded by said river, from Monroe street extended to the right of way of the outfall sewer at and near Poplar Point and from the southwest corner of the grounds of the Government Hospital for the Insane along said Anacostia River to Giesboro Point, near the western terminus of Memphis street, as shown on the permanent system of highway plans for the District of Columbia. The northern and western boundary of said strip of land shall be coincident with the high-water line of the said Anacostia River, and the southern and eastern boundary of the said strip of land shall be not more than 160 feet therefrom: Provided, That of the amount found due and awarded as damages for and in respect of the land condemned under this act for the said public highway not less than one-half thereof, together with all the costs and expenses of the proceeding or proceedings taken pursuant hereto, shall be assessed as benefits by the jury in said proceeding against the lots, pieces, or parcels of ground lying on the side or sides of the extension of the said public highway and also on all or any adjacent pieces or parcels of land which will be benefited by the said public highway as herein provided: And provided further, That the sums to be assessed against each lot, piece, or parcel of ground shall be determined and designated by the jury, and in determining what amount shall be assessed against any particular lot, piece, or parcel of ground the jury shall take into consideration the situation of the said lot, piece, or parcel of ground and the benefits they may severally receive from the opening of the said public highway.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in order to meet the objection made by the gentleman from Illinois I offer the following amendment: After the word "highway," in line 4, page 2, insert the words "and for park purposes;" and after the word "highway," in line 18, page 2, insert the words "and parks;" and after the word "way," in line 24, page 2, insert the words "and parks;" and in line 25, after the word "highway," insert the words "and parks;" on page 3, line 8, after the word "highway," insert the words "and parks."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendments will be considered together.

Mr. MANN. How does that amendment read?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment has not yet been reported, the Chair will say to the gentleman from Missouri. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 4, after the word "highway," insert "and for park purposes;" also in line 18, page 2, after the word "highway," insert "and parks;" in line 24, after "way," insert "and parks;" in line 25, after the word "highway," insert "and parks;" page 3, line 8, after the word "highway," insert the words "and parks."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, will it be in order for me to offer an amendment to the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. There are several amendments pending, the Chair will say.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I want to offer an amendment to the amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. To all of the amendments?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. No; to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Missouri that the gentleman from Pennsylvania offered several amendments, being the substitution of the same word in several places in the bill.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I desire to offer an amendment to each of those in the same form.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular way, the Chair would say, would be to make the amendment at each particular place. In view of the fact, however, that the committee has given unanimous consent that these several amendments might be considered together, the Chair will ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri may submit an amendment to those amendments in the same way. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move that wherever the word "park" appears in the amendments offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania it be stricken out and that the word "wharfage" be inserted in lieu thereof.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In each of the amendments strike out the word "park" and insert the word "wharfage."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the several amendments offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I dislike to interfere with this mode of proceeding, but it seems to me that we will strike a most anomalous condition if we undertake in this bill to authorize land to be taken for two purposes in one proceeding. If taken for a street, it should be devoted to a street. If taken for a park, it should be devoted to a park. If we should take a part of this land for a street and a park or all of it for a street and a park, it ought to be and should be, if the title to the land is acquired by condemnation proceedings, used for all of these purposes. I think it is very unusual to undertake, if it is possible at all, to condemn land for two public uses that are somewhat inconsistent.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. If this land is condemned under the bill as it is proposed to amend it, for highway and park purposes, would that authorize the District to use it for wharf purposes?

Mr. KEIFER. No, it would not; but the difficulty I see is, if we are looking to the orderly judicial proceeding, we ought to define that part of it that is to be used for the street and that part that is to be used for a park.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, in the outset of this discussion it was stated that this was not for riparian uses. Now, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD] has just offered an amendment that it be acquired for wharf purposes. That has been voted down. Is it not now apparent that it is not wanted for this purpose, but for real estate purposes?

Mr. KEIFER. I understand the proposition is to condemn it for the purposes of a street and a park, so that it is to be devoted to two purposes at the same time. I would not want to be employed to get the condemnation proceedings through.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the several amendments offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky) there were—ayes 35, noes 18.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky demands tellers. All in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Eighteen gentlemen have risen, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

So the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, lines 2, 3, and 4, strike out "the fee simple and absolute title, including all riparian rights and all other rights pertaining thereto."

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment must be perfectly apparent to the committee. It is offered for the purpose of preventing the committee establishing a precedent by attempting to acquire private property in fee simple by condemnation proceedings, a proceeding, to my mind, that has never been heard of——

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman know of a single instance where condemnation has been authorized by Congress in the interest of the Government that the title in fee simple has not been acquired? In other words, does the gentleman know of an instance where the Federal Government has acquired merely an easement?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, it does not make a particle of difference to me what past Congresses have done in that regard.

The plain provision of the Constitution which governs us prohibits us from taking private property by condemnation and taking it in fee simple. There is not a provision, and I challenge the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] to point out a provision, in the Constitution of the Federal Government or any provision in the constitution of any State in these United States that confers upon the Government the right to acquire the fee-simple title to property by condemnation. If this were possible, Mr. Chairman, it is perfectly apparent that the Government could acquire this property to-day by this proceeding, and, owning the fee-simple title and having absolute control over it, to-morrow divest itself of the title and vest it in private persons for private purposes.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to again remind the gentleman of the fact that that would be impossible under the existing law. Before the District of Columbia could divest itself of the title it would be necessary for it to come to Congress and obtain authority.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Has the Congress of the United States the power to condemn my property for the purpose of transferring it to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY]?

Mr. TAWNEY. Why, certainly not. And no such purpose can be executed without authority or without bringing the matter to Congress.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. But assuming, Mr. Chairman, that in this instance this property in question belonged to me; if the Congress of the United States has the right to take it by condemnation and acquire the fee-simple title to it, the gentleman himself admits that the Congress to-morrow might divest itself of it and vest the title in another party. What is to prohibit the Congress by condemnation proceedings to take my property to-day and, as I said before, vest it in another private party for private purposes to-morrow? The serious legal aspect of this proposition to my mind, Mr. Chairman, is so manifest that it must appeal to the intelligence of every lawyer in this committee, and especially to the intelligence of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY].

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has indulged in a fallacy, sometimes indulged in in argument, by saying that a law does not exist because abuses may be perpetrated under it. Congress has the power at this minute to declare war against England, but it is not going to declare it. To do so would be a monstrous abuse of power, but still the power exists in Congress. Under the Constitution of the United States Congress can do 10,000 things that would be hazardous to the very existence of the Republic. The fact that it might abuse the power does not show that the constitutional power does not exist.

In reply to the statement of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] and also to one of the statements just made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE], that under the law and the Constitution a legislature or Congress can not condemn private property and take the fee for a public use, I only——

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman does not mean to state my position, I trust.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I mean for a highway.

Mr. KEIFER. I did not say you could not do it for a highway. I said you could.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman said the public can not condemn it and take the fee for the purposes of a highway, and that was the specific objection he made to the phraseology of the pending bill.

Mr. KEIFER. That statement is all right.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I declared a few moments ago that the power thus to take the fee for a street can be granted by statute. I made that assertion upon knowledge acquired some years ago in condemnation proceedings. For an authority at this time I refer to volume 27 of the American and English Enclyclopedia of Law, page 148, under the general caption of "Streets and sidewalks," paragraph 6, "Control, regulation, and use of streets:"

b. Ownership of fee: As a general rule, the public has only an easement in the streets, the fee remaining in the landowner, subject merely to the right of the public to the use of the street for street purposes. In many instances, however, statutes have provided that in the condemnation or dedication of lands for streets the fee shall vest in the municipality.

That is squarely in point.

I call your attention to another authority, namely, Elliott on Roads and Streets, second edition, page 238:

Paragraph 224: When fee may be taken.

That is for the purpose of a street by the exercise of the right of eminent domain.

Where the statute declares what estate shall be taken, there can be no difficulty, for the legislative declaration controls——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I ask that I may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks that his time may be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin (reading):

But where the question is submitted, as it may be, to courts or juries for decision perplexing questions often arise. It is competent for the legislature to deprive the owner of the entire estate and vest an absolute fee in the corporation for whose benefit the appropriation is made.

I desire to read from the same authority something in answer to the objection of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that if this were permitted a State, a municipality, could exercise the right of eminent domain and acquire the fee, then reconvey the property to a private owner, and thus avoid the constitutional inhibition against taking private property for private uses against the will of the owner:

It is held that where the State seizes lands for public works of an enduring and permanent character, constructed and owned by the State itself, the estate taken is a fee, and that where a fee is taken by the State it may be transmitted by conveyance to those to whom the canal, highway, or other public improvement is granted by the State. * * * This rule applies only where the nature of the public purpose for which the property is taken requires for its full enjoyment an estate in fee or where the statute expressly authorizes the seizure of an estate of that magnitude.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. One moment. A State can condemn for the purposes of a public building, get the property, and convey it to somebody else. That quotation replies completely to the objection of the gentleman from Pennsylvania——

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin (continuing). That because abuse might possibly be worked by the municipality or State under the right of eminent domain therefore the right to condemn the fee does not exist.

Mr. CANNON. That is exactly what was done in the city of Danville, Ill., in reference to the public building.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The Speaker suggests that that is exactly what was done in his State, in Danville, Ill., with reference to the public building.

I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Ohio to what they are attempting to do.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. If I understood correctly the authority cited, it was that the State might take the property and convey it to some other corporation. I think that that covers the case where the grantee of such a deed was prosecuting a public improvement, for which purpose the State might grant the right of eminent domain to the party taking the fee.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Not at all.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to call the attention of the gentleman to an instance in the city of Philadelphia, where the property acquired for the use of the mint was sold to a private corporation and is now used for store buildings.

Mr. CANNON. That was also done in the case of the New York custom-house.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Undoubtedly. Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Ohio are seeking by construction to put into the Constitution of the United States restrictive language which very much limits its scope. The language of the Constitution substantially is this:

Private property shall not be taken for public use except upon just compensation.

They seek to put a construction upon this language which would mean that public travel is not a public use, and that a fee can not be condemned for a public street. The right to travel a street is the right to a public use, and the authority which I cited from the Encyclopedia of Law expressly declares that the fee may be condemned for a street. It is as follows:

In many instances, however, statutes have provided that in the condemnation or dedication of lands for streets the fee shall vest in the municipality.

That can be done in any State under a statute, unless the constitution of that State, its fundamental law, prohibits such condemnation of the fee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I would like just a minute to answer the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER]. He contends that the fee may not be taken where the purposes for which it is to be taken do not require the fee, but merely an easement. Upon that I quote from the second volume of the second edition of Lewis's Eminent Domain, as follows:

In the absence of any constitutional restraint, it rests with the legislature to say what interest or estate in land shall be taken for public use. The whole matter thus being in the discretion of the legislature, it may authorize the fee to be taken.

In support of that the author cites Malone v. Toledo, by the supreme court of Ohio, reported in Thirty-fourth Ohio State Reports at page 541. The author further says:

The estate which may be taken is not controlled by the use, but the fee may be taken, though the use is not to be permanent.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I have just examined that case in the Supreme Court library room. It was under the Ohio constitution of 1802, and the point that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] makes is absolutely good. There was no inhibition in that constitution against the taking of the fee under a statute, but the present constitution of Ohio perhaps prohibits it.

Mr. OLMSTED. If the statute provides that the fee may be taken, it may be taken by condemnation. The confusion arises from the fact that it is customary, in conferring the right of eminent domain upon railroad companies, water companies, and the like, to restrict them to the use to which they desire to put the land. They need merely a right of way, and the legislature gives them only the right to condemn land for a right of way. Where the statute is silent upon the subject the courts have then held—and I have no doubt that is what has led my friend from Ohio into error—where the statute does not describe the extent of the interest which may be taken in the land, but merely provides condemnation for a road, for a railroad or a public highway, then the court, always strictly construing the power of eminent domain, decides that only that can be taken which is necessary for the purposes specified in the statute; but where the statute itself says that the fee simple may be taken, no court on earth would restrain the taking of the land and every interest in it, from the heavens above to the center of the earth beneath.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, just one word. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] will turn to Lewis on Eminent Domain, section 91K, he will find that the words "fee simple," when used in taking property for street purposes, have a limited meaning, and the author says, and I read from him:

Though the fee of a street is in the public, yet it is not an absolute, but only a qualified or conditional fee. The public, whether represented by a city, State, or county, holds the fee in trust for the public use as a street and for no other purpose; and when the use ceases, the fee reverts to him from whom it was acquired.

Now, here you are taking property for a definite, certain purpose, and you have to take it for that purpose and none other. The right to appropriate, under the United States Statutes, is a common-law right from necessity, and necessity only; and when the necessity does not exist, you would have no right to appropriate at all, and it is a jurisdictional question for the court. You must exercise the particular right before the court can take jurisdiction and carry on the proceedings to get the title to the property, and that title is limited to the purpose for which it is appropriated.

Mr. OLMSTED. That depends on the provisions of the statute under which you take it.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I tried to discuss one proposition, and that is that private property could be acquired by condemnation proceedings for a particular use. I did not say what is charged by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], that the public could not acquire the fee, because that can be done for some purposes; but the fee to land can be acquired by condemnation as vested in a municipal corporation under any public proceeding other than in trust for the public, and when land thus acquired is no longer used by such corporation for the use for which acquired it must revert; and the very authority, a part of which was read by the gentleman from Wisconsin, states that precise thing. And so of the Thirty-fourth Ohio State that has been referred to, and also the Pennsylvania cases referred to. These cases, well digested and matured, are all the same way and to the same effect. The Thirty-fourth Ohio State case holds that, under Ohio's 1802 constitution, lands in fee could be acquired for a public use where the "public necessities required it." Lands are acquired only for a certain use, and when no longer devoted to that use the land reverts. That is all there is of it. When the Constitution of the United States was being submitted for ratification in 1787, 1788, and 1789, it was refused to allow it to be ratified unless there was an agreement that there should be an amendment that would prevent the taking of private property for public use at all except on due process of law and on payment of due and just compensation. That has been the organic law applicable in all the States from the time the Constitution went into effect on the 4th of March, 1789.

The fifth amendment of the Constitution was accordingly promptly adopted. It provides that no person shall—

Be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law, nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation.

And when we came to make the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution after the great war of the rebellion, and when we were writing decrees that were made in the blood of that war, we repeated in part the same language I have just quoted, and because it was dearest to the citizen, to wit, that no power should take private property without due process of law, and all the courts have held that you can only take it for the public purpose, and that is to be defined and limited therein.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky) there were 35 ayes and 33 noes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered. The Chair appointed as tellers Mr. SMITH of Michigan and Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 56 ayes and 40 noes.

So the bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

EXTENSION OF MASSACHUSETTS AVENUE NW.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I now call up the bill (H. R. 19039) authorizing the extension of Massachusetts avenue NW. from Wisconsin avenue to the District line.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, under and in accordance with the provisions of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the supreme court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary for the extension and widening of Massachusetts avenue NW. from Wisconsin avenue to the District line, with a width of 160 feet: Provided, however, That the entire amount found to be due and awarded by the jury in said proceeding as damages for and in respect of the land to be condemned for said extension plus the costs and expenses of the proceeding hereunder shall be assessed by the jury as benefits.

SEC. 2. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to abandon that portion of ground east of Hamilton Circle lying between the south line of Massachusetts avenue NW., as heretofore dedicated, and the south line of the said avenue as established by the plan of the permanent system of highways of the District of Columbia, and the said ground shall revert to the owners of the adjacent lots Nos. 1 to 8, inclusive, in square No. 1815, in accordance with their respective frontages.

SEC. 3. That there is hereby appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia an amount sufficient to pay the necessary costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings herein provided for and for the payment of the amounts awarded by the jury as damages, to be repaid to the District of Columbia from the assessments for benefits and covered into the Treasury to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill what is meant by the abandonment of a certain piece of land given for a certain purpose in connection with the bill, how much land is authorized to be abandoned, whether it reverts to the original owners, what it cost the Government originally, and what benefit this abandonment is going to be to the improvement project mentioned in the bill?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. This is a strip of land 2 or 3 feet in width, acquired when Massachusetts avenue was laid out, and is outside of what was required for the roadway. It is a very small strip of land.

Mr. MADDEN. Is it a part of a circle or park?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to hear that portion of the bill read again.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It was acquired by a mistake made in the survey, making it a little wider than was intended.

Mr. MADDEN. How long a strip is it?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should think about 100 feet in length. It is beyond the Observatory Circle, but not a part of the circle.

Mr. MADDEN. How did the District happen to get this land?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. As I understand through the engineer commissioner, a mistake was made in the original survey.

Mr. MADDEN. Was it purchased by the District?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It was purchased under a bill similar to this, by an assessment of benefits made, just as the provisions in this bill are made.

Mr. MADDEN. How much did it cost?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am not prepared to state to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. Is there any reason why it should be given away?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not know of any reason why the District should want to keep it.

Mr. MADDEN. Is there any reason why it should be given away? That is the point.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; I do not know that there is. I suppose the object in giving it back is to preserve the width of the highway.

Mr. MADDEN. Did not these parties get pay for it?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It was paid for by assessment of benefits, but the District did not pay anything for it, nor did the General Government pay anything for it. It seems to me it ought to revert to the lots of which it was formerly a part.

Mr. MADDEN. It seems to me that this is a bad precedent to be established, and that it ought not to be forced on the House without due consideration. I think the committee might well take the bill back and get more information on it, so that they will be able to give that information to the Members of the House.

Mr. WILEY. I think I can give the gentleman some information.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will yield to the gentleman from New Jersey five minutes.

Mr. WILEY. It is not necessary for street purposes. That is the first proposition; and, second, the bill provides that it shall revert to the owners of the abutting property. If it is not abandoned, it will cause a break in the building line of the avenue of about 25 feet and prevent a proper alignment of improvement along this frontage. If it is abandoned, it will become a part of the lots lying adjacent thereto, and will be included in the area of these lots for the purposes of taxation. It is a very simple matter one way or the other.

Mr. MADDEN. I understand that, but the point I want to emphasize——

Mr. WILEY. Would the gentleman from Illinois desire that the District should own a little strip of land on the side of Massachusetts avenue and shut out the owners of the property that abuts on it?

Mr. MADDEN. I have not any disposition to require the District to own the property, but I think in view of the fact that we have paid for the property we ought not to give it away.

Mr. WILEY. We paid for it by assessing these lots for benefits.

Mr. MADDEN. That may be all right, but now we own it——

Mr. WILEY. Now we do not want it, and we ought not to shut them out from their right of way to Massachusetts avenue.

Mr. MADDEN. I think there ought not to be any disposition whatever to give away the property that belongs to the District.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The District did not pay anything for it in the first instance; it was a matter of assessment for benefits.

Mr. MADDEN. How do we know that?

Mr. WILEY. Why, we make that statement to the committee that that is what happened.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. We know it because of our knowledge acquired as members of the committee.

Mr. MADDEN. I think still it ought not to be given away. It ought to be sold.

Mr. WILEY. I do not think it would be a fair thing to the owners of those abutting lots to make them buy a little bit of a strip.

Mr. MADDEN. Why?

Mr. WILEY. It was taken from them originally to perfect the avenue, and it ought to go back to them.

Mr. MADDEN. When we took it from them we paid them for it.

Mr. WILEY. We assessed them for the benefits.

Mr. MADDEN. We assessed them for one-half of the benefits. I do not think it is just to the taxpayers of the rest of the community for the District to give a lot of property away.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Does the gentleman not think that if this is to revert to that particular lot owner it will increase the value of the property and thereby increase the amount of taxes to be paid upon it?

Mr. MADDEN. It would increase the value of the property; and if it does, the man whose property is increased in value ought to be willing to pay for it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. But he has already paid for it. Somebody who owns that lot has paid for it before this by assessments for benefits.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman will admit that when the assessments were made for the benefit of this street and the assessments were levied back for benefits, that that only amounted to one-half the assessment for the cost of the street.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I admit that the District did not pay anything nor did the General Government. It came out of the property owner.

Mr. MADDEN. Did these people here pay anything, those who are going to get this property back for nothing?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. They or their grantors were assessed for the benefits. I do not know that it was this particular landowner who owns this lot now, but some grantor of that property was assessed for the benefits. The District or the General Government never gave one penny for this land.

Mr. MADDEN. I understand the gentleman to say that the property will be increased in value very largely by getting this strip.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I say yes. I think, as the mistake was made, that particular piece, that little strip in front of these lots, should be given back.

Mr. MADDEN. Did the gentleman say that the property will become more valuable if this strip was handed over to these people who own the rest of the property there?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should think that if this little strip of land next to Massachusetts avenue were added to that particular lot, it would increase the value of it and increase the taxes also.

Mr. MADDEN. While we increase the value, why should not the man who gets the property whose value is increased pay for it?

Mr. WILEY. Because originally we took it away to increase the value of our own property.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. In the first place the District or the General Government did not pay anything for it.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not understand that to be the case.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is the case.

Mr. MADDEN. We levied back in assessments for benefits only one-half.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Government advances the money, it is true, in the first place, but it is paid back in five equal annual installments at 4 per cent. Of course the gentleman understands the Government does not pay anything——

Mr. MADDEN. It does not matter whether anything is paid or not, why should the Government give it away and what ought the people who are to get this property pay for it? Why should they be entitled to it, and who are we going to give it to, and why are you going to give it to them?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think it would be very difficult for anybody now or in the future to determine just exactly how much benefit or damages there would be assessed on a little strip of land like that.

Mr. MADDEN. Would you be willing to admit it is of advantage to the property to have this strip added to it?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; I admit it is to the benefit of Massachusetts avenue.

Mr. MADDEN. It ought not to make any difference whether it is Massachusetts avenue or not. If you are willing to admit that the taking of abutting property and adding to it is of advantage, then, as a matter of course, you must admit it ought to be paid for.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Not under the circumstances; not in the way in which it would come.

Mr. MADDEN. Massachusetts avenue is one of the most prominent streets in Washington, and you give away part of that street to private individuals whose names even do not appear here.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I want to say to the gentleman that in looking after these street openings I never ask for anybody's name, and it does not make any difference to me who they are; if it is right, I will vote for it, and if it is not right, I will not vote for it.

Mr. NYE. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out section 2 of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inform the gentleman from Illinois the committee is proceeding under general debate, and the amendment would not now be in order. The gentleman from Michigan has the floor.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, Mr. Chairman, does the Chair wish to have it understood that amendments are not in order to this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. Amendments are not in order to any bill during general debate. When the bill is read, under the five-minute rule, the question will come up.

Mr. NYE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask a question of the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that with the consent of the gentleman from Michigan the amendment might be read for information if he so desires.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, I can offer my amendment afterwards.

Mr. NYE. Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest to the gentleman from Illinois I do not understand that the Government equitably or legally owns this land.

Mr. MADDEN. Then, why give it away?

Mr. NYE. It is a right of way. This merely authorizes us to abandon it as an easement in order to make the avenue itself more symmetrical, and that land will revert, as it justly should, to the owners. We did not own the land——

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Why, it was just determined on the bill immediately preceding this that in all these cases the Government owns the fee to the land.

Mr. NYE. It was not so determined. It was determined you could acquire fee by condemnation proceedings.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I understood it did own the fee in all these cases.

Mr. NYE. No; I did not so understand.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to abandon that portion of ground east of Hamilton Circle lying between the south line of Massachusetts avenue NW., as heretofore dedicated, and the south line of the said avenue as established by the plan of the permanent system of highways of the District of Columbia, and the said ground shall revert to the owners of the adjacent lots Nos. 1 to 8, inclusive, in square No. 1815, in accordance with their respective frontages.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the bill by striking out section 2. Now, Mr. Chairman, this section proposes to abandon the ownership of a strip of land on both sides of Massachusetts avenue covering a frontage of eight lots on each side of the street. The gentleman in charge of the bill, the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, admits that the abandonment of this land and turning it over to the owners of the lots abutting this street will add materially to the value of those lots, and thereby, he says, will increase the taxable value of the property and bring more revenue into the District. Why, the idea of increasing the taxable value of the land is absurd.

The main question at issue here is, first, whether the District of Columbia has anything to give. If the District of Columbia owns no title to the land, it has nothing to abandon, and this section ought not to be in the bill. If the District of Columbia has any title to the land, then we ought not under any circumstances to abandon our right to it. If we do, we ought to do it because we are paid for it. The question is, Why should we as public officials stand here to give away the property owned by the public to some private individual because we want to add to the taxable value of the land? Why should he not be willing to pay the full value of his property? Is it fair or is it just that we should be asked to do this? I take it for granted that there is no Member on this floor who is willing to vote to give away the property of the Government. If the Government has no ownership in the property, then there is no place in this bill for section 2, and I hope the House will vote to strike this section from the bill.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD rose.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD].

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise simply to reply to the suggestion made a moment ago by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NYE] that the Government did not have a fee to this land, but only an easement. If the Government only has an easement, it will revert without legislation; and if it is more than an easement, it ought not to revert, as it was said by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], without fair compensation. So, in either view of it, the section ought to be stricken out, as asked for by the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. NYE. If the gentleman will permit me, it can not revert as long as we occupy it as an easement.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. When we cease to occupy it.

Mr. NYE. We have not ceased to occupy it. This is to abandon it as an easement.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Section 2 is not at all necessary to an abandonment of the easement. If the abandonment of the easement is not provided for in section 2——

Mr. NYE. It simply has the effect to vacate our use of the property as an easement.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I beg the gentleman's pardon. It goes further. It not only vacates it as an easement, but by the language sought to be stricken out by the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois it undertakes positively by legislative enactment to convey the land which is abandoned, to the owners of the adjoining lots.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. Absolutely reverts to them.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment as follows:

Insert after the word "fifteen," in line 14, page 2, the following: "on their paying a reasonable price therefor."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 14, after the word "fifteen," insert "on their paying a reasonable price therefor."

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that there is any disposition on the part of anyone here to prevent the alignment of this street being established as is suggested in the section under consideration. The only question before the committee about which there is some dispute is whether we should make a gift of this strip of land, varying 25 feet in depth, and fronting these respective eight lots, or whether we should compel the property owners to pay some proper compensation for this property. There is no question whatever that at the present time the title of this property is in the District of Columbia. No matter how small a strip of property may exist, the question is, Shall we establish the precedent of donating this land which faces these lots on Massachusetts avenue to the abutting property owners, or shall we require them to pay a reasonable compensation for the same?

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Certainly.

Mr. GOULDEN. Who is to fix the reasonable compensation?

Mr. STAFFORD. This section under its phraseology grants authority to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to deed this property, this strip of land, that varies from the regular street line of Massachusetts avenue to the abutting property owners.

Mr. GOULDEN. And the matter would rest entirely with the District Commissioners?

Mr. STAFFORD. We have necessarily to lodge some discretion with the District Commissioners, and we leave it to them to determine what the compensation shall be.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I understand this strip of land is only about 2 feet wide, and the District desires to cede it back in order to have a uniform alignment of the street?

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand from the reading of the report that the strip is 25 feet wide.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Suppose the owners of the land on which this strip fronts declined to pay anything for it. Then the District of Columbia is compelled to maintain its street to the full width, and bear the expense of keeping the street in repair. The city wants to get rid of this strip, and avoid that expense, and have a uniform line for building purposes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not think there will be any question whatsoever, if we give authority to the commissioners to accept compensation for this jog of land, that the abutting property owners will be glad to continue their frontage on Massachusetts avenue and pay a reasonable price for it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Suppose they decline. There is no authority to sell it to anybody else. Then it is city property for the purpose of maintaining a street.

Mr. STAFFORD. It could be parked if this section was not adopted and if any abutting owner would not wish to pay a reasonable price; it could be parked and still harmonize with the adjusted street line.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It seems to me that the property ought to be ceded back.

Mr. STAFFORD. If it is 25 feet in width, it is not a trivial matter.

Mr. NYE. I do not understand it is 25 feet in width. The report says:

If it is not abandoned it will cause a break in the line of building of the avenue of about 25 feet and prevent a proper alignment of improvement along its frontage. It has a frontage of 25 feet.

Mr. STAFFORD. I can not adjust the statement of the gentleman from Minnesota to the phraseology of this section that it fronts on eight lots; and looking upon the plat that was submitted by the clerk of the committee it shows a much larger area than could be conceived as occupying only 25 feet. So I think it extends a much longer distance than 25 feet referred to by the gentleman from Minnesota. Now, if the chairman of the committee has any definite information as to the extent of this property that is sought to be given away, I think the committee would be glad to have it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. While I am not able to give you the exact amount of it, it cost the District nothing. It was donated.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not think it can be claimed that nothing was paid for it, because I understand that when we open a street we pay something, at least one-half of the damages; but, regardless of how this title came to us, either by donation or condemnation, the title is in the District, and the question is, Shall we donate the land to the abutting property owners?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is where the gentleman is mistaken. Under the law by which we open streets, and for which this bill provides, the District does not pay one dollar. It advances the money, and after the jury gets through with its proceedings it is paid back in five payments, with 4 per cent interest.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no question whatsoever that the title in this land at the present time, the easement, is in the District.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. COX of Indiana. I rise for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee some questions. I move to strike out the last word. How wide is this strip of ground?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I understand that it is some 2 or 3 feet wide, and in some places wider.

Mr. COX of Indiana. From whom does the gentleman get his information?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. My information is from the engineer commissioner. As I understand it, the strip was from 2 to 3 feet wide, and perhaps in some places a little bit wider.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Is it on both sides of the street?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes, sir.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Well, what is the length of it?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Well, it is in front of these various lots of lands, but I do not know the exact length.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Something like as much as 400 feet long?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; I do not think it is. But it does not make any difference whether it is two or three hundred feet.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Now, if it does not make any difference—and the gentleman says it makes no difference—as a fact is this not approximately 25 feet wide?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not so understand it.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Did the District Commissioners testify before your committee?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No, sir; at the time we obtained the information a portion of the committee were riding in that section of the District.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I want to know how you got that information from the commissioners?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I did not get that information from the commissioner.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Orally or by letter, or otherwise?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I was with the committee that went out there with the commissioner.

Mr. COX of Indiana. The commissioner never made a report on that bill, did he?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No, sir.

Mr. COX of Indiana. What caused the commissioner to say that it was something like 25 feet?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. In the commissioner's letter.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I understood the gentleman to say that the commissioner informed him that unless this was done it would cause a break in the street to the extent of 25 feet.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I should like to ask the gentleman if he knows what induced the commissioner to make that statement?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The letter of January 21, 1910, was signed by Mr. Macfarland, who was then president of the board, and the gentleman I referred to who was with us at the time was the engineer commissioner, Major Judson.

Mr. COX of Indiana. If this goes back to the abutting lot owners there, it will make their lots deeper, will it not?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. They will have that much additional depth.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Thereby greatly increasing the value of that property?

Mr. HINSHAW. About a million dollars.

Mr. COX of Indiana. The gentleman from Nebraska says $1,000,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to be recognized for three minutes.

Mr. PEARRE. I object.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was trying to expedite the consideration of the measure; but if the gentleman from Maryland objects, I will move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman having addressed the committee once upon the pending amendment can only proceed by unanimous consent.

Mr. STAFFORD. As there is a difference of opinion existing among the members of the committee as to the strip of land involved, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that we have not the information desired by Members, it would be better to strike out this section at the present time, because it in no wise impairs the other part of the bill. The bill merely provides for the extension of Massachusetts avenue, and the title does not at all refer to the rededication of this strip of land.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin having withdrawn his amendment, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] to strike out the second section.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. MADDEN, on a division (demanded by Mr. SMITH of Michigan) there were—ayes 37, noes 24.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were refused, not a sufficient number rising in support of the demand.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I move that the bill as amended be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

COLUMBIA ROAD, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 19785) to authorize the extension of Columbia road NW., in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, under and in accordance with the provisions of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, within six months after the passage of this act, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the supreme court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary to extend Columbia road NW. through parcels 95–2, 95–4, and 95–5, with a width of 75 feet, upon such lines as the said commissioners may deem best for the public interest: Provided, however, That the entire amount found to be due and awarded by the jury in said proceeding as damages for and in respect of the land to be condemned for said extension, plus the costs and expenses of said proceeding, shall be assessed by the jury as benefits.

SEC. 2. That there is hereby appropriated from the revenues of the District of Columbia an amount sufficient to pay the necessary costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto and for the payment of amounts awarded as damages; to be repaid to the District of Columbia from the amount for benefits and covered into the Treasury to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

CITY AND SUBURBAN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 15676) to provide for the extension of the underground system of the City and Suburban Railway Company on North Capitol street, and for other purposes.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the City and Suburban Railway, of Washington, be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to equip with the underground system of electric propulsion, as now installed on its urban lines, that part of its suburban route on North Capital street between the present terminus of its underground system thereon near T street and a point to be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia north of and within 100 feet of the north building line of V street; said work to be completed in accordance with plans to be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia within six months after the passage of this act.

SEC. 2. That upon failure of said railway company to comply with the provisions of this act it shall be subject to a penalty of not more than $100 per day, on prosecution by information filed in the police court of the District of Columbia by the corporation counsel or any of his assistants; and each day of such failure shall be regarded as a separate offense.

With the following committee amendments:

Insert in line 11, page 1, after the word "completed," the words "within six months after the passage of this act."

Strike out of lines 13 and 14, page 1, the words "within six months after the passage of this act."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. WILEY] to offer an amendment.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 1, line 10, strike out "one" and insert "three."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report back the several bills to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bills as amended and unamended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee determined to rise; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GAINES, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration sundry bills reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, and had instructed him to report the same back, some with amendment and some without amendment, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bills as amended and those unamended do pass.

BILLS PASSED.

The following bills reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with amendments, were severally considered, the amendments agreed to, the bills as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed:

H. R. 13893. A bill to authorize the extension of Forty-first street, NW.;

H. R. 19038. A bill to authorize the opening of a road along the Anacostia River, in the District of Columbia;

H. R. 19039. A bill authorizing the extension of Massachusetts avenue NW. from Wisconsin avenue to the District line; and

H. R. 15676. A bill to provide for the extension of the underground system of the City and Suburban Railway Company on North Capitol street, and for other purposes.

The following bills reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union without amendment were severally considered, were severally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, were read the third time, and passed:

H. R. 16330. A bill to authorize the surveyor of the District of Columbia to adopt the system of designating land in the District of Columbia now in force in the office of the assessor of said District;

H. R. 16331. A bill to acquire land in the vicinity of the Connecticut Avenue Bridge for the extension of certain streets;

H. R. 13864. A bill to extend Fourth street SE.; and

H. R. 19785. A bill to authorize the extension of Columbia road NW., in the District of Columbia.

On motion of Mr. SMITH of Michigan, a motion to reconsider the votes whereby the several bills were passed was, upon his motion, laid on the table.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 19028, being the Indian appropriation bill. And pending that I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to two hours, one hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] and the other hour by myself.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I can not agree to that for the reason that I have several applications for time on this side, and I do not think we can get along without five hours of general debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. STEPHENS of Texas) there were 71 ayes and 1 no.

So the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. OLMSTED in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, before discussing the bill and some of its provisions, I wish to make a few observations generally upon the Indian question. I wish to bring to the attention of the House some things that I believe will be of interest to the House and the country. I speak from the standpoint of one who has had some experience with Indian affairs by coming directly in contact with the Indian, having lived in South Dakota for nearly twenty-eight years, and in that section of the State where the Indians reside. I may say, in passing, that we have an Indian population in that State of something over 20,000.

I shall address myself largely to the practical side of the question without disparagement, however, of its sentimental phases. I shall endeavor to demonstrate that by reason of the fact that sentiment has controlled too largely, the Indian has not progressed as I believe he would have progressed under other conditions. From the early history of the country the Indian has been regarded as the ward of the Nation. As early as 1831 Chief Justice Marshall, in the case of the Cherokee Nation against Georgia, in speaking of the Indian and his relation to the Government, said:

They are in a state of pupilage, their relations to the United States resemble that of a ward to his guardian.

That, Mr. Chairman, has been the status of the Indian for eighty years. By reason of my place of residence I am somewhat familiar with the Sioux Indians, whose reservations are located in South Dakota and North Dakota. I shall, therefore, have something to say about the manner in which the Government has treated the Sioux Indians, because it is a fair example of what has been for many years our Indian policy. In order to show what has transpired in one generation I am going back only to the year 1868, at which time a treaty was made with the Sioux Indians in the Dakotas. I shall call attention to some of the provisions of that treaty and show to the House the spirit in which it was made, and then I shall endeavor to show the effect of the policy that was provided for in that treaty. In 1868 the Sioux Indians were making more or less trouble by obstructing the progress of railroad construction, molesting settlers on the frontier, and emigrants who were crossing the plains.

This treaty was entered into largely as a peace compact, whereby the Indians promised to refrain from acts of hostility. There was no cession of land in that treaty or agreement, as was the case in later agreements.

Article 10 of the treaty of 1868 stipulates that—

The United States agrees to deliver at the agency house on the reservation herein named on or before the 1st day of August of each year, for thirty years, the following articles, to wit: For each male person over 14 years of age, a suit of good, substantial woolen clothing, consisting of coat, pantaloons, flannel shirt, hat, and a pair of homemade socks; for each female over 12 years of age, a flannel skirt or the goods necessary to make it, a pair of woolen hose, 12 yards of calico, and 12 yards of cotton domestics; for the boys and girls under the ages named, such flannel and cotton goods as may be needed to make a suit as aforesaid, together with a pair of woolen hose for each.

Then it was provided that while these Indians roamed and hunted they should be paid the sum of $10 each annually, and if they refrained from hunting and roaming and engaged in farming, then they were to receive $20. Then it was further provided:

That each Indian over 4 years of age who shall have removed to and settled permanently upon said reservation and complied with the stipulations of this treaty shall be entitled to receive from the United States for the period of four years after he shall have settled upon said reservation, 1 pound of meat, 1 pound of flour per day, provided the Indians can not furnish their own subsistence.

It was further provided that each Indian should receive one good American cow, one good, well-broken pair of American oxen within sixty days after such Indian lodge shall have removed to and settled upon said reservation.

Mr. Chairman, it may be interesting in passing to state that, among other things the Indians promised to do in consideration of this generosity on the part of the United States, they agreed:

First. That they will withdraw all opposition to the construction of railroads now being built on the plains; that they will permit the peaceful construction of any railroad not passing over their reservation as herein defined.

Third. That they will not attack any persons at home or traveling, nor molest or disturb any wagon, train, coaches, mules, or cattle belonging to the people of the United States or the persons friendly therewith.

Fourth. They will never capture or carry off from the settlements white women or children.

Fifth. They will never kill or scalp white men nor attempt to do them harm.

Then it was further provided that they should withdraw all opposition to the construction of the railroad then being built along the Platte River. These, Mr. Chairman, were the things that the Indians promised to do in consideration of our granting to them the benefits heretofore enumerated.

A little later gold was discovered in the western portion of South Dakota, in what is known as the Black Hills, said to be the richest 100 miles square in the world. Negotiations were entered into with the Sioux Indians for the cession of this portion of their reserve, and a treaty was made in 1877, which I may say was in one sense the best treaty—for the Indian—that ever was made for any Indian tribe, inasmuch as it obligated the United States for all time, not for twenty or fifty years, but for all time, to provide for these Indians until such time as they should become self-supporting; and under this treaty the Government has appropriated many millions of dollars. That treaty obligated the United States—

To provide the said Indians with subsistence, consisting of a ration for each individual of a pound and a half of beef, or in lieu thereof one-half pound of bacon, one-half pound of flour, one-half pound of corn, and for every 100 rations 4 pounds of coffee, 8 pounds of sugar, and 3 pounds of beans, or in lieu of said articles the equivalent thereof, in the discretion of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, which rations, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be continued until the Indians are able to support themselves.

Mr. Chairman, one of my purposes in bringing this matter to the attention of the House is to demonstrate that by the generous treatment of the Indian, instead of encouraging him to self-support and useful citizenship, it has had directly the opposite effect. Now, in 1889, within ten or eleven years after the treaty of 1877 was made, a commission was appointed to treat with the Sioux Indians for the cession of some portion of their reservation, which at that time contained something like 20,000,000 acres of land. Upon that commission was Mr. Charles Foster, of Ohio, at one time Secretary of the Treasury; Mr. WARNER, of Missouri, now a distinguished Senator from that State, and General Crook, of the Regular Army, a man who was recognized as having had more experience with and practical knowledge of the Indian than any man of his day. That commission negotiated with the Sioux, and I want to read a few observations that they made in their report. After referring to the former treaties and the conditions on the reservation in 1888 or 1889, when this commission went there, their report proceeds:

It is now more than ten years since the last war parties came in and surrendered at the agencies. During this time Congress has appropriated large sums of money for the benefit of the Sioux Indians. They have been fed, clothed, and sheltered at the expense of the Government, and it is hardly too much to say that every reasonable want has been fairly satisfied. Large sums of money have been spent for agricultural implements; horses, harness, and wagons have been supplied; farmers employed to teach the Indians to cultivate the soil, and seeds furnished for planting. Cows and bulls have been given to them in numbers sufficient to have almost covered their reservations with herds of cattle, had they been properly cared for.

With all these advantages it might reasonably be expected that the Indians would now be well advanced on the road to independence and self-support. On the contrary, many of them, most of them probably, are relatively in worse condition than ten years ago. They have so long been accustomed to have their wants supplied while they lived in idleness that they have become enervated and have lost much of the manliness and self-respect which characterized them in their savage state. A people thus fed and clothed without labor on their part must necessarily lose their self-respect, and under such conditions vagabondage becomes a question of time. It is true that this method of treatment has resulted in practically emasculating their power as a menace to the country, but at the same time it has rendered it more difficult for them to become self-respecting citizens, and every year under such methods increases in evermultiplying ratio the obstacles to be overcome.

The average Sioux Indian believes himself "the ward of the Government." He recognizes no dignity in labor or credit in "earning his bread by the sweat of his brow." Ten years ago it would have been easier to have taken these Indians fresh from the warpath, full of the energy of their wild life, and set them to work on farms than in their present enervated condition.

Mr. Chairman, I want to emphasize the next paragraph, because I believe in these few words there was embodied much wisdom relating to the solution of the Indian problem:

The solution of the Indian problem lies in industrial and other education, in the cultivation of the soil and the raising of stock, to the end that he may become self-respecting and self-supporting. He must take his land in severalty, settle upon it, and work. To insure this, he should be given every encouragement in the furnishing of markets for his surplus products, employment when he can be useful, paying him a day's wages for a day's work. Let him be taught that industry secures him more consideration from the agent, distinction among his people, and increased comfort for himself and family.

We have great faith in education as a means of civilization, but efforts to this end should be carefully directed. The education should be largely practical; the young boys should be required to learn trades, the girls to sew and make clothing, to cook and become housekeepers. * * *

The great majority of the growing generation of the Indians must necessarily become farmers in order to become self-supporting; and by this term we do not mean agriculturists exclusively, but in the American sense, proprietors, who own the land upon which they live, who not only raise all crops and fruits suitable to their soil, but stock of different kinds; men whose diversified industries guard them against the failures which so often discourage the mere cultivator. It is therefore important that special attention should be paid to instruction fitting them for the paths in life in which their lot is cast. * * *

Mr. Chairman, if the Indian is anything, he is human. If you let him understand that he is going to be cared for, that he is going to be clothed, fed, and sheltered, he is not going to make very much progress in the way of civilization. Neither would people of any other race. And I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the policy of this Government in its treatment of the Indian, prompted, no doubt, by a lofty sentiment, has not resulted beneficially to him in either the moral or the material sense. In short, we have overdone it. We ought to have given him more opportunity and less rations, and inspired him with the idea that his success depended on self-help.

Now, to show how human the Indian is, I want to read a little further from the report from which I have already quoted, and show what the commission met with on the part of the Indians when they went upon the reservation to negotiate this treaty.

The opposition was based largely on the following:

First. The unwillingness of the Indians to part with any part of their reservation.

Now, what is more human than to want to keep all you have and get a little more?

Second. The dread and suspicion with which the Indian regards any new proposition, especially when requiring any change from past conditions.

Also a little suspicious that if he entered into this treaty maybe he would not get his pound of beef, his half pound of flour, his sugar, his beans, his potatoes, his clothing, and other things which he had been receiving at regular intervals during, perhaps, his entire life.

Third. The fear of the chief and influential men that individual proprietorship on the part of the Indians would result in individual responsibility and consequent personal independence, the breaking up of tribal relations and community of interests, the loss of the heretofore unquestioned authority, prestige, and influence of the chief.

Did anybody ever hear of a white man that was not jealous of the distinction and power of leadership? You see, the Indian is just like the white man. Neither parts willingly with the prestige and power of place, and therefore the commission met with opposition on the part of the Indians, because they did not wish to change existing conditions.

Now, Mr. Chairman, having made these observations on the treaties with the Sioux, I want to discuss the later policy that has obtained in our dealings with them. A great many people labor under the impression, and honestly so, that the Indian has been having a pretty hard time of it. It has been customary to ejaculate "Lo, the poor Indian!"

Now, I am going to give you some information to show that the Indian has been prospering reasonably well during the last generation, and I give it as my opinion, as I have already indicated, that our generosity in dealing with him has been a handicap to his progress. That does not apply to the policy of the present day. Let us see what happened to the Sioux Indians in South Dakota, and let us see how they have been treated under the agreement made in 1889. That agreement divided the great Sioux Reservation into five or six separate reservations and ceded about 9,000,000 acres of the land lying west of the Missouri River, south of the Cheyenne River, and north of the White River. By the terms of that agreement a sum of money, amounting to $3,000,000, was put into the Treasury, to draw interest at 5 per cent per annum. A trust fund was created. This 5 per cent can be expended by the Secretary of the Interior in their education, and he is authorized, I believe, to pay out one-half of the interest annually per capita to the members of the tribe.

In 1887 a general law was enacted, known as the "Dawes Act," providing for the allotment of lands to individual Indians.

Substantially, the provisions of the Dawes Act were incorporated in the act of 1889, relating to the Sioux Indians in the Dakotas. Each Indian was to be given, if the head of a family, 640 acres of grazing land. I may say that all of the country within the Sioux reservation is classified as grazing land. Since that treaty we have authorized an additional allotment of 320 acres to wives of heads of families who had previously received 640 acres. Each child under 18 years of age is entitled to 160 acres. So now, to start with, you see that the Sioux Indian with a wife and 5 children has 640 acres of land belonging to himself, 320 acres belonging to his wife, and 800 belonging to his children, making a total of 1,760 acres of land. So that he has a pretty good start.

In addition to this land, it was provided that there should be issued certain benefits in the way of stock cattle, a team of horses, a wagon, certain farming implements, and $50 in money for the purpose of erecting a house on his allotment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What is the value of that land per acre?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That land, Mr. Chairman, is now being sold, where Indians have become deceased and the lands are being sold as "inherited lands," at prices ranging from $5 to perhaps $30 an acre.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact also that they had the choice of the reservation, and as a result have not they the very best lands in it?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I was about to come to that, Mr. Chairman. Now, the Indian, as I stated a moment ago, is human. He knows good land just as well as a white man knows it. When they make their selections they invariably take the very best lands within the reservation. Wherever you find any streams you will also find allotments on either side of them, and when you go back to the uplands, where it is dry and to some extent unproductive, the Indian passes it up for white settlement.

The law also provides that if an Indian dies his allotment shall be sold and the proceeds go to his heirs. As a result of that, many of our Indians to-day not only in the Dakotas, but elsewhere, have money in banks to their credit from the sale of inherited lands. This money is not paid over to them, except as they demonstrate that they are capable of making good use of it.

Some time prior to 1903 or 1904 there was an agreement made with the Rosebud Sioux by which they agreed to cede that part of their reservation in Gregory County, comprising about 400,000 acres. That agreement provided that the United States should pay to the Indians for the cession of the tract $1,040,000. About one-fifth of that tract had already been taken as Indian allotments. A very old Member of this House in point of service, a Member of distinction then, but more so recently, said that so far as he was concerned, speaking as one Member of the House, there would be no more legislation to purchase lands from the Indians and then give the lands away to settlers, taking the chances of the land being disposed of for a sufficient sum to recoup the Government. So at that time an amendment was prepared and made a part of the act ratifying the agreement, to which I have referred, by which it was provided that the Government should not be obliged to pay the Indian any part of the consideration that he was to receive for surplus lands, but they would be sold and the proceeds go to the Indian.

The land was offered for sale, and it has all been disposed of. The amount of money received from that opening or sale is something more than $1,500,000. Since that time there has been legislation providing for the sale of Tripp County, about 1,000,000 acres in the Rosebud Reservation. The filings were begun last year. It is estimated that the Indians will receive from that opening and sale somewhere in the neighborhood of $4,000,000. There is now pending in this House a bill to dispose of that portion of the Rosebud Reservation known as Mellett County, and it is estimated that that will bring to the Indians about $3,000,000. There will still be left a reservation containing about the same acreage.

Mr. MORSE. Will the gentleman allow me? Does the bill referred to carry the same provision as the other bills have heretofore, which require the applicant to go out to the neighborhood of the reservation or on the reservation to make his application?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It does.

Mr. MORSE. Is the gentleman favorable to that?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I am, and at the proper time I will discuss it.

Now, I have shown that the Rosebud Indians are going to receive approximately $7,000,000 or $8,000,000, and in addition to that their allotments, which in the case of an Indian with a family of five children would be 1,760 acres of land, and in addition to that the proceeds of the sales of lands that he may inherit. And I may say in passing that at the present time there is in banks belonging to the Rosebud Indians something over $1,000,000 of individual moneys.

In addition to all this, by disposing of the surplus lands white settlers are going in there, the railroads have extended their lines, and substantial values have been given to these Indian allotments that were without much value before the reservation was opened.

Mr. PARSONS. What does the gentleman mean by "individual moneys," which he says are now in bank?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. When an Indian dies his allotment is sold, and his heirs receive the proceeds. These moneys are deposited in bank to the credit of the Indian heirs, and those are the moneys that I refer to when I say "individual moneys." The other funds, the several million dollars received from the sale of surplus lands, are known as "tribal funds."

Now, Mr. Chairman, the treaty of 1889, which I referred to, had a provision regarding the disposition to be made of the moneys received from the sale of surplus lands belonging to the Sioux Indians. That provision is as follows:

> That the sums agreed to be paid by the United States as purchase money for any portion of any such reservation shall be held in the Treasury of the United States for the sole use of the tribe or tribes of Indians to whom such reservation belongs, and the same, with interest thereon at 5 per cent per annum, shall be at all times subject to appropriation by Congress for the education and civilization of such tribe or tribes of Indians or the members thereof.

Now, a few words on the condition of Indians generally. It seems to me that when Indians are situated as these Indians are, the Government should soon discontinue gratuity appropriations for their support and civilization. Let us see what moneys they have and what other property they possess. It will further demonstrate that the Indians of the country have been faring reasonably well in the last few years, and particularly so since we have changed our policy of legislating in regard to the lands that they occupy by giving them the proceeds from the sales thereof.

On the 30th of June last there was in the Treasury of the United States, belonging to Indians, in the form of trust funds, $46,910,014.36. In addition to this fund, which bears from 3 to 5 per cent interest annually, there was an additional amount to the credit of Indians, including individual moneys and moneys that were in the form of judgments of the Court of Claims, and from other sources, approximately $15,000,000. So that 300,000 Indians in the United States on the 30th of last June had in cash about $60,000,000. During the past five years we have paid out to Indians in interest on trust funds something over $10,000,000, or something more than $2,000,000 per year.

Now, for fear that some might think this is not a very large amount for 300,000 people, I will give you a little statement of some of the other possessions of the Indians of the country.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman, before he goes into that, yield for a question?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Referring not only to the amount now in the Treasury held as trust funds, but also to amounts which it is proposed to pay into the Treasury realized from the sale of Indian lands sold at their actual value, does the gentleman see any reason why the Government should continue the practice, at least upon this new money, of paying 5 per cent interest when the ordinary rate of interest of the Government is 2 per cent?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say in answer to the gentleman from Illinois that in any legislation that I have had to do with, where moneys were to be placed in the Treasury, I have always insisted that the rates should not exceed 3 per cent, except where there was a treaty stipulation or agreement with the Indians to pay a higher rate. I believe that we should carry out every agreement that we have ever made with Indians, to the letter, whether they have the best of it or not. [Applause.] And we should discharge any moral obligation which we may have in addition thereto. I am not in favor of breaking an agreement for the sake of saving 1 or 2 per cent interest on $60,000,000, or on any other sum.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I take it that there are no agreements made providing that the Government shall sell the land at actual cash value and turn the proceeds into the hands of Indians and pay 5 per cent unless the gentleman considers the suggestions made by some Indian agent as agreements.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman from Illinois may have in mind bills that are pending authorizing the sale of portions of the Sioux reservation, wherein it is provided that there shall be 5 per cent interest paid on the sum so deposited. But that is in accordance with article 12 of the agreement made March 2, 1889, which provides that these moneys shall be placed in the Treasury and draw interest at 5 per cent per annum.

Mr. MANN. I understand that the former practice of the Government was to buy the Indian lands and permit homestead settlers to acquire them, the Government paying the price of $1.25 an acre, but the present practice coming from the gentleman's committee is to take these lands and sell them to settlers, practically at the highest price obtainable, and turn the money over to the Indians. There is quite a difference between paying the Indians $1.25 or $2.25 an acre for the land worth a great deal more, paying 5 per cent interest on the proceeds, and letting them realize the highest value of the land, and then paying them double the amount of interest on that amount.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, my time is running, and I hope for an opportunity when some of these bills are considered by the House to discuss the question raised by the gentleman from Illinois, but I prefer not to do so now.

The Commissioner of Indian Affairs has been making some figures as to the value of property belonging to Indians of the United States, and has furnished me with what might be termed "an inventory." To some extent the values are necessarily an estimate, but it appears that there are lands, buildings, and live stock, with other supplies, belonging to the agencies in the United States of a value of something over $15,000,000; that there is property belonging to the United States, used in connection with the administration of Indian affairs, of something like $15,000,000. Then there are tribal lands, including lands that contain minerals and timber lands of the value of $251,762,348. Then there are timber lands and allotments that I have referred to amounting to $309,356,201, or a grand total of $576,201,280.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman from South Dakota yield?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does this exclude or include the property of the Five Civilized Tribes?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I assume that it includes it, because in the figures I have given as to the money in the Treasury there is an item of $8,300,000 belonging to the Osage Indians.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suggest that it would make considerable difference whether the Five Civilized Tribes are included or not, although I think the Osages are not a part of the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I understand that, but my information is that this is property belonging to all the Indians of the United States, who number about 300,000.

I might say in passing, as to Indian population, it has been generally considered that there are considerably less than 300,000. The Indian population has not increased materially, and if the census is greater than it has been heretofore, it is due to a better and more nearly correct enumeration of them. I think there has been no very material change in the Indian population during the past generation.

Mr. MORSE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MORSE. I notice the gentleman states that the Indian population is approximately 300,000, and he gives us in round numbers the valuation of the property owned by Indians, both tribal and individual. Can the gentleman tell us in round numbers what proportion of the 300,000 Indians there are that have neither land, or money in the Treasury, nor claims against the Government of any kind?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say that probably the poorest Indians in the country are in Arizona and New Mexico. There are about 55,000 of them. They occupy reservations in the arid sections where the land is not of much value. There are some Indians in California without means, and also in other parts of the country. It is possible that one-third of the Indians have not very much property.

In addition to their lands and properties, they own live stock as follows: Horses and mules, 294,461, of a valuation of $5,909,000; cattle, 297,000, of a valuation of $5,946,000; swine to the number of 2,409,000; sheep to the value of $793,220; domestic fowl, 267,000, the latter of a valuation of $66,000; and goats, 135,416.

I am not posted on the value of goats, so am not able to make any estimate of their proper valuation. In addition to these statements as to property, I may say that in many of the Indian reservations it is thought there are valuable mineral deposits that have not yet been developed—silver, gold, copper, lead, and other minerals.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to go on and discuss this subject in a general way a little further, but I must talk for a few minutes about the bill. This bill is the product of the entire committee. It represents their best thought on the subject. There is not a provision or a paragraph in it that did not have consideration by the full committee, and, with the exception of possibly the policy as to maintaining schools, there is no division in the committee. I want also to state that in the preparation of this bill there was a disposition on the part of the department, and particularly the Indian Bureau and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, to cooperate in furnishing us all of the information that it was possible for them to furnish and a disposition to comply with the spirit of the times and keep these appropriations down to the very lowest figure.

The committee insisted on economy, and yet were generous, and in making these appropriations they have endeavored to do so without doing injustice to any Indian anywhere in the country. In the commissioner's annual report is a paragraph which I think fits the present situation particularly, and I offer it in this connection:

> The Indian Service is primarily educational. It is a great outdoor-indoor school, with the emphasis on the outdoor. The students in this school are 300,000 individuals, ranging in age from babes at the breast to the old men and women of the tribes, and with a range of characteristics which is indicated by no one fact, perhaps, better than that these 300,000 individuals speak about 250 fairly distinct dialects. The plant which composes the physical properties of this school consists of an area of land nearly twice the size of the State of New York, or larger than the State of Missouri, scattered through 26 States, in areas ranging from a few hundred acres to some as large as the smaller States of the Union. The funds to carry on and to be cared for in connection with this plant amount to approximately $85,000,000, of which $62,000,000 belong to the tribes, $13,000,000 belong to individual Indians, and approximately $10,000,000 are contributed by appropriations annually. The value of the physical plant, including lands, buildings, reclamation works, and forests is hundreds of millions. The teachers in this school, of which the commissioner is the principal teacher, form a force of over 5,000 employees, covering all the grades and classes of work which go to make a human being a useful citizen of the United States. Whether in the schoolroom or on the irrigation ditch, whether in leasing part of an allotment or in the issuance of a patent in fee or in the use of individual or tribal funds the one test to be brought to the business aspect of the case is, Will doing this and the way of doing it educate the child or the woman or the man for citizenship?

Mr. Chairman, after having shown something of the Indians' possessions and what it involves in value, I want to urge that we should be liberal in our appropriations for the administrative force that is to manage these great properties. Generally speaking, I am not in favor of increasing salaries, but if increasing salaries in the Indian service would bring to that service a higher class of men, I should say by all means to increase the salaries, and thus insure better administration.

Indian appropriation acts for the past ten years have carried somewhere in the neighborhood of $10,000,000 annually, as high as $11,000,000 and as low as somewhere between $9,000,000 and $10,000,000. The last bill carried something over $11,000,000. This bill carries appropriations aggregating $8,273,662.90, exclusive of $390,000 that is payable from trust funds or immediately reimbursable therefrom.

The estimates amounted to $9,317,662.90. So it will be seen that the committee has reduced the appropriations from last year considerably over $3,000,000, and there has also been a material reduction from the estimates submitted. One of the largest appropriations in this bill is $1,144,597, for treaty stipulations. The educational subject is one that requires more money than any other part of the Indian Service, and I think it will be admitted that when we begin to cut appropriations we ought not to reduce the appropriations that are to be used for educational purposes. If there is any hope of the Indian ultimately becoming self-supporting and a successful citizen, he must have education. I think one of the great mistakes in our Indian policy has been that the subject of education was neglected, and the Indian was not encouraged to speak the English language. Certainly they could not make very much progress living as they did by themselves and not being able to speak any language except the one which was their own dialect, and as is stated in the commissioner's report, there are something like 250 different dialects among the Indians. We have succeeded in reducing the appropriations quite materially by grouping items that pertain to the same subject-matter or kindred subjects, which heretofore have been provided for separately.

In doing this we have found that it was possible to reduce materially the appropriation, and at the same time we believe we have furnished the means for better administration. In the first provision, which provides for allotment and survey work, we have grouped all estimates for this class of service. Heretofore that has been provided for in a number of different items in the bill, and we have put into this first section six or seven different items which were heretofore appropriated for separately, and by doing so we have made a material reduction in the sum appropriated.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The form of this bill is entirely changed, is it not?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The form is changed to some extent.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is there any way by which the appropriations made in this bill can be compared with the appropriations made in previous years?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes; certainly. It is feasible to present a statement that does show exactly how they compare with appropriations heretofore made.

Mr. MANN. Will not the gentleman insert that statement in the RECORD?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In the legislative act of June 22, 1907, there is a provision that the committees reporting these appropriation bills shall report them so far as practicable in the same form they were enacted the previous year. Did the gentleman take that into account in making and reporting this bill?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Did I understand the gentleman to say that is a rule of the House?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it is a statute.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I am free to confess, Mr. Chairman, that I was not familiar with that statute, but I think this bill conforms to it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is the gentleman aware that that statute resulted very largely from the action of the Committee on Indian Affairs the year previously in changing the Indian appropriation bill so that it was utterly impossible to tell anything at all about it?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Inasmuch as I was taking a little vacation at that time, Mr. Chairman, against my own inclinations [laughter], I was not in possession of that information.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The fact is——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to proceed for ten minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is the second time within three years that the form of this bill has been completely changed, and it is utterly impossible to tell whether the appropriations have been increased or decreased by a comparison with former years.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I think if the gentleman will take the trouble to familiarize himself with the changes in the bill and compare them with former bills, he will discover that it not only conforms to the statute but that it is a decided improvement on its predecessors. The general order of the act for 1910 has been followed, and the arrangement is unchanged except as to the grouping of appropriations.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The trouble is, Mr. Chairman, I have been endeavoring to compare this bill with past bills, but it is utterly impossible for anybody to make a comparison between this bill and previous bills.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I will say to my good friend from New York that between now and to-morrow morning I will be very glad to put in his hands a statement that will give him this information.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will ask the gentleman to put it in the RECORD to-night so that others may have an opportunity to make these comparisons.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will state, Mr. Chairman, that for the information of the House, I will endeavor, as far as possible in the limited time I have, to make such a statement and put it in the RECORD, and if I do not get it in to-night I will do so in a day or so.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the gentleman, in justice to the House, should put it in the RECORD before the bill is read under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will endeavor to do so.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to say the committee found in this matter of appropriations for surveying and allotting that the law requires that the expenses should be reimbursed from the sale of surplus land subsequently. That has been in all the laws providing for the allotment of lands to Indians, that when the surveys of the lands were made, the cost of the allotment work should be reimbursed. We found that while a great deal of money had been expended—I forget just the amount, but it is something over $1,000,000—that only very little of it, as near as we could ascertain, has been reimbursed, and yet money may be in the Treasury belonging to the Indians. So we put into this bill a provision that the amount to be appropriated, and moneys heretofore appropriated, shall be at once reimbursed where there is money in the Treasury belonging to the Indians.

And then, in order that we might have detailed information as to just how these moneys will be expended, we put in a proviso that hereafter the Secretary of the Interior shall be required to furnish a cost account of these expenditures.

We have also put into this bill a provision that requires the Secretary of the Interior to furnish the committee or Congress with a statement of accounts between the different Indian tribes and the United States, in order that we may know something about what Indians are capable of self-support. We found in the estimates an item of $25,000 for the support of the Kiowas, Comanches, Apaches, and Wichitas and affiliated bands. It was suggested that some of these Indians had money in the Treasury, some of them large sums, and that we ought not to be making gratuity appropriations for them. So, we investigated that matter, and we found that all that was necessary to appropriate to take care of the Indians who were without any means was $5,000; in other words, we cut an appropriation of $25,000 down to $5,000.

And it is the opinion of your committee that the legislation in this bill will furnish information that will enable the committee in another session of Congress to reduce those appropriations still further. I hope, Mr. Chairman, these provisions, while they may be subject to a point of order, will remain in the bill. It is legislation in the right direction. It is legislation in the way of good administration, as well as economy, and I am in hopes, when the bill is taken up under the five-minute rule, that no Member will raise any point of order against any of it.

Mr. Chairman, we have liberally provided appropriations for the maintenance of the schools, as I have already said, for the farmers and the matrons, and it is our theory that money should be liberally expended in training and educating, particularly along industrial lines, and in the employment of farmers, if you please, by even larger appropriations than we have here provided.

We have increased the appropriation from what it was heretofore for the suppression of the liquor traffic in the Indian country. The bureau demonstrated to the committee and to our entire satisfaction that great good has resulted in the expenditure of appropriations heretofore made, and I do not think there is anything more important to the Indians to-day than to continue the supression of the liquor traffic wherever they may reside. And so we are proposing to incorporate in bills that are now being passed for the cession of land a section to the effect:

That the lands allotted, retained, or reserved, and surplus land sold, set aside for town-site purposes, or granted to the State, or otherwise disposed of, shall be subject for a period of twenty-five years to all the laws of the United States prohibiting the introduction of intoxicants into the Indian country.

That provision has been in a number of bills that have been passed heretofore, and I find in looking up the subject, going back fifty years, similar provisions were incorporated in treaties made with the Indians. I am going to insert them here and also a reference to a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States sustaining them.

Article 5 of the treaty with Sioux-Sisseton and Wahpeton band, of July 23, 1851 (10 Stat. L., 949), provides that—

The laws of the United States prohibiting the introduction and sale of spirituous liquors in the Indian country shall be in full force and effect throughout the territory hereby ceded and lying in Minnesota until otherwise directed by Congress or the President of the United States.

Article 6 of the treaty with Sioux-Medewakanton and Wahpeton bands, of August 5, 1851 (10 Stat. L., 954), provides that—

The laws of the United States prohibiting the introduction and sale of spirituous liquors in the Indian country shall be in full force and effect throughout the territory hereby ceded and lying in Minnesota until otherwise directed by Congress or the President of the United States.

Article 7 of the treaty with the Chippewas, of September 30, 1854 (10 Stat. L., 1109), provides that—

No spirituous liquors shall be made, sold, or used on any of the lands herein set apart for the residence of the Indians, and the sale of the same shall be prohibited in the territory hereby ceded until otherwise ordered by the President.

Article 7 of the treaty with the Chippewas, of February 22, 1855 (10 Stat. L., 1165), provides that—

The laws which have been or may be enacted by Congress, regulating trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes, to continue and be in force within the several reservations provided for herein; and those portions of said laws which prohibit the introduction, manufacture, use of, and traffic in, ardent spirits, wines, or other liquors, in the Indian country, shall continue and be in force, within the entire boundaries of the country herein ceded to the United States, until otherwise provided by Congress.

Article 8 of the treaty with the Winnebagos, of February 27, 1855 (10 Stat. L., 1172), provides that—

The laws which have been or may be enacted by Congress regulating trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes shall continue and be in force within the country herein provided to be selected as the future permanent home of the Winnebago Indians; and those portions of said laws which prohibit the introduction, manufacture, use of, and traffic in, ardent spirits in the Indian country shall continue and be in force within the country herein ceded to the United States until otherwise provided by Congress.

Article 7 of the treaty with the Chippewa-Red Lake and Pembina bands, of October 2, 1863 (13 Stat. L., 667), provides that:

The laws of the United States now in force, or that may hereafter be enacted, prohibiting the introduction and sale of spirituous liquors in the Indian country, shall be in full force and effect throughout the country hereby ceded, until otherwise directed by Congress or the President of the United States.

Article 17 of the agreement with Yankton Sioux, act of Congress of August 15, 1894 (28 Stat. L., 314), provides that:

No intoxicating liquors nor other intoxicants shall ever be sold or given away upon any of the lands by this agreement ceded and sold to the United States, nor upon any other lands within or comprising the reservations of the Yankton Sioux or Dakota Indians as described in the treaty between the said Indians and the United States, dated April 19, 1858, and as afterwards surveyed and set off to the said Indians. The penalty for the violation of this provision shall be such as Congress may prescribe in the act ratifying this agreement.

Article 9 of the agreement with the Nez Perce Indians in Idaho, act of Congress of August 15, 1894 (28 Stat. L., 326), provides that:

It is further agreed that the lands by this agreement ceded, those retained, and those allotted to the said Nez Perce Indians shall be subject, for a period of twenty-five years, to all the laws of the United States prohibiting the introduction of intoxicants into the Indian country, and that the Nez Perce Indian allottees, whether under the care of an Indian agent or not, shall, for a like period, be subject to all the laws of the United States prohibiting the sale or other disposition of intoxicants to Indians.

In The United States v. Forty-three Gallons of Whisky et al. (93 U. S., 188), it was decided:

It is competent for the United States, in the exercise of the treaty-making power, to stipulate, in a treaty with an Indian tribe, that, within the territory thereby ceded, the laws of the United States, then or thereafter enacted, prohibiting the introduction and sale of spirituous liquors in the Indian country, shall be in full force and effect until otherwise directed by Congress or the President of the United States.

I may say, and I can speak somewhat from personal knowledge, that it is just as important to extend laws suppressing the liquor traffic among the Indians after they have ceded their lands as it is while they are living on a reservation. The Indians, as I think I have already said, take perhaps one-fifth, one-quarter, or one-third of these lands and hold them in trust for twenty-five years, and it is of the highest importance that these laws extend over that country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I may be permitted to conclude my remarks. I will do so very promptly.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The increase in the appropriation for the purpose of suppressing the use of intoxicating liquors is $20,000. It was $40,000 last year and $50,000 this year, and we propose to make it $70,000.

I want to put in the RECORD, Mr. Chairman, a certificate from the clerk of one of the courts in the Territory of Arizona, by which certificate it appears that at the last term of the court the grand jury returned 23 indictments, and that all of said indictments were for the crime of selling liquor to the Indians, in violation of section 2139, Revised Statutes of the United States.

The certificate referred to is as follows:

In the district court of the first judicial district of the Territory of Arizona.

(Having and exercising the same jurisdiction in all cases arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States as is vested in the circuit and district courts of the United States.)

CERTIFICATE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Territory of Arizona, First Judicial District:

I, Allen B. Jaynes, clerk of the district court of the first judicial district of the Territory of Arizona, do hereby certify that at the October, 1909, term of said district court the grand jury returned 23 indictments; that all of said indictments were for the crime of selling liquor to Indians, in violation of section 2139, Revised Statutes of the United States; and that no indictments were returned by said grand jury on account of any other violation of law.

Witness my hand and the seal of said court, affixed this 16th day of December, 1909.

[SEAL.] ALLEN B. JAYNES,
Clerk as aforesaid.

Then, Mr. Chairman, I want to refer briefly to the conditions in my own State, where land was opened to settlement between ten and twenty years ago, and the Indians have resided on their allotments. In the county where they are located at the last term of the circuit court held in that county there were something like 43 cases of a criminal character; 19 were against Indians, and in nearly every instance the crime was directly or indirectly the result of the Indian having obtained liquor.

I want to incorporate here in my remarks a statement made by the superintendent of the agency located in that section of my State, in which he says:

If they would keep "booze" away from the Indian an Indian prosecution would be a novelty.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that that little statement furnishes a sufficient reason for the suppression of the liquor traffic among Indians, and we ought to be liberal in our appropriations for that purpose.

Mr. Chairman, there are several things in this bill that I would like to talk about, but we will have ample time to do so under the five-minute rule.

I will state that we have made no provision for continuing the warehouses that have heretofore been maintained in New York, Chicago, San Francisco, St. Louis, and Omaha. We have done so, believing that it was not only in the interest of economy, but in the interest of good administration, and I think the committee will be able to convince this committee that our action was wise. I have, however, no pride of opinion, and no member of the committee has any interest except such as prompted them in the preparation of this bill from the beginning to its completion, that of doing what was in the interest of good administration and in the interest of economy. So if some Member of the House shall offer an amendment to insert those warehouses and the House shall see fit to put them in, the responsibility will be upon the House and not upon the committee.

Mr. PARSONS. I would like to ask the gentleman what lack of economy exists now because of the maintenance of the warehouses?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, we anticipate that there will be some debate upon this subject. I have stated to a number of Members who come from the cities where these warehouses are now located that when we reach that provision under the five-minute rule we will endeavor to get unanimous consent so that the matter may be fully debated. At that time I hope to be prepared to answer any questions that gentlemen may have to ask, and to demonstrate that our action is a wise one; and I would prefer not to go into the details at this time.

Mr. PARSONS. I wish you could give us some idea as to why you made the change, and as to what the disadvantages of the present system are.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I stated, first, it was in the interest of better administration and also in the interest of economy. It is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior and by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and they furnished sufficient reasons to warrant the committee in unanimously agreeing that no appropriation should be made to continue them.

Mr. PARSONS. I notice in the bill in regard to the purchase of supplies you put in a proviso—

That hereafter the purchase of Indian supplies shall be made in conformity with the requirements of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Why was that proviso necessary?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, that is another detail which may properly be discussed under the five-minute rule. But I will say to the gentleman, simply for this reason: We found that the present practice of the Indian Department differed from that other departments were pursuing, and the law differed from the general law; it was thought by the committee, and we think that we can demonstrate that it is a fact, that the general law is better than the law under which the Indian Department has heretofore been operating.

Mr. PARSONS. Did the law under which the Indian Department was purchasing supplies require advertisement in all cases?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Not in all cases; nor does the general law.

Mr. PARSONS. Was there any exception in the case of purchase of Indian supplies where they could purchase without having advertised?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. There was, and so there is in the general law, but they differ materially.

Mr. PARSONS. What was the difficulty with the old law? What was the need of the change?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It was thought by the committee that under the existing law there was much greater opportunity to make purchases without advertising and in the open market than under the general law; while there is a $3,000 limit, it is not so protected that you can not multiply purchases of $3,000 each.

Mr. PARSONS. Is there any limitation in the general law?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. No; I do not know that there is, and, as I have indicated, there is none in fact in the special law.

Mr. PARSONS. I wish, for the convenience of Members, the gentleman would insert in his remarks a copy of the present law applying to Indian purchases, and also a copy of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I will incorporate in my remarks at this point the sections of the statute to which the gentleman has referred.

That no purchase of supplies for which appropriations are herein or hereinafter made, exceeding, in the aggregate, $500 in value at any one time, shall be made without first giving at least three weeks' public notice by advertisement, except in case of exigency, when, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, who shall make official record of the facts constituting the exigency, and shall report the same to Congress at its next session, he may direct that purchases may be made in open market in amount not exceeding $3,000 at any one purchase: Provided, That supplies may be purchased, contracts let, and labor employed for the construction of artesian wells, ditches, and other works for irrigation, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, without advertising as hereinbefore provided: Provided further, That, as far as practicable, Indian labor shall be employed and purchase in the open market made from Indians, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. (Act of Apr. 30, 1908, 35 Stat., 71.)

The general law on the subject of the purchase of supplies is embodied in section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, as follows:

All purchases and contracts for supplies or services, in any of the departments of the Government, except for personal services, shall be made by advertising a sufficient time previously for proposals respecting the same, when the public exigencies do not require the immediate delivery of the articles or performance of the service. When immediate delivery or performance is required by the public exigency, the articles or service required may be procured by open purchase or contract, at the place and in the manner in which such articles are usually bought and sold, or such services engaged, between individuals.

Mr. Chairman, having occupied the time of the committee much longer than I anticipated, and having gone into this subject quite fully, I shall refrain from making any further statement until we get under the five-minute rule. [Applause.]

The following estimates are grouped in the first item of section 1 of the bill:

Allotments under act of February 8, 1887	$90,000
Surveys and subdivision, Indian reservations	75,000
Survey and allotment, Fort Peck Reservation, Mont	25,000

Amount appropriated for 1910, $17,000.

The following estimates are grouped in the item beginning at line 20, page 3:

Irrigation, Indian reservations (including pay of 5 superintendents of irrigation, $10,000)	$200,000
Pay of Indian inspectors (inspectors of irrigation), $6,000, and traveling expenses, $3,800	9,800
	209,800

Amount appropriated for 1910, $209,800.

The following estimates are grouped in the item beginning at line 24, page 6:

Experiments on school or agency farms	$5,000
Care, etc., timber on Indian lands	90,000
Promoting industries among Indians	50,000
Pay of matrons	35,000
Pay of farmers	125,000
	305,000

Appropriation for 1910, $260,000.

The following estimates are grouped under "contingencies," line 5, page 9:

Special service expenses	$3,000
Contingencies, Indian Department	90,000
Incidentals in Arizona	1,500
Incidentals in California	1,000
Incidentals in Colorado	1,000
Incidentals in Idaho	1,000
Incidentals in Montana	$2,500
Incidentals in Nevada	500
Incidentals in New Mexico	1,500
Incidentals in North Dakota	1,000
Incidentals in Oklahoma (exclusive of pay of employees)	3,000
Incidentals in Oregon	1,000
Incidentals in South Dakota	5,000
Incidentals in Utah	1,000
Incidentals in Washington	1,000
Incidentals in Wyoming	1,000
	113,000

Amount appropriated for 1910, $126,000.

The first item in section 3 contains this group:

Support of Indians, Arizona and New Mexico	$300,000
Support of Pima Indians, Arizona	40,000
	340,000

Amount appropriated, 1910, $340,000.

Section 4, page 11, contains this group:

Support of Mission Indians, California	$20,000
Support of northern Indians, California	20,000
Support and civilization of Indians at the Round Valley, Hoopa Valley, and Tule River agencies	10,000
	50,000

Amount appropriated for 1910, $50,000.

Section 18, page 25, contains this group:

Incidentals in Oklahoma (pay of employees)	$22,000
Pay of superintendent, Union Agency	4,500

Removal of restrictions, allotted lands, Five Civilized Tribes	16,000
Salaries, etc., Five Civilized Tribes	65,500
Sale of unallotted lands, etc., Five Civilized Tribes	100,000
	261,500

Amount appropriated for 1910, $259,500.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4477. An act providing for the homestead entry of certain lands in the State of Washington, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1043) providing for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the northern judicial district of the State of Ohio.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution of the Senate (S. C. Res. 23) providing for the printing of the proceedings relative to the acceptance of the statue of the late George Laird Shoup from the State of Idaho.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield such time as the gentleman may require to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR].

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, no men are worthy of more consideration at our hands than the great body of wage-earners of this country, who are working on fixed daily, weekly, or monthly salaries and who, under present conditions, are having a hard time to make their annual income meet their annual outlay. In fact, it is a question whether the average man working for fixed wages is able to earn a comfortable and reasonable living for himself and family.

Mr. Chairman, if the man of family is not able to earn a sufficient sum to meet his annual expenses, living in a modest way, and must of necessity add to the total of unpaid bills, not only the retailer but business generally suffers. If it is found necessary to sacrifice his wife and home by enlisting her services as a wage-earner, if he must sacrifice the health and education of his children by putting them to work in the stores or factories to earn a part of the family living, then society suffers. And if, after the entire family becomes wage-earners, the income still fails to equal the outlay and the standard of living must be lowered to the limit of bare necessity, then civilization suffers. These are the conditions confronting the American people to-day, and as their annual expense increases the number of people subject to these conditions also increases. There is one thing certain, and that is unless the increased expenditures are accompanied by increased income two inevitable consequences must follow. In the readjustment economies must be introduced by the elimination of some things which have hitherto entered into the cost schedule. If the eliminating process goes too far, the danger is that the foundations of efficiency will be impaired. Economic impairment may reveal itself in moral decay, in political unrest, and in social discontent. There is no greater peril to our institutions than a condition that lessens the self-developing capacity of our people.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the men for whom I speak to-day are looking to Congress for relief and are worthy of the most patient and careful consideration it is possible to give them. There are none who contribute more to society or to the greatness and grandeur of our country than the millions of men who mold and fashion out of our natural resources the products of the mills and the factories. In fact, it is the wage-earners, no matter how or where employed, who produce a large part of the country's wealth and who at all times have been the Nation's surest protection in time of peril. Go back through the pages of history as far as you will and you will find that in all ages and in all times the men who earn their bread by the sweat of their faces have been the bulwark of society and have contributed much that has benefited and blessed the human race. And these are the men, the humble toilers of our country, whose lives at best are barren, compared with the upper classes, and devoid of anything but the hardest labor and the least expensive and simplest forms of pleasure, who appeal to us for relief. I contend, sir, that Congress has no greater duty to perform than to see that full and complete justice is done the millions of wage-earners who constitute the greater part of our enormous population and who are to-day being ground down to a meager living by trusts and combinations which are building up colossal fortunes by controlling the output and fixing the price of many of the commodities of life. A careful investigation discloses the fact that practically everything consumed by the common people is controlled by trusts and combinations and have advanced with leaps and bounds until many of the necessities are now classed as luxuries. It is shown by statistics compiled by the Department of Commerce and Labor that the average increase in what the wage-earner must buy is far above the average increase in wages, and these facts show conclusively that the present time is not prosperity for those who work for wages or on fixed salaries.

Statistics also show that the average wage paid to labor is about $1.50 per day, and with such wages it is next to impossible for the average man to live and keep even. In view of these facts, no time should be lost by Congress in the enactment of such legislation as will protect the people from the extortion of trusts controlling the output and fixing the price of the necessities of life.

I know, Mr. Chairman, it frequently happens when a Member takes the floor and makes a plea for the common people, he is classed as a demagogue by some New York trust-owned newspaper or by those who seem to think that government was instituted for them, and them alone, but if he takes the floor and advocates a million-dollar subsidy for some Wall street corporation, in the opinion of these same people he is a great patriot. So far as I am concerned, it makes no difference to me what I am called by this class of patriots, so long as I remain a Member of this House I shall use my voice and vote in opposition to the commercial vampires who seek special privileges at our hands in order that they may build up stupendous fortunes wrongfully taken from the pockets of the people. I claim the right to speak for the plain citizenship of our country without my motives being questioned, for I was born and reared among them, in the atmosphere of poverty, and the interest I have in their welfare comes from my association with them and my knowledge of their needs and condition.

Mr. Chairman, in the discussion of this question I want to say that the farmer is in no way responsible for present conditions. He, too, is at the mercy of the trust, but not to the same extent as the wage-earner, because he raises much that he eats, and only becomes the victim of the trusts when he buys the things he must have to use and wear.

The farmer does not fix the price of what he sells, but simply takes what he is offered for his products. When he takes his wheat and corn to market he does not say, "You must pay me a certain price or you can not have it," but he says, "How much are you paying?" and he accepts the price fixed by the dealer. When he takes his cattle and hogs to market he does not fix the price, but accepts the price fixed by the buyer. When he takes his butter and eggs to market he simply takes the price fixed by the other fellow. The farmer belongs to no trust, the purpose of which is to control the output and fix the price of his products, but sells on an open market, and the price he receives is fixed by the supply and demand. All the agitation and all the investigations that may be made will in no way affect the price the farmer receives for what he sells. In fact, it is not the price paid the farmer to which the people object, for we are all glad to see him prosper, and want him well paid for his labor. The farmer spends his money in the community in which he lives, and the people generally are benefited thereby; but what the people do object to is the fact that trusts and combinations get control of farm products and arbitrarily fix extortionate prices. For instance, the beef trust pays the farmer 8 cents for hogs and then charges the wage-earner from 24 to 32 cents per pound for bacon, and in the large cities as much as 36 cents for the best grade. Such prices are charged because of a combination between the large packers which has eliminated all competition. I am pleased to note that the Government is going to bring suit against the Swift, Morris, and Armour companies for violation of the Sherman antitrust law, and I heartily commend President Taft for taking such action. The contemplated action on the part of the Government follows an investigation conducted by special agents, which investigation must have disclosed facts sufficient to warrant action. Such combinations as the beef trust not only nullify the law of supply and demand, but they fix fictitious prices and rob the consumer. It has been charged, and nowhere denied, that wholesome foods are destroyed in order to maintain prices.

I saw a statement in a newspaper not long ago to the effect that several carloads of potatoes were hauled out of Chicago and dumped in sand piles in order that they might not be thrown upon the market and reduce the price. I must confess a lack of ingenuity sufficient to imagine how human infamy could sound a lower depth than to destroy wholesome foods in the very face of starving women and children.

Mr. Chairman, we must also remember that the people are compelled to buy many necessities besides what they eat. Families must not only be fed, but they must be housed and clothed. I find, in looking up statistics, that there has been a remarkable increase in the price of clothing, lumber, drugs, house furnishings, cotton flannels, blankets, underwear, carpets, shirtings, boots and shoes, dress goods, cotton and woolen hose, wooden ware, furniture, knives and forks, and in fact practically everything used by the common people, and it is freely admitted that many of these increases are due to trusts and combinations eliminating competition and fixing the price to suit themselves, and in doing so are protected by a high-tariff wall which shuts out all competition.

Senator La Follette has shown on the floor of the Senate that the tariff on woolen goods enables the woolen manufacturers to charge over $100,000,000 annually for their manufactured products in excess of what would be a fair profit, and a large part of this vast sum of money must be paid by the wage-earners of the country when they purchase woolen wearing apparel to protect them from the winter winds. It has also been shown that the cotton manufacturers are now charging annually $90,000,000 more for their products than should be charged, and the major portion of this is paid by the poorer people when they buy the cotton goods they must have to clothe themselves.

It has also been shown that the sugar trust is robbing the American people annually of $55,000,000 on sugar; and not contented with the privilege of doing this, it recently plead guilty to robbing the Government by paying into the United States Treasury nearly $3,000,000 of unpaid duties on smuggled sugar. It was not satisfied with the legalized right to plunder the people of $55,000,000 annually, but sought to further increase its dividends by robbing the Government of its customs duties. And then having been discovered, instead of the officers of this great trust standing before the bar of justice to answer to the charge of crime, there appeared before the nation's court seven ordinary laborers upon whom the trust unloads all responsibility. The men charged with the crime were so insignificant in the roster of the company they served that their names did not appear on the books, but, like convicts, responded by numbers. Although the devices used by them in manipulating the scales on which the imported sugar was weighed resulted in robbing the Government of $3,000,000 in duties and transferred the same into the coffers of the sugar trust, they only received from the American Sugar Refining Company the insignificant sum of $5 per week in addition to their regular weekly pay. This cruel trust, with its treasury overflowing with money, had ground down the wages of its employees to such an extent that these men were induced to imperil their future liberty, sacrifice their honor, and bring disgrace upon their families for the pitiful sum of $5 per week. And this was not the first time, but the seventh time the sugar trust was caught in trying to get its raw sugar through the customs without paying a duty. Its history is one of almost unbelievable persistence in crime. Seemingly, the supreme intelligence of this vicious combination was willing to take all kinds of chances and employ all kinds of methods to rob both the people and the Government.

Mr. Chairman, we will never better our condition morally or drive crime from our midst by giving protection to confirmed criminals. The sugar trust is, and has been for years, the chief beneficiary of a protective tariff, and at all times has been a willful, persistent, and resourceful violator of the laws. No sooner had it admitted its guilt, by paying into the Government Treasury $3,000,000 of stolen money, until it appeared through its representatives in Washington, during the consideration of the Payne tariff bill, demanding the continuance of the inexcusable, indefensible, and excessive sugar protection. The confession of guilt had not even brought the blush of crimson to their faces, and from observation, it would seem, they went upon the theory that inasmuch as Congress had given them the right twelve years ago to rob the people of $55,000,000 annually that they surely had the right to rob the Government of at least $3,000,000 per year. With such exposures of greed, dishonesty, bribery, and robbery of both the people and the Government by this trust it seems almost unthinkable that Congress could or would, in the face of such evidence, renew its license to build up colossal fortunes off of the people through government favoritism.

But, sir, over my protest, over my vote, to the discredit of the country and the detriment of the people, Congress did continue the high duty on sugar, which enables them to rifle the pockets of the American people. And since the renewal of this privilege the ordinary laborers who were paid $5 per week extra to rob the Government of $3,000,000 for the benefit of the sugar trust have been sentenced to a term in the penitentiary and are now serving time, while the real robbers, who shift the responsibility on them, are enjoying the special privilege granted them by Congress.

I repeat, Mr. Chairman, these facts are before us and justify speedy action on the part of the House. This Government does not owe every man a living, but it does owe him an opportunity to earn a living. It does not owe any man a special privilege, but it does owe every man an equal opportunity under the law and a square deal in the race for life. What I want to see is not only an increase in the production of wealth, but I also want to see a more equitable distribution of it. Let us repeal all laws granting special privileges to a favored few, to the end that we may have a few less costly palaces on the hill and many more humble but happy homes in the valley.

I contend, sir, that the day of special privileges must be brought to an end and the doctrine of equal rights fixed in national policies and in the conscience of mankind. This Government was not established for the benefit of a favored few, but for the good of all the people, and upon us rests the responsibility of carrying out its purpose, to the end that the strong may not trample on the rights of the weak, but that every man, rich or poor, high or low, may stand upon one common ground with an equal opportunity of enjoying the blessings so bountifully showered upon us as a Nation.

Mr. Chairman, I make this appeal on behalf of the plain people and, in the name of justice and right, ask for such legislation as will result in the suppression of trusts and the relief of the toiling millions.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES].

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, the House having resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the state of the Union, I deem this an appropriate time to give expression to my views upon some of the important phases of our political life. Mr. Chairman, it is my opinion that sincerity should actuate the speeches and proceedings of this body, and I shall therefore speak my mind in the direct language of candor. I hope no word shall escape my lips on this occasion which is not prompted by sincerity and a love of country. I love this great Republic of free men, and I pray the God of nations that free government may not perish from this land which we all love so well.

I am not an alarmist, Mr. Chairman, but it is my deliberate conviction that our free institutions are in danger. As a student of history, I know that popular government in other lands and other ages has proven a failure. I fear for the safety of our own. Looking back through the centuries, I behold but the wrecks of the greatness which marked the republics of other days. As often as the children of men have sought to establish liberty and equality in government, as often as democratic republics have been founded in the past, failure and disappointment have resulted. Decay and despotism now mark the ruins of ancient cities, once the seats of learning and the citadels of liberty.

Is the world to witness another failure of free government, or is this Republic to prove an exception to all history?

"Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty" declared the founders of our Republic. These founders were wise in their day and generation. The despotism of the Old World and the resultant misery of mankind was fresh in their minds. They studied well the history of all past failures, and they sought to safeguard our free institutions from the rocks upon which free government in the past had wrecked the hopes and liberties of the people. They builded well for us. We are not building well for ourselves. I am not unmindful, Mr. Chairman, that no prophet is so utterly distasteful to the people as he who prophesies evil for the future of his country. We all delight to hear our praises sung, and we prefer to laugh with those who sing songs of joy than weep with those who tell us tales of sorrow. And yet I shall venture to displease those who hear and read this speech by pointing out some of the harmful influences which are gradually undermining the foundation of free government, and which, if left to run their course, will, in my opinion, destroy our institutions.

ARE THE PEOPLE CAPABLE OF SELF-GOVERNMENT?

We are accustomed to speak of the capability of the people for self-government as if that qualification was a fixed attribute. On the contrary, Mr. Chairman, it varies with the increasing or decreasing intelligence and patriotism of the people. The qualifications for self-government are twofold. Intelligence is required to guide the hand of the suffragan, and patriotism is required to guide his heart. The intelligence to know the right is not sufficient unless accompanied with the love of country. On the other hand, patriotism without intelligence is powerless to preserve liberty, because while it strikes with the strength of a giant, its blows are wanting the guidance of wisdom and are as apt to wound a friend as a foe.

Capacity for self-government, like most everything else expressed in words, is relative. Those who possess virtue and intelligence in a high degree are not only capable of self-government, but they are sufficiently equipped to make up a part of the deficiency of those who do not possess so much of these admirable qualities. As an illustration, we have many insane unfortunates whose lack of intelligence must be compensated from the ranks of the sane. We likewise have a criminal class, and their deficiency in virtue must be supplied from our good citizenship. The whole scheme of free government depends for its success upon the quality of citizenship. When the intelligent and the patriotic citizenship is increasing more rapidly than the illiterate and vicious, it encourages the hope that the experiment of free government will be successful, and when the ignorant and the vicious are increasing more rapidly than the wise and the good, it indicates the decay of free government.

THE DEATH OF REPUBLICS.

Good laws are not enough to guarantee the perpetuation of a republic. The people of Mexico, after the revolution of 1824, adopted the Constitution of the United States with but immaterial variations and changes. And yet that Republic, after a brief and fitful existence, yielded to the sway of a dictator. Many of the South American republics modeled their organic laws after our own, and yet, being possessed of a defective citizenship, one petty revolution followed another, and the most revolting tyranny flourished under the forms of wise and righteous laws. Nor is it enough that a republic is established in a rich and resourceful country and that it is undisturbed by external forces. Where can fairer lands be found than in South America, and the disturbances there have been internal?

Upon the quality of citizenship and the manner of regulating the suffrage must depend the success or failure of free government. Let no one vainly imagine that our Republic has passed the experimental stage and that success is assured. A hundred years in the life of a government is as a day in the life of a man. Great bodies move slowly and changes are almost imperceptible. Republics die as men do, but transition from life to death in a great government is marked by slow and insidious degrees of alteration.

The Republic of Athens lived almost a hundred years after her statesmen and orators were the shameless takers of bribes.

The Roman Republic was dead more than a hundred years before her lethargic citizenship was aroused to the fact that their liberties were gone.

In the mortuary table of republics we must reckon life by the centuries and not by the years.

Mr. Chairman, there is no fairer or more suitable location upon the earth for the health and growth of a republic than the United States. Nature has blessed us with an isolated and expansive domain of fertile land. The Atlantic Ocean to our east separates and removes us from the wars and intrigues of Europe. The Pacific to our west is a barrier against the hordes of the Orient. Whichever way we turn the prospect is peaceful and pleasing. We are masters of our own destiny.

If free government shall perish from the face of this fair land, the destruction must be wrought by the erring hand of man. The Creator has wonderfully blessed us with the means of attaining happiness in the enjoyment of liberty. Others have failed. What is to be our fate? Our only hope lies in the intelligence and patriotism of the people. Our danger is ignorance and selfishness.

WATCHMAN, WHAT OF THE HOUR?

The representatives of the people are the mariners of the ship of state. Let us halt and consult the compass.

It has been wisely said that ignorance is the foe of liberty. Let us reason together concerning our immigration laws and see how the Congress deals with the question of ignorance. Selfishness is the archenemy of free government. Let us examine the decrees of Congress and see how selfishness is dealt with here.

The just and economic expenditure of the public treasure is characteristic of the administration of a government based upon equality and popular suffrage. Let us see if the Congress is careful and just in expending the treasure taxed from the people.

Militarism has been the bane of popular governments in all lands and at all times. Let us see if the policy of this Government is not leading rapidly and directly to the establishment of a large army and navy.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. Chairman, immigration to this country for the ten years ending June 30, 1909, has been 8,202,388. This colossal increase of our population by means of immigration is practically one-third of the entire immigration to the United States since the foundation of the Government. Of the 8,202,388 thus arriving in the past ten years, there were 1,926,532 adult aliens who could not read or write in any language. The number of these illiterates admitted for the past ten years is equal to the average population of a sovereign State of the Union. Just think of it! In ten years a sufficient number of these illiterates have been taken into our Republic to equal in population the State of Alabama or Virginia. Where did these 2,000,000 illiterates come from? The source of our immigration has been shifted by the foreign steamships to a more profitable traffic. We no longer get the sturdy Germans in large quantities. The English and the Irish are not coming as in former years. Our immigration, which formerly came almost entirely from Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Germany, and Great Britain, now comes from southern Europe and Asia. In other words, we are no longer drawing people from Teutonic and Celtic countries, an immigration which blessed our shores in the earlier stages of the Republic and made us great and strong. More than 80 per cent of our immigration in recent years has come from the Slavic and Iberic countries of southern and eastern Europe. Germany sent us 215,009 immigrants in 1854, or more than one-half of our total immigration. She sent us 250,630 in 1882, or nearly one-third of our total immigration. In 1907 she sent us only 37,807 immigrants, or about 3 per cent of our total immigration. Our total immigration from Germany from 1820 to 1907 has been 5,262,463. Of this great number, only 273,412 came to us in the last ten years of that period.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

Mr. DIES. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COX of Indiana. What remedies, if any, would the gentleman suggest? I quite agree with the gentleman in some of the statements he is making.

Mr. DIES. I would quarantine this Republic against illiteracy as I would against the bubonic plague. If we should quarantine to protect the health of the people by excluding smallpox and bubonic plague, why not quarantine against illiteracy, which will injure the political health of the country?

Mr. COX of Indiana. Does the gentleman mean to prohibit immigration?

Mr. DIES. I would suffer no man to come to this country who had not learned to read and write the language of his nativity. That is one thing I would do. I would go still further. I would suffer no man to come to this country who, on account of his environment, his illiteracy, or his immorality, was incapable of self-government in his own country.

Mr. COX of Indiana. If the immigrant was able to read and write in his own language would the gentleman permit him to come to this country or would he put the ban against him?

Mr. DIES. I would be glad, Mr. Chairman, as a starter, for the House to prescribe the illiteracy test. The gentleman asked me what I would do.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I was trying to get at the gentleman's views.

Mr. DIES. I would suffer no man to come to this country who is incapable of self-government.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Would the gentleman put up the same bar against the Japanese?

Mr. DIES. Certainly.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Would not the gentleman be afraid of embroiling this Government in a foreign war?

Mr. DIES. The highest duty of a free government is to remain free; and self-preservation is as much a law for nations as for individuals.

In 1854 the English and Irish came to us to the number of 160,253, or more than one-third of our total immigration. In 1882 our Irish and English immigration was 179,413, or nearly one-fourth of our total immigration. In 1907 our Irish and English immigration had fallen to 113,567, or less than one-tenth of the total.

I need not speak of the virtues of the German, English, and Irish citizens. They come from countries where a large majority of the people are capable of self-government. They are the descendants of the blue-eyed Angles and Saxons. They are of our kith and kin. I lament that the chief source of our present immigration is not from such countries as Germany and the United Kingdom.

In 1854 there came to us from Italy 1,263 immigrants. In 1882 the number had increased to 32,160. In 1907 Italy sent us 285,731 immigrants, or more than 25 per cent of the total. In 1854 Russia sent us 13 immigrants. In 1882 she sent us 21,590, and in 1907 our immigration from Russia was 258,943. We received no immigration from Austria-Hungary in 1854. In 1882 she sent us 29,150, and in 1907 our immigration from Austria-Hungary had risen to 338,452, or nearly one-third of the total. Mr. Chairman, there are many noble men and women among our immigrants from Italy, Russia, and Austria-Hungary, but 99 per cent of our immigration from those countries are incapable of self-government. They do not come to us from free governments. They come from lands where the people have submitted to despotism for a thousand years. Through all the centuries they have been taught the divine right of kings to rule. They have bared their backs to the lash of power throughout the generations. They are incapable of self-government at home, and they are incapable here. They did not possess sufficient intelligence and patriotism at home to establish and maintain free government, and I am opposed to delivering into their hands the destiny of this great Republic.

I do not complain, Mr. Chairman, of those who are here. They came at our invitation and in accordance with our laws. They are a part of us. We must spread enlightenment among them. We must teach them that hatred of tyranny is service to God; that there is no just exercise of power except that which is derived from the consent of the governed.

I propose to institute some further comparisons along this line. In 1854 more than 90 per cent of our total immigration came from Germany, England, and Ireland. In 1882 those countries sent us more than 50 per cent of our total. Our immigration from Germany, England, and Ireland in 1907 was but little more than 10 per cent of the total.

In 1854 our total immigration from Italy, Russia, and Austria-Hungary was only 1,276, or about one-third of 1 per cent of the total. In 1882 those countries sent us 82,900, or a little more than 10 per cent of our total immigration. In 1907 our immigration from Italy, Russia, and Austria-Hungary was 883,126, or about 75 per cent of our total immigration.

I have selected the years 1854, 1882, and 1907 for these comparisons, because those years represent the high-water mark of immigration for the several periods. The point I seek to firmly establish, Mr. Chairman, is that our immigration has rapidly increased and has now reached the stage where it is a positive menace to the security of our form of government.

I wish also to demonstrate beyond the possibility of question that not only has immigration grown to alarming proportions, but that the percentage of illiteracy is constantly growing larger among the immigrant class.

I also desire to point out to the House and the country the evil consequences which are almost sure to follow from a change in the source of our immigration. Formerly our chief source of immigration was from Germany, England, Ireland, Denmark, Norway, and Sweden. As is well known, those countries sent us a very high class of immigration. There are no better farmers in the world than the Germans, and they are capable of self-government. They are educated, and they come from a country of education. They are a brave and an honest people, and we have always welcomed them. The Irish love liberty as they do their own lives, and they hate tyranny in all its forms. The English are of the same stock as we are, and are eminently fitted for the exercise of citizenship in a republic. Whoever has studied the character and country of those who come from Denmark, Norway, and Sweden can never dread the effect of such immigration. They come from a cold and rugged country and they make bold and independent citizens. Like the Germans, they are excellent farmers and love home and country.

But in more recent years our immigration has undergone radical changes. Instead of the Germans, English, Irish, and Scandinavians, we are getting almost our entire immigration from Italy, Russia, and Austria-Hungary. It is well that we look to those countries and to immigration from those countries with a view to ascertaining if immigration from thence is likely to strengthen and make safer our free institutions.

What I say here, Mr. Chairman, is not actuated by prejudice against any part of our foreign population. I would prefer their good will, but above all I prefer to serve and help to save this Republic. Looking directly into the internal condition of countries furnishing our immigration, I find that those countries which were formerly our chief source of supply are highly educated peoples, and that the percentage of illiteracy is small. My data are taken from the report of the Commissioner of Education and the figures are for adults only and were compiled either from army recruits or marriage certificates. From this report I find that the average percentage of illiteracy of the adult population of the countries of Germany, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, England, and Ireland is only 2.24 per cent. In other words, in those countries there are less than three persons out of every hundred of the adult population who are illiterate. On the other hand, the average percentage of illiteracy in the countries of Italy, Russia, and Austria-Hungary is 44.50 per cent. In other words, nearly one-half of the grown-up people of these countries are illiterate. It will thus be seen that we are drawing 75 per cent of our large annual immigration from countries where ignorance is prevalent and where liberty and equality are believed to be crimes against the laws of man and God.

This new immigration is different from that of past years in another respect. There are few farmers among this new immigration. They flock to the cities and colonize themselves into sections. They do not learn our language and laws. They do not imbibe the spirit of liberty. They remain incapable of self-government. They fall into the hands of corrupt bosses and political grafters in the cities, and their ballots are bartered and sold like so much merchandise. The political boss gives them "protection" and an occasional "banquet" in return for the privilege of casting their ballots. With this large vote at his command, the political boss sells the people's offices and bestows the honor of public service upon men who can and will pay him large sums of money. These are stubborn, grim, awful truths. Their existence puts our whole scheme of free government in jeopardy. The continuance and growth of this condition will destroy this Republic.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman from Texas yield to me?

Mr. DIES. I will yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SULZER. I do not desire to embarrass my friend.

Mr. DIES. The gentleman need not be afraid of embarrassing me.

Mr. SULZER. I am opposed to an educational test in immigration, and when the gentleman says that he would prohibit a man from coming to this country because he can not read and write, is he not aware that there are countries in Europe from which many of these immigrants come that do not allow the people to learn to read and write?

Mr. DIES. Yes; but is that any reason why they should come here and dictate to the United States, why they should come here and be given suffrage? It requires more than a love of country to maintain a republic; it requires intelligence as well.

Mr. SULZER. Yes; but when these immigrants come here they are intelligent and industrious, and many of them soon become our very best citizens; and their children go to the public schools and learn to read and write, and, as a general thing, these children stand at the top of their classes in all the schools. They love their country. They are good citizens. They help to maintain the Republic.

Mr. SHARP. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DIES. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SHARP. I would like to ask the gentleman how he would undertake to supply the great railroad companies with help to build railroads and the companies who operate the coal mines with help if he imposed the educational qualification on the immigrants that come here and who do that work?

Mr. DIES. The gentleman misapprehends my solicitude for this great Republic. I do not believe the salvation of this Republic depends upon the development of all our resources in the next five years, or the next one hundred years. I look upon the Republic as a lasting boon, and I look forward to leaving it as a heritage to my children and to my children's children as well. If railroads can not get cheap labor right away to develop the resources of the country without importing millions of illiterate immigrants, then we had better wait for our natural increase to develop our resources.

Mr. NICHOLLS. Will the gentleman from Texas yield for a suggestion?

Mr. DIES. Yes; if it is a short one.

Mr. NICHOLLS. In relation to the question asked by the gentleman from Ohio in regard to the labor in mines, I might say that in the State of Pennsylvania the law requires that the men who become miners must answer at least 12 questions in the English language, and similar examinations are provided for in other mining States. They undertake to get men for their intelligence rather than allowing people without education to go into the mines.

Mr. DIES. I shall not undertake, Mr. Chairman, to go fully into the question of foreign immigration because I am warned that my time is rapidly expiring.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. I will yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman state where he gets his information as to the type of citizen developed from these people he has mentioned; is it from observation of those in his own State?

Mr. DIES. No; I have visited the congested districts in New York and other large cities, and I have beheld thousands of ignorant foreigners who are incapable of self-government.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman has spoken of southern Italy. Is he aware of the fact that the Italians in the city of New York own more than eighty million dollars' worth of real estate?

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield to the gentleman from New York for a speech. I will enlighten the gentleman by saying that last year more than 50 per cent of our immigration from southern Italy were unable to read and write their native language. There were 85,307 Italians from the south of Italy who emigrated to this country last year who were unable to read and write. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if he thinks they are capable of self-government?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will say to the gentleman that in the rural sections of the State of New York, and perhaps the same is true in the gentleman's own State, that as large a percentage of people are unable to read and write——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. DIES. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I would like to ask the gentleman if he knows that such classes as he mentions show a less degree of illiteracy than do the States of the South?

Mr. DIES. We have the negroes down South, but I want to state that illiteracy is not increasing.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The fact is that out in the State of Nebraska, where we have had a great tide of immigration from Ireland and Germany and Sweden, and some other countries of Europe, those people are making the very best citizens we have.

Mr. DIES. That is good immigration.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And the census returns show the smallest percentage of illiteracy of any State in the Union.

Mr. DIES. I grant you that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. So that the argument of illiteracy absolutely fails when applied to those States that have enjoyed large immigration.

Mr. DIES. There might be some illiterates from foreign countries who are capable of self-government, but 99 per cent of the illiterate ones who come from other countries to this are incapable of exercising the prerogatives of American citizenship. I know that we possess some native population in the South and in all sections of our great country who are illiterate. Yet they are much more capable of self-government than your illiterate foreigner. In my own State a boy may have been raised up without ever having learned to read or write, and yet when you speak to him of the battlefields of his native State, when you talk to him of San Jacinto and the Alamo, his bosom heaves with patriotic ardor. Your illiterate native son of Massachusetts, of Maine, or of Nebraska has learned the history and traditions of his native soil. He will fight for his country. When he goes to the ballot box, even though he can not read or write, his aim is to perpetuate liberty.

Mr. SULZER. Does the gentleman know what percentage of immigrants to the United States can not read and write?

Mr. DIES. Yes. For 1907, 30 per cent; for 1909, 29 per cent. I will say this to the gentleman, also, that the rate of increase of illiteracy from Italy and from Austria-Hungary and from Russia has increased since 1893 as follows: Italy, then 14 per cent, now 22 per cent; Russia, then 8 per cent, now 20 per cent; Austria-Hungary, then 11 per cent, now 26 per cent.

On the other hand, the immigrants that come from Germany and the United Kingdom are decreasing in the rate of illiteracy. You are not only bringing enough from the south and east of Europe every year to make the population of a sovereign State, but you are increasing the percentage of illiteracy every year. I make this challenge to the gentleman: Never in all the trials that the children of men have made of republics did they ever admit strangers from other countries to partake in the affairs of their government. Why, the Greeks put strangers to death if they raised their voice in the assemblies of the people. No man who did not live at the city of Rome could ever become a suffragan. You have loaded the ship of this Republic to the sinking point, and there is not a man—and there are learned men here—who can justify our immigration laws in the light of the history of the republics of the past. I want to pass to another question, if the gentleman is through.

Mr. SULZER. I would like to know if the gentleman would favor excluding a man like Louis Kossuth, who came to this country from Austria-Hungary after the heroic struggle for freedom in 1848?

Mr. DIES. Oh, there are great men among all peoples. Now and then every civilization has reared some mighty lover of liberty like Kossuth, who struggled to give liberty to a people who were incapable of enjoying it. The fact that he struggled in vain for free government but proves that those for whom he struggled were wanting in the capacity of citizenship.

Mr. SULZER. Does not the gentleman think that the children of the men who fought for freedom and liberty under Kosciusko and Kossuth believe in freedom and liberty now just as much as they did or as any men in this country do?

Mr. DIES. I do. The people of any nation need only will it to be free. There are people in Italy, in Russia, in Austria-Hungary who struggle by day and pray by night for the boon of liberty and free government, but they are not sufficient in numbers to control their countries. The Kosciuskos, the lovers of liberty, the men who gave their lives for liberty at home, are not among the 85,000 illiterates who came to this country from south Italy last year.

Mr. PARSONS. Would the gentleman admit all those who come from Russia because of political oppression there?

Mr. DIES. I do not care whether a man comes from Russia or Germany. I would suffer any man to come to this country who is a good, moral citizen, and who, on account of his education and environments, is capable of self-government in his own country. [Applause.]

Mr. PARSONS. Suppose he is unable to read and write, but none the less is a lover of free government, and comes to this country to escape from Russian autocracy; would the gentleman admit him?

Mr. DIES. I would say to him, if he is unable to read and write, that he has neglected the only remedy for tyranny that mankind has ever devised, implied in the maxim, "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty."

Mr. PARSONS. But he has not the chance there.

Mr. DIES. If he has not been vigilant enough to learn to read and write his native tongue, he is incompetent and incapable of arbitrating the destiny of this one remaining Republic on the face of God's earth.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In view of the gentleman's statement as to the necessity of education, will he explain the statement made by Mr. J. O. Tirrell, of San Antonio, Tex., on the 10th of December last, that 47 out of every 100 children residing in the rural districts of the State of Texas never go to school, and that while Texas expended $5.54 for each child in 1907, the average for all the States of the Union is more than double that of Texas?

Mr. DIES. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield for a speech. I am not here defending illiteracy in Texas. God knows we have some people in Texas who are incapable of self-government. I am not so narrow that I am looking alone to my own State. As God shall judge me in the end, I love this Republic. I love free government, based upon equality and popular suffrage. I would not allow illiterate immigrants to go to Texas or to go to the State of New York, not because I am prejudiced against them, but because I am biased in favor of free government.

As an illustration of how rapidly our population is increasing by means of immigration, let me say that according to the last census there were 16 States of the Union that had a total population of 5,559,899. It will thus be seen that we have admitted to the United States in the past fifteen years more immigrants from Italy, Russia, and Austria-Hungary than the entire population of 16 sovereign States.

At the taking of the last census, in 1900, there were 45 States in the Union. The average population of these States was 1,441,932. It will thus be seen that foreign immigration into the United States for the past ten years has been equal to five average States of the Union, with nearly a million immigrants left over.

Three Territories have been admitted into the Union as States since the taking of the last census in 1900. These Territories at that time had a total population of 716,572. The coming into the Union of this population by admission of Territories to statehood met with strenuous opposition from leaders of the Republican party. For the year 1907 there were admitted into the Union from Italy, Russia, and Austria-Hungary alien immigrants to the number of 883,126, and the leaders of the Republican party made no protest or objection. It will be seen that for a single year we annexed a population from Italy, Russia, and Austria-Hungary as large as the population of five sovereign States of the Union, as shown by the last census, with nearly enough immigrants left over to equal the population of the Territory of Arizona.

The Commissioner-General of Immigration in his report for the year 1907 says:

> It is estimated that about 47 per cent of our population is due to immigration since colonial times. The nationalities shown in chart would, therefore, practically represent the origins of 47 per cent of the population. It will be seen by reference to chart, however, that until very recent times immigration was almost entirely from the Teutonic and Celtic countries of northern and western Europe, principally Germany and the United Kingdom. Previous to 1820, although no immigration statistics were collected, it is known that the people who came to this country during colonial times and after were also from northern and western Europe. Thus the great mass of our population is of Teutonic and Celtic origin, with a considerably greater proportion of the former. A change in the source of immigration, it will be seen, however, commenced about 1882 and has assumed enormous proportions during the past eight years, until now 76 per cent of our immigration comes from the Slavic and Iberic countries of southern and eastern Europe, more than 970,000 having arrived from those countries during the past year.

And again this report says:

> What will be the effect if the present phenomenal immigration continues is a question that is constantly being asked. With regard more particularly to quantity, the question may be answered by the following illustration: China proper is the thickly populated portion of the Chinese Empire and is the country popularly thought of as representing the limit of density of population. With a net increase to our population by immigration of 1,000,000 per annum, which is less than the present rate, and the present rate of natural increase (14.66 per cent per decade), the United States would reach the density of China proper in about four generations, or, more particularly, in one hundred and thirty-four years, at which time we would have a population of 950,000,000.

Not only is the total number of illiterates among immigrants into the United States increasing, but the percentage that illiteracy bears to the total immigration is also increasing. An analysis of the last fifteen years, for which we have complete immigration data, amply demonstrates the truth of this statement. Dividing the fifteen years into three five-year periods, we find that for the first period, from 1893 to 1897 inclusive, there were, on an average, 15 illiterates out of every 100 immigrants. For the five-year period from 1898 to 1902, inclusive, the average for those years is 21 illiterates out of every 100 immigrants, and for the five years from 1903 to 1907 inclusive, the average illiteracy was 22 illiterates out of every 100 immigrants.

In his report for the year 1907 the Commissioner-General of Immigration says with reference to illiteracy:

> Of those admitted, 337,573 could neither read nor write and 5,229 could read but not write, the corresponding figures for the year 1906 being 265,068 and 4,755, respectively, the figures being exclusive of aliens aged less than 14 years. By taking the total number of those over 14 years of age arriving during the year, 1,147,005, and comparing that number with 343,402, the total of those who could neither read nor write and those who could read but could not write, it is found that about 30 per cent were illiterate—an increase of 2 per cent over the percentage shown in 1906, viz, 28 per cent, which was an increase of 2 per cent over that of the preceding year.

Mr. Chairman, the immigration question is of the first importance to those who believe in free government and who are striving to maintain the great American Republic as a governmental fabric of liberty and equality. We ought to quarantine this Government against ignorance and vice as we do against the bubonic plague. We ought to keep out those who are incapable of self-government, because it will require all the intelligence and patriotism we possess to govern ourselves without being embarrassed with an ignorant foreign population to be made the tool of the selfish rich. And there is another strong reason why we should keep out this horde of illiterate foreigners. They come to our country and enter into competition with our independent laborers. In many lines of labor and business our native people can not compete with them. Our laboring man has been brought up to believe that he is as good as any man, lowland or highland, and he is. He has been taught to live up to the high standard of American living and to educate and maintain his family in a style becoming his station as an American citizen. He can not do this if forced to compete in his labor or business with an ignorant foreigner who had nothing spent on his own education and who is spending nothing on the education of others, who has been enured by long years of deprivation to the most rigid economy, and who can therefore subsist himself and family on what an average American family would throw away.

Nothing can sooner crush the spirit and destroy the independence of our laboring classes than to be driven into the exacting and cruel competition of foreign pauper labor. I know the land agents and those who want to employ cheaper labor are demanding immigration. They are willing to pack the earth to suffocation for temporary good times. I am not. We of this generation owe a duty to the generations yet to come. No form selfishness can take is more cruel than that which wants to make use of all the resources of the country at once and leave nothing but a struggle for existence to the next and succeeding generations. As a student of history I know that this free Government can not long endure unless there is a marked change in the quality and quantity of our foreign immigration.

Let us hope that the Immigration Commission, now at work upon this question, will make a thorough report to the present session of Congress and that remedial legislation will speedily follow. Let us permit only those to come to our country who are capable of self-government in their own, and when they do come to our country let us see to it that they remain here long enough to learn our language and the genius of our Government before we clothe them with suffrage, and only then if they have shown themselves in every way worthy of being intrusted with the destiny of that free Government for which our fathers struggled.

As a further accentuation of the fact that desirable immigration is decreasing rapidly and undesirable immigration is rapidly increasing, it need only be stated that for the fifteen years from 1878 to 1892 our immigration from Italy, Russia, and Austria-Hungary was only 1,372,747. For the fifteen years that followed, or from 1893 to 1907, inclusive, immigration from Italy, Russia, and Austria-Hungary rose to the tremendous figure of 5,554,319. On the other hand, our immigration from Germany, Great Britain, Ireland, Denmark, Norway, and Sweden for the fifteen years from 1878 to 1892, inclusive, was 5,555,854. For the following fifteen years, or from 1893 to 1907, inclusive, immigration from Germany, Great Britain, Ireland, Denmark, Norway, and Sweden had fallen to a total of 2,318,106.

I am not alone, Mr. Chairman, in the views I have expressed as to the dangers of foreign immigration. I desire to incorporate into these remarks the opinions of some of the distinguished men of the country who are familiar at first hand with and who have carefully studied the question.

The present commissioner of immigration at New York City, Hon. William Williams, who handles 80 per cent of the present influx, states in his recent annual report:

> The present laws do not reach a large body of immigrants who are generally undesirable, because unintelligent, of low vitality, poor physique, able to perform only the cheapest kind of labor, desirous of settling almost exclusively in the cities, by their competition tending to reduce the standard of living of the American wage-worker, and unfitted either mentally or morally for good citizenship. It would be quite impossible to accurately state what proportion of last year's immigration should be classified as undesirable. I believe that at least 200,000 came here in 1903, for instance (631,885 entered through Ellis Island), who, although they may be able to earn a living, yet are not wanted and will be of no benefit to the country, and will, on the contrary, be a detriment, because their presence will tend to lower our standards. Their coming has been a benefit chiefly, if not only, to the transportation companies which brought them over.

The late Gen. Francis A. Walker, president of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, an author of international reputation and chief of two United States censuses, expressed his apprehension for the effect of this new foreign immigration upon our Anglo-Saxon civilization and democratic institutions in the following words:

> The immigrant of the former time came almost exclusively from western or northern Europe. We have now tapped great reservoirs of population then almost unknown to the passenger lists of our arriving vessels. Only a short time ago the immigrants from southern Italy, Hungary, Austria, and Russia together made up hardly more than 1 per cent of our immigration. To-day the proportion has risen to something like 40 per cent, and threatens soon to become 50 to 60 per cent, or even more. The entrance into our political, social, and industrial life of such vast masses of peasantry, degraded below our utmost conceptions, is a matter which no intelligent patriot can look upon without the gravest apprehension and alarm. These people have no history behind them which is of a nature to give encouragement. They have none of the inherited instincts and tendencies which made it comparatively easy to deal with the immigration of the olden time. They are beaten men of beaten races, representing the worst failures in the struggle for existence. Centuries are against them as centuries were on the side of those who formerly came to us. They have none of the ideas and aptitudes which fit men to take up readily and easily the problem of self-care and self-government, such as belong to those who are descended from the tribes that met under the oak trees of old Germany to make laws and choose chieftains.

In a recent address before the graduating class of Vassar College, Associate Justice Brewer, of the United States Supreme Court, said:

> May not the original Anglo-Saxon stock be submerged? Will republican institutions stand the continuous influx of people who know nothing of self-control and who look upon all government as an enemy? We have boasted that our liberty was a liberty of law, and left no room for revolution or riot, but certain occurrences in Colorado and elsewhere have shown that this is not always true. May not the forces against law become strong enough to break it down? Is not the Anglo-Saxon principle of liberty worth preserving, even if it should be necessary to restrict or put a stop to immigration? It is a question, at any rate, that should not be settled by sentiment, nor will it do to say that we have done well enough in the past and are likely to do as well in the future.

Much to the point is the extract from the American Commonwealth, by Hon. James Bryce, author, volume 2, pages 862 and 863:

> Within the past decade new swarms of immigrants have invaded America, drawn from their homes in the eastern part of Europe by the constant cheapening of ocean transit, and by that more thorough drainage, so to speak, of the inland regions of Europe, which is due to the extension of railroads. These immigrants, largely of Slavonic race, come from a lower stratum of civilization than the German immigrant of the past, and since they speak foreign tongues are less quickly amenable to American influences and probably altogether less improvable than are the Irish. There seems to be a danger that if they continue to come in large numbers they may retain their own low standard of decency and comfort and menace the continuance among the working classes generally of that higher standard which has hitherto prevailed in all but a few spots in this country.

A year or two ago Mayor McClellan directed Doctor Darlington, president of the New York City Board of Health, to make a special investigation of the push-cart nuisance. At the conclusion of his investigation Doctor Darlington reported, among other things:

> I have heard the assertion that immigration is necessary to carry on our public works, to build railroads, to dig canals, and the like. But the present immigrants now coming over do not come for that purpose and will not do that sort of work. No; they prefer to become push-cart peddlers and to live in our cities in poverty, breeding crime and disease. They occupy our streets, the streets for which our taxpayers have paid heavily. They interfere with traffic and break the laws of sanitation which we have decided are necessary for the preservation of public health.

In this connection I would ask your especial attention to a statement made by Gen. Theodore A. Bingham, police commissioner of New York City, published in the Cincinnati Inquirer June 20, 1907, couched in modest and discreet language, yet reciting a condition that ought to arrest our attention:

> There is another very important thing about this crime business. I don't want to say anything that would be indiscreet, but unquestionably the hordes of immigrants that are coming here have a great deal to do with crimes against women and children.
> You will notice that these particular crimes are done by fellows who can't talk the English language. It is this wave of immigration that brings to New York the hundreds of thousands of criminals who don't know what liberty means, and don't care; don't know our customs, can not speak the English language, and are in general the scum of Europe.
> The solution of the problem is to prohibit immigration.

President Theodore Roosevelt said in his annual message to Congress in December, 1905:

> The question of immigration is of vital interest to this country. In the year ending June 30, 1905, there came to the United States 1,026,000 alien immigrants. Moreover, a considerable proportion of it, probably a very large proportion, including most of the undesirable class, does not come here of its own initiative, but because of the activities of agents of transportation companies. These agents are distributed throughout Europe, and by offer of all kinds of inducements they wheedle and cajole many immigrants, often against their own interests, to come here. The most serious obstacle we have to encounter in the effort to secure proper regulation of immigration to these shores arises from the detrimental opposition of foreign steamship lines, who have no interest whatever in the matter save to increase the returns on their capital by carrying masses of immigration hither in the steerage of their ships.

How prophetic were the words of our martyred President McKinley, whose assassin's family would have never been allowed to enter this country had there been on the statute books such an illiteracy test as South African and Australian countries have. I read from President McKinley's inaugural address of March 4, 1897:

> Our naturalization and immigration laws should be further improved to the constant promotion of a safe, a better, and a higher citizenship. A grave peril to the Republic would be a citizenship too ignorant to understand or too vicious to appreciate the great value and beneficences of our institutions and laws, and against all who come here to war upon them the gates must be promptly and tightly closed. Illiteracy must be banished from the land if we shall attain that high destiny as the foremost of the enlightened nations of the world which under Providence we ought to achieve.

As showing the attitude of the farmers of the country, the following resolution, which is typical of many that have been passed recently by various patriotic and other associations and societies, will be of interest:

> Resolved, That the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America, in national convention assembled, at Memphis, Tenn., this 8th day of January, 1908, and representing 2,000,000 farmers, urge upon Congress the immediate abolition of the federal bureau of distribution and the speedy enactment of laws substantially excluding the present enormous alien influx, by means of an increased head tax, a money requirement, the illiteracy test, and other measures; and that we call upon our public, and especially our state, officials to prevent the agricultural sections from becoming a dumping ground for foreign immigration.

SELFISHNESS.

Mr. Chairman, in recounting the dangers which threaten the success of free government, selfishness should be placed side by side with ignorance. Ignorance would often be harmless if selfishness did not stand at its elbow, ready to turn every mistake into an advantage. If this Republic is to prove a failure at last, the fault will lie as much with the selfish rich as the ignorant poor. There is not a legislative day here when organized greed is not at the door of Congress demanding special favors in one form or another, and they often get what they want at the expense of the people. Selfish special interests are always awake and alert, while the great body of the people are passive and indifferent.

The millionaire sugar trust criminal who swindles the Government out of millions at the custom-house is worse than the poor criminal who counterfeits the national coins. Both are criminals. One commits a crime from sheer and wanton lust of wealth, while the other is often moved by hunger to break the laws of his country. The selfish and criminal rich are doing as much to destroy free government as the vicious and ignorant. Between these two extremes of society our free institutions are being destroyed, and Congress, like fiddling Nero, caters to the folly of the one and the cupidity of the other.

ECONOMY IN PUBLIC EXPENDITURE.

Mr. Chairman, there are many signs and tokens by which the student of history and political economy can distinguish a democratic republic from an aristocracy. I am very much afraid that a stranger passing through this Capitol could discover as many indications of an aristocratic as a democratic government. De Tocqueville, in his great work on Democracy in America, says:

> Democratic laws generally tend to promote the welfare of the greatest possible number, for they emanate from a majority of the citizens, who are subject to error, but who can not have an interest opposed to their own advantage. The laws of an aristocracy tend, on the contrary, to concentrate wealth and power in the hands of the minority, because an aristocracy by its very nature constitutes a minority.

Speaking again of the comparative virtues of democracy and aristocracy, this learned writer says:

> The English aristocracy is the most liberal which ever existed, and no body of men has ever, uninterruptedly furnished so many honorable and enlightened individuals to the government of a country. It can not, however, escape observation, that in the legislation of England, the good of the poor has been sacrificed to the advantage of the rich and the rights of the majority to the privileges of the few. The consequence is that England at the present day combines the extremes of fortunes in the bosom of her society; and her perils and calamities are almost equal to her power and her renown.

Montesquieu, in his Spirit of Laws, from which learned work the founders of our Government copied so extensively, says:

> We have observed that in a republic, where riches are equally divided, there can be no such thing as luxury; and as we have shown in the fifth book, that this equal distribution constitutes the excellence of a republican government; hence it follows that the less luxury there is in a republic the more perfect it is. There was none among the old Romans, none among the Lacedæmonians, and in republics where this equality is not quite lost, the spirit of commerce, industry, and virtue renders every man able and willing to live on his own property, and consequently prevents the growth of luxury. In proportion as luxury gains ground in a republic the minds of the people are turned toward their particular interests. Those who are allowed only what is necessary have nothing but their own reputation and their country's glory in view. But a soul depraved by luxury has many other desires, and soon becomes an enemy to the laws that confine it.

Professor Gillies, in his History of Ancient Greece, commenting upon the decay of the Grecian republics, says:

> It is unnecessary to crowd the picture, since it may be observed, in one word, that the vice and extravagance, which are supposed to characterize the declining ages of Greece and Rome, took root in Athens during the administration of Pericles, the most splendid and prosperous in the Grecian annals.

Mr. Chairman, the extravagance of Congress in the administration of this Government is a disgrace to the memory of the founders of our institutions. We no longer have a frugal and an honest administration of government, but, on the contrary, there is a perfect riot of waste and excess in all the departments of the Federal Government. We no longer have a simple, democratic Republic of equal men under equal laws. The purple robes of power have taken the place of the plain garments of authority, and on every hand are to be witnessed extravagance, pomp, and ceremony. This tremendous increase in expenditure goes on with the years, and is much faster than the increase of our population or wealth. In 1890 the total annual appropriations for the expenses of the Government were $340,000,000, or $6 for every man, woman, and child in the Government. In 1900 our expenses had increased to $600,000,000, or $8 for every man, woman, and child. The last Congress appropriated for the expenses of government for a single year the colossal sum of $1,103,387,508.01, or $12.40 per capita. This was an increase of 50 per cent over the expenditures for 1900, and an increase of more than 100 per cent over 1890. So great has this extravagance been that the Government now faces a deficit in the Public Treasury amounting to many millions of dollars. What has occasioned this tremendous increase in the expenses of government? There are nearly half a million persons in the employ of the Federal Government, and Congress never loses an opportunity to create new offices. During the first session of the Sixtieth Congress there were created 10,682 new offices, and the raise of salaries, together with the pay of the new officers, amounted to $21,183,250. During the second session of the Sixtieth Congress there were created 3,877 new offices, and salaries were again raised, totaling an additional expense of $7,807,039.50. There are, in round numbers, 1,000,000 persons on the pension rolls of the Government, and Congress is being constantly besieged to increase the number and the pay of the pensioners. The growth of our pension expenditure has been simply enormous, and bids fair to continue to grow.

In 1865 we spent for pensions something over four millions. In 1875 the amount had increased to nearly thirty millions, and in 1885 our expense for pensions amounted to a little more than sixty-five millions. In 1908 the expenditures for pensions had reached the stupendous total of $153,093,086.27, which was an increase of more than fourteen millions over the previous year. This rapid increase in pension expenditure has resulted, in a great measure, from the nefarious practice of passing through Congress at every session a perfect flood of private pension bills, which in the very nature of things must be passed in a lump without consideration by Congress. I am opposed to the system of private pension bills. The civil war has been over nearly fifty years. We have already paid nearly four billions in pensions, and I think it were high time that the expenditure for pensions should begin to decrease instead of increase. I am in favor of liberal pension laws—not private laws for the benefit of a particular man, but general laws for the benefit of all men of a given class. I am heartily opposed to private pension bills. They can not be considered by Congress, and they naturally and logically beget unfairness, inequality, and extravagance.

Mr. Chairman, this Government is being administered with all the pomp, splendor, and ceremony of an eastern despotism. There are no signs left around the Capitol of the once simple and honest Republic builded by the fathers. As an illustration, look at the expenditure on account of the White House and its occupant. The following is a statement of appropriations for the fiscal year which will end June 30, 1910.

Salary and allowances of the President, taken from the appropriation bills of 1909:

President's salary	$75,000
Secretaries, clerks, etc	69,920
Contingent fund	25,000
Traveling expenses	25,000
For vehicles, stables, etc	35,000
For additional improvements to White House	40,000
For furnishings, draperies, etc	15,000
For care of grounds	5,000
Fuel for White House and stables	6,000
Care of greenhouse	9,000
Repairs to greenhouse	3,000
Printing	2,000
Lighting White House and public grounds	19,000
Total for executive department for one year	329,420

This is a tremendous sum of money to be spent by the President of a republic where the cardinal principle is declared to be that "all men are created free and equal." These expenditures would be more suited to the palace of an oriental despot than the President of a free people. One item in this statement is for $35,000 for vehicles, stables, and so forth.

It is stated in the newspapers that the President uses an automobile exclusively. He does not use that machine except on the streets and driveways of Washington, and when he travels out of the city there is a $25,000 traveling expense account. So what becomes of the $35,000? Another item in the above is $9,000 for the greenhouse at the White House. Now, I am willing for the President and his family to have flowers, and lots of them, but I think $9,000 worth of bouquets are too many for a free people to throw at one of their equals who has been elevated by them to be a public servant for a few years. A laborer, earning an average of $1.50 per day, would have to work twenty full years in order to get enough money to pay for the President's flowers for one year, and he would have to work seventy-five years to get enough money to keep the President in automobiles for a single year. Some months ago the President visited New York City. While there he visited the Bowery and gave words of cheer to the thousands of poor and hungry who turned out to see and hear the President of the great Republic. He also inspected the midnight bread line on Broadway and looked into the pinched and hopeless faces of that long line of hungry human beings who stand there until midnight for a crust of bread. I want to say to the President that those hungry and despondent fellow-mortals were paying taxes to the Federal Government upon the shabby clothes they wore. They were paying these taxes, not in proportion to what they owned, but in proportion to the things they were compelled to buy and use. If the President really feels sorrow for the poor, as he said he did on that occasion, let him insist upon laws that will tax wealth instead of want, and that will limit our expenditures to an amount sufficient to run the government honestly and economically administered.

Mr. Chairman, what is true of expenses at the White House is true of the various departments of government. There are thousands of useless employees about them, and tremendous useless expense. It is now proposed by the President and others to pension employees of the Government. I can see no fairness in the proposition. They receive good salaries, and it is no fault of the taxpayers of this Nation if they do not save a part of what they make. There are now nearly a million and a half persons on the pension and other pay rolls of the Government, and the people all over the land are groaning beneath the taxes necessary to pay this vast army of pensioners and employees.

We pay $7,126,000 a year for detectives, but I have never heard of their having detected a fraudulent pension claim or a Republican postmaster engaged in pernicious political activity in violation of the civil-service statutes. Just a few years ago the annual appropriation for the navy was less than $25,000,000; last year it had grown to the enormous sum of $136,935,199. In 1891 we appropriated for the maintenance of the army $24,206,410; last year the amount was $101,197,470. There is profound peace, and yet so anxious are we to ape and follow the militarism of Europe that we are rapidly fastening a large standing army upon the backs of the taxpayers of the land. Last year we appropriated for the army and navy the colossal sum of $238,132,699. There are no enemies that can by any possibility approach us by land, and yet we seem bent on building up a large standing army; and though we need only stay at home and attend to our own business to be a happy Nation, we are building huge battle ships to rot and rust upon the ocean and threaten the peace of mankind. And the shame of it all is, Mr. Chairman, that these huge sums taxed from the people are not honestly, fairly, and economically expended. Mr. TAWNEY, chairman of the Appropriations Committee and the leader of the Republican party in the House of Representatives, makes this startling though true statement with reference to the appropriations for army and navy:

> If political influence could be eliminated from consideration, the problem of reducing the expenses of the army and navy would be greatly simplified. The cloven hoof of politics is in evidence in the establishment and maintenance of navy-yards and army posts for the political benefit of Senators and Representatives without regard to the needs of the public service.

This Government is spending an average of $3,000,000 a day. It is estimated that we have 15,000,000 adult males in the United States capable of performing labor. Averaging the value of their labor at $1 per day, it would require all the adult males working a fifth of the time, or a fifth of the adult males working all the time, in order to support the million and a half pensioners and employees of the Government and otherwise pay the governmental expenses.

The annual appropriations are almost equal to the actual money stock of the United States. Think of it! The people are required by law to pay in taxes to the Federal Government every twelve months nearly every dollar in actual money there is in the United States.

Mr. Chairman, in the Southern States a very large part of the population is engaged in raising cotton. It is our money crop; and if the cotton produced in the United States were sold and the money turned into the Federal Treasury, it would pay but little more than one-half of the expenses of this extravagant Government for a single year.

The corn crop of the United States is the most valuable crop in the world, but the annual corn crop will not bring enough money to operate this Government for twelve months. Where do all these millions go? I can not answer. I never have seen a man who could answer. What kind of work are all these government employees engaged in doing? No man seems able to tell.

The House of Representatives is composed of less than 400 Congressmen, yet we have 423 officers and employees. These 423 mysterious persons—and I use the word "mysterious" advisedly—receive large salaries. Of these employees 279 receive salaries of $1,000 and upward. Twenty-six of them get $3,000 and upward, 20 get $4,000 and upward, 13 get $5,000 and upward, and 2 of them receive $6,500 each. I am sure I have never seen as many as 10 per cent of the entire number around the Capitol or Office Building. No man has ever been found who can tell what they do. Of course, there are some of them who work. Nearly all the doors around the Capitol have a doorkeeper, and many of them have two doorkeepers. Of one thing I am convinced, and that is that these 423 men are not all engaged in the kind of work which the records of the Government show them to be engaged in.

The records show that one Thomas E. Barton is employed at the Capitol as a "cloakroom man." I happen to know Barton. He is a colored barber in the House Office Building. As far as I know, he is a good colored man, and I do not blame him for wanting to draw a salary from the Government, but I have never been able to find any law that authorized or justified Members of Congress to charge their barber bills up to the people. Among the 423 officers and employees I find one man employed on a salary of $1,400 a year as "assistant in the bathroom." There are three others on the pay roll as laborers in the bathroom. If Members of Congress can charge their baths and shaves to the people and make the people pay the man who doctors the corns on their toes, what is to keep them from charging their jewelry and groceries to the long-suffering public?

My curiosity is thoroughly aroused with regard to these officers and employees. Looking through the list I find that 90 of them bear the same names as Members of Congress, and I am curious to know how many of these 423 are related to those who employ them at public expense.

The people of the United States need never expect very much in the way of economy and retrenchment at the hands of a Congress that charges up the bath bills, manicuring, and shaving of the Members to the public. Nor need an overcredulous public take the President's economy talk seriously while he continues to charge a $9,000 bouquet bill and a $35,000 automobile bill up to the people every twelve months.

Mr. Chairman, I only allude to these items as illustrations of the spirit which permeates the official atmosphere at the Nation's capital. The Chief Executive and the Congress are directly responsible to the people, the chosen guardians of the people's rights. If these elected and trusted agents of the people do not exercise prudence and care in the discharge of their duties, what can be expected of the appointed heads of departments and those appointed under them? Of what avail will be the Executive's precept if his example is one of extravagance? With what grace can Congress undertake to cleanse the Augean stables in the departments if we have not swept around our own door? The appointive employees of the Government are responsible only to their chiefs and superiors. Can they be expected to conserve the people's treasure if we who are elected by the people and directly responsible to the people deal with a lax and wasteful hand?

I do not pretend an intimate knowledge of the ramified system of our large appropriations and expenditures. I do not know where all these vast millions go. I have never yet found a man who pretends to that knowledge. The system of auditing the public accounts is complex, and only an expert is able to trace the tortuous course of the money from the pocket of the taxpayer to its ultimate destination. But from that which I do know and am able to comprehend I am thoroughly assured that the sense of official responsibility and accountability rests lightly upon the shoulders of at least some of those whom the people have chosen to administer the affairs of this Government.

At this very hour there are many millions in our country who feel the pinch of high living expenses. They witness an increase in the price of food and clothing. The struggle for existence is harder. They wonder why. In the midst of this wonder and perplexity Republican statesmen gravely assure the people that the tariff has nothing to do with the increased cost of living. Oh, tempora! oh, mores! Do the confiding public believe that the Government can take toll from all they buy to eat and wear without increasing the difficulties of making a living? If 15,000,000 men must work one-fifth of their time to support the Government, do they imagine that they will not be compelled to work harder or eat and wear less to make up for the time thus spent? If the people do not pay these millions collected in a tariff tax, then who does pay the bill? Is there some mysterious Monte Cristo who supplies the Government from a fabled cave? No, Mr. Chairman; the people pay it. Not directly, it is true. But they pay it either in a poorer quality or a reduced quantity of the things they eat and wear.

The Republican party is just now proposing a ceremonious and sanctimonious investigation of the increased cost of living. Let them behold the work of their own hands. Let them scan the schedules of the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill, a political crazy quilt of iniquity and inequality. In the lap of this political Delilah the people have been denuded of their strength and their substance has been wasted. Worse than wasted, Mr. Chairman, because under this insidious and hypocritical system of taxation only one dollar in every six taken from the people ever finds its way into the Public Treasury.

THE GROWTH OF MILITARISM.

De Tocqueville, in his Democracy in America, discussing the favorable circumstances under which our republics were experimenting with free government, says:

A thousand circumstances, independent of the will of man, concur to facilitate the maintenance of a democratic republic in the United States. Some of these peculiarities are known, the others may easily be pointed out; but I shall confine myself to the most prominent among them. The Americans have no neighbors, and consequently they have no great wars or financial crises or conquests to dread; they require neither great taxes, nor great armies, nor great generals, and they have nothing to fear from a scourge which is more formidable to republics than all these evils combined, namely, military glory.

This learned student of the history and theory of free government visited this country and wrote his treatise about the year 1840. That was before this Government had fallen into the hands of the Republican party, and long before the Republican party had fallen into the hands of the ambitious Roosevelt and the acquiescent Taft. Now all is changed. Blennerhassett is no longer content with his peaceful island. He longs for royal garters and diadems. The song of the birds and the music of nature no longer charm him; he sighs for the beat of drums and the tramp of soldiery.

Our country is broad and fertile and capable of furnishing homes and opportunity for our natural increase for many generations; indeed, we have so much spare land and so many waiting opportunities that we are willing to admit ignorant foreigners into our country by the millions. And yet in the face of all this our statesmen must carry the American flag to the very door of the Orient, 8,000 miles from our shores, and spread its folds over 10,000,000 ignorant Filipinos, who are no more capable of self-government than the negroes of Haiti or Texas. Thus we leave our own abode of peace and plenty to meddle with the politics and the wars of the Old World. Modern statesmanship is no longer content that we should avoid "entangling alliances," but they deliberately involve this Republic in every foreign affair. Just now we are making an impudent and greedy attempt to Morganize the Manchurian Railway, in Chinese territory. The other day we arbitrated the destiny of a weakly little Central American Republic by the simple rule of might. A few years ago we began to interfere in the affairs of the so-called "Republic of San Domingo," and now we are collecting her revenues in the interest of Wall street financiers.

Mr. Chairman, this Government is busy everywhere creating excuses and necessities for a powerful army and navy. They seem to have forgotten that this is a democratic Republic and that the aim of the founders was liberty and equality. One of the very grievances for the remedy of which our fathers went to war was the fact that the English monarchy quartered soldiers upon us. Yet the Republican party not only insist upon quartering a large standing army upon the taxpayers of this Republic, but they forcibly quarter soldiers upon the weak and unoffending people of other and distant lands.

Mr. Chairman, this Republic has undergone most marvelous changes. If the restless spirit of John Randolph, of Roanoke, could take on flesh and visit the House of Representatives, he would be struck with wonder and amazement. He would find his seat occupied by the gentleman from the Philippine Islands. If Henry Clay were to come in the flesh again, imagine his bewilderment when politely informed that his desk room was now being occupied by the gentleman from Porto Rico. With the growth and expansion of Republican statesmanship we need not be surprised in a few years to witness in this Chamber a colloquy between a gentleman from Manchuria and a gentleman from the Fiji Islands in which some gentleman from an internal dependency will indulge a reasonable request for the appointment of two or more interpreters. Is this citadel of the people's liberties to become a tower of babel and crumble amid the jargon of strange tongues? In this coming assemblage of the alleged Representatives of strange lands with stranger tongues, what court language will be adopted to facilitate an interchange of lamentations between the obsequious servants of a subservient people? These are not idle observations. Nowhere in all history can there be found a government based upon the consent of the governed that was ever able to rule another people without their consent and yet retain the substance of free government.

By looking back into history—

and considering the fate and revolutions of government, you will be able to draw a guess and almost prophesy upon the future; for they certainly will be of the same nature, and can not but be cast in the same mold.

If it be the hope and aspiration of the people to have a government of concentrated strength and imposing splendor; if conquest and military glory is to be our ideal; if we prefer a great government to a good government; if pomp and show and prodigal expenditure is in keeping with our desires, then in selecting our form of government we have made a mistake. Those things do not go with a republic. But if our aim is to attain to a state of equality and justice; if we had rather that all the people were happy than that a few were illustrious; if we reject the theory of special privileges to a few and desire equal rights to all; if our aim is the greatest good to the greatest number, then we have chosen well in selecting a republican form of government, and if we would retain the benefits which flow from such a government we must return to the principles upon which our institutions were founded.

IS THERE NO REMEDY,

Mr. Chairman, for the evils which I have so truthfully described?

A statesman and student, ripe in years and wisdom, recently prophesied on the floor of the United States Senate that our Republic would prove a failure. I have the most profound respect for the patriotism and the wisdom of Senator MONEY, of Mississippi, and quote from a speech recently delivered by him:

We live to-day in the most artificial form of government in the world. The natural form of human government is a pyramid, resting upon its broad base and going up to the apex, the sovereign. That is the strongest body known—the pyramid. But here we are all on the same level of equality and right, and we are to-day struggling with the common proverb, "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty," to maintain the heritage bequeathed to us by our sires. Are we to be successful? I doubt it, because no people on God's earth have ever yet achieved that success for any great length of time.

Our one hundred and twenty-five years is but a span in the life of a great nation. While the Greeks and the Romans were a thousand times more devoted to liberty than we ever will be, we made sacrifices, we thought, and we fought for two or three years, not for liberty, but for representation in Parliament, for the representation that should accompany taxation. We did not dream of liberty. You will find in the documents published by that Congress where, while the war was flagrant, an humble petition was made from the Provincial Congress to George III signing themselves, "Your Majesty's most humble, most obedient, and most respectful servants." In a few indomitable minds alone there burned the sacred love of liberty that would compromise at nothing except absolute national independence, and that fire permeated the mass and grew at last into the Declaration of Independence, written by a young man of Virginia, 33 years old.

As I said, the Greek and Roman loved his country better than we. It was the pride and the glory of a citizen of any of the Greek republics or of Rome to die for his country. "To die for one's country is sweet and decorous," was an old Latin proverb. A man lost position and status because he failed in something he owed the republic.

Yet those people lost their liberties. They were ruled by tyrants, and they did all they could to resist them, but it has seemed to be the inevitable fate of men who want to govern themselves that they can not long succeed.

This learned Senator and devotee of free government holds out but one hope for the perpetuation of our free institutions:

When there is a lack of capacity we must seek the cause, and it is found in the cause which originates in the saying that "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." Eternal vigilance is not the price of slavery. The subject of a king can sleep out his days and wake up a subject, having lost nothing and gained nothing, but the free man can not sleep any more than the sentinel upon his post. If he does he invites the inroads of enemies upon his constitution, as the sentinel who sleeps invites the enemy into his camp.

And so the remedy lies in a vigilant citizenship. Not only must the citizenship be watchful and active, but intelligence must guide its course. As long as we have an intelligent people to whom a patriotic appeal can be addressed, there is hope for the Republic. But how can an effective appeal be made to dumb driven cattle, ignorant and unused to liberty, strangers alike to free government and the laws and language of our country?

"What is the matter with Congress?" inquires a lethargic citizen whose attention is attracted to the decaying liberties of his country at rare intervals. I answer back to him that Congress is just what the people make it. The stream can rise no higher than its source.

If the people are careless and indifferent, the chances are that their indifference and carelessness will be reflected in the Representative they send to this Chamber or the one at the other end of the Capitol.

Just now there is a spasmodic cry against what the public is pleased to denominate "Cannonism." It is said that the Speaker sits astride the House of Representatives like a colossus and makes this body the puppet of his will and caprice. Why, certainly. The Speaker has vast patronage at his command. He appoints the committees, and the committees shape the legislation of the country.

The Speaker has recently resumed the prerogative of appointing the Democratic minority of the committees without consulting the minority leader or the minority caucus. What is the result? The Speaker appoints to the committees from among the ranks of his own party those who are partisans of his own peculiar brand of Republicanism.

Does the Speaker desire to build up a strong minority to stand in his path and point the way to the Democratic hosts of the land? Not Speaker CANNON. Does the Speaker want a strong minority on his committees who will forcibly present and earnestly urge the anti-Cannon side of legislation? Not he.

It is not too much to say that when the Speaker finds a Republican who rebels at the Cannon rule the endeavor is to safely tuck the erring Republican brother away in obscurity. [Applause.]

Nor is it far amiss to say that when the Speaker finds a Democrat who has seen the light and discovered the beauty of "Cannonism," that Democrat, "having been faithful over a few things, is made ruler over many."

If any man doubts the accuracy of these suggestions, he can spend a profitable day examining the course of committee assignments since the Speaker saw Cæsar's ghost and got a glimpse of Phillipi at the beginning of the extra session last year.

This is a question, Mr. Chairman, which concerns the entire American people. No matter which political party is in power, good government demands that there should be a watchful, courageous, and independent minority as a check upon the dominant party; not mere pets of the Speaker, temporizing with the powers that be under the name of the minority, but real combatants, who differ from the Speaker and his party and who are in a position to assert themselves without the fear of being bereft of committee assignments. This branch of Congress is a numerous body. Its membership must of necessity depend upon the committees for leadership. If the Speaker is to give us Cannon Republicans as majority members of the committees and Cannon Democrats as minority members, it will inevitably be a case with the Speaker of "heads I win and tails you lose." This is not alone dangerous to the Democratic party; it is dangerous to all the people of all the parties.

If the country is to depend upon a minority in Congress to hold the majority in check, and the body of that minority is to depend upon its minority representation on the various committees for leadership, and those minority committeemen must in turn depend upon the Speaker for appointment, it is very evident that the people may only expect Cannonism to run riot in this House.

In all this talk about insurgents the people should understand that there are two brands of insurgents in the House of Representatives—the Republican and the Democratic. The sympathy of the former is too great for the people to endure Cannon Republicanism, and the sympathy of the latter is so great for the Speaker that they are willing to throw away a people's victory for the master's smiles and favors. [Applause.]

And why is all this? The reason is not far to seek.

The clamor of the people is for appropriations rather than for the safety of the Republic.

The Representative of the people has learned in the hard school of practical politics that his constituents would rather see him grab for them than gab for them. The Representative has found that upon his return to the bosom of his constituency there are ten demanding to know how much money he got for the district where there is one demanding to know what efforts he made to strengthen and to save the institutions of free government.

The clamor of the people at home tells upon the strongest nerves in this Chamber. And it too often happens that the Representative, instead of facing his constitutents with a manly appeal to their patriotism, chooses the easier and safer course of secretly worshiping at the shrine of Cannonism, while fighting sham battles for the people on the floor of the House. The result is that he goes back home and proudly displays a goodly string of appropriation coon strings, which, when subjected to close analysis, are in reality but a fractional part of cuticle stripped from the backs of the people. And upon a still more careful inspection it falls out that while the Representative was getting away with his pound of the taxpayer's hide his own constituents were flayed alive.

Oh, for a revival of the old-time religion of Democracy.

"Backward, turn backward, O Time in your flight," and give us once again an awakened public opinion which will make appropriation "logrolling" odious in the Congress of this Republic. [Applause.]

I once believed, Mr. Chairman, that corruption among the people's Representatives was the most dangerous of all the influences which might work the destruction of the rights and liberties of the people. Surely corruption is dangerous and bad enough. I hope and believe that the Congress of the United States is free of this vice.

But there is yet another foe of popular government which is deadly in its effect. That foe is cowardice.

It is easier to drift with the current than to swim up the stream.

It is safer to fall in with popular error than to fall out with it and hazard a battle.

Those who clamor at the door of Congress for private advantage are ever awake and alert. They are quick to reward those who help and to punish those who hinder their spoliation of the people.

The Representative who combats the selfish schemes of the vigilant few in the interests of the indifferent many soon finds that when election day rolls around the plunderers, like the soldiers of Blücher, are in line of battle, while the plundered, like Grouchy, come up too late to save the day. [Applause.]

An intelligent people need only will it to be free.

The Representatives of the people may commit sins of commission as well as sins of omission.

He who holds the ladder is as guilty as him who scales the wall.

It is not enough that the people's Representatives should refrain from joining in with those who despoil the people.

Free government can not be maintained by negative patriotism. The friend of the people must do more than silently wish them well. He must unmask those who seek to despoil the public. He must be willing to expose his precious political hide when the public enemy approaches.

He must be brave enough to tell his constituents that he can only rob for them by allowing others to rob from them. He must understand and be willing to accept the result of the cruel old Shakespearean truth that "some men rise by vice and some by virtue fall."

If "right is ever on the scaffold, and wrong is ever on the throne," let the Representative of the people be fully assured that the thrones of wrong are the crumbling sepulchers of tyrants and the scaffolds of right are the enduring monuments of martyrs. [Applause.]

After all, Mr. Chairman, the hope of the Republic rests with the people. Turn it as you will, twist it as you may, the people must pay the price, which is vigilance, if they would purchase or preserve the boon of liberty.

Only a lethargic citizenship would tolerate a Congress that annexed to this Republic more than 300,000 illiterate immigrants from the south and east of Europe in a single year; a Congress which impudently pretends to be the friend of labor, and, which, while compelling men to sell their labor in competition with all the world, forbids the laborer to spend the fruits of his toil outside the trust barricade of a protective tariff; a Congress which hypocritically pretends to be the friend of self-government and yet which beckons into the confines of this Republic those who are known of all men to be utterly incapable of self-government.

Only a lethargic citizenship would endure a Congress which wasted the people's substance in reckless extravagance and which cajoles the sleeping suffragans with the trickster's jugglery that taxing the people's food and clothing will increase the people's prosperity.

The system of "pork-barrel" appropriation and "you tickle me and I will tickle you" partition of wealth taxed from the people can only exist among a people who are dozing away their rights.

Cannonism is a noxious weed which could only grow and thrive in a soil where the husbandman has neglected tillage for a "little more sleep and a little more slumber." [Applause.]

As long as the people play the innocent rôle of Rip Van Winkle they may expect to be constantly rubbing their eyes and lamenting at the growing number of "little Jack Horners" in Congress.

The farmer who dozes away the seedtime is certain to be awakening to a harvest of weeds and briers.

The enemies of right and righteousness slept at the tomb of the Saviour, but they maintain sleepless vigil at the Capitol of the Nation.

I do not pretend a loftier patriotism than that which actuates other faithful public men. I hope I shall never feel the impulse to draw around me the robes of self-righteousness; but this I do feel, and I do declare that I had rather be a worthy citizen of this Republic in private life than a cowardly and unworthy occupant of a seat in this august Chamber. I had rather be a private soldier in the holy war for free government than sit in splendor and indifference at the bedside of my expiring country.

I do not possess those rare gifts of wisdom and eloquence with which some men are capable of endowing their country, but such ability as I do possess, and such as I may acquire by perseverance, study, and contact with learned men, I shall consecrate to the holy and righteous cause of free government.

This is my country; this Capitol is the citadel of my liberties; out yonder in Statuary Hall I have looked with affectionate admiration into the marble faces of the Nation's patriotic dead, and while I live and occupy a seat in this Chamber no man's derision, and no man's power shall make me ashamed or afraid to combat the wrong, to defend the right. [Applause.]

I hope those whom I have the honor to represent will never prefer the fleshpots of Egypt to a land without bondage; I trust they will never bid me bow and tremble at the throne of Pharoah; but if evil counsel should persuade them to such a course, I shall seek out some Moses of righteous wisdom and follow his lead through the fruitless deserts in search of that most priceless of all earthly gifts, a free and independent government, without which there can be no promised land on this earth among the children of men.

Let us hope that the giant of public opinion will awaken from his slumbers in time to throw off the narcotic which deadens the sense of danger. Let us watch by day and pray by night that this Government shall, under the providence of God, remain a land of freedom to brighten the hopes and encourage the aspirations of mankind. [Applause.]

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, how much time has been consumed?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has consumed fifty-five minutes and the gentleman from South Dakota seventy-eight minutes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks, and insert in the RECORD some statements which were suggested.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD, and to accompany them by some statements. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. OLMSTED, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 19028, the Indian appropriation bill, and had directed him to report that it had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 93. Joint resolution authorizing the President of the United States to convey thanks to the Government of Italy for certain gifts.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 5574. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 4477. An act providing for the homestead entry of certain lands in the State of Washington, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. The following bills are returned by the Committee on Claims with the recommendation that they be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. The Clerk will report the titles.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 20574, H. R. 20825, H. R. 20682, bills to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations," approved March 3, 1891.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the change of reference will be made.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, whether bills of this kind provide for the payment of money out of the Treasury or out of the Indian fund?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the bills which have now been re-referred have reference to changing the law that provides that judgments that may be obtained may be paid out of the Indian fund.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 19 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination of Iowa River, Iowa (H. Doc. No. 698)—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination of Cahaba River, Alabama (H. Doc. No. 697)—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination of Cedar River, Iowa (H. Doc. No. 696)—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination of Lynch River and Clark Creek, South Carolina (H. Doc. No. 695)—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination of Columbia River, Oregon (H. Doc. No. 694)—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

6. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Caney Fork, Tennessee (H. Doc. No. 693)—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

7. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Little Harbor, Woods Hole, Mass. (H. Doc. No. 692)—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. LINDSAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred sundry bills of the Senate, reported in lieu thereof a bill (S. 6072) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, accompanied by a report (No. 486), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. PRINCE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11524) for the relief of James T. Caswell, postmaster at Narragansett Pier, R. I., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 487), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT, from the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands, to which was referred House bill 2522, reported in lieu thereof a bill (H. R. 21225) for the relief of certain persons having supplied labor and materials for the prosecution of the work of making the main canal of the Belle Fourche irrigation project, accompanied by a report (No. 488), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. MURPHY: A bill (H. R. 21219) to provide for sittings of the United States circuit and district courts of the eastern division of the eastern judicial district of Missouri at the city of Rolla, in said district—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 18, 1910.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

WATER RIGHTS IN IDAHO.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 27th ultimo, certain information relative to water rights, power sites, etc., required on the public lands of the State of Idaho (S. Doc. No. 370), which, on motion of Mr. HEYBURN, was, with the accompanying paper and illustrations, referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed.

CLAIM OF MARY JANE RUCKER.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting the findings of fact filed by the court in the cause of Mary Jane Rucker, sole heir of J. W. Rucker, deceased, v. United States (S. Doc. No. 372), which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by W. J. Browning, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills and joint resolution:

H. R. 2828. An act for the relief of William Martinson;

H. R. 3037. An act to correct the lineal and relative rank of certain officers of the United States Army, and to prevent the recurrence of like cases by amending the act approved October 1, 1890, entitled "An act to provide for the examination of certain officers of the army, and to regulate promotion therein;"

H. R. 17531. An act to amend an act authorizing the Washington, Spa Springs and Gretta Railroad Company of Maryland to enter the District of Columbia, with amendments, approved February 18, 1907;

H. R. 17752. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 17755. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 18364. An act to amend section 8 of an act to provide for the thirteenth and subsequent decennial censuses, approved July 2, 1909; and

H. J. Res. 101. Joint resolution authorizing an extension of the tracks of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad on the military reservation at Fort Leavenworth, Kans.

The message also announced that the House insists upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (S. 5237) granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, Mr. DRAPER, and Mr. RICHARDSON managers at the conference on the part of the House.
